

The Index.

— A —

WEEKLY PAPER,

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

---

---

VOLUME X.

---

---

BOSTON, MASS.:

INDEX ASSOCIATION, 231 WASHINGTON STREET.

1879.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ESSAYS AND OTHER LEADING ARTICLES.

The Real God, O. B. Frothingham.....	2
The State of the Nation, John W. Chadwick.....	14
Socialism in Germany and the United States, Prof. Henry Fawcett.....	29
The New Criticism of the Old Testament, John W. Chadwick.....	38
Suffrage a Birthright, Hon. George W. Julian.....	50
Suffrage a Birthright (concluded).....	62
Liberty versus License; or, True and False Reformers and Reformers, Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer.....	74
Biology and Woman's Rights, Elizabeth Oakes Smith.....	86
Lucifer's Lawsuit against Jesus. Translated from the French, Miss Arathusa Hall.....	98
Lucifer's Lawsuit against Jesus (concluded).....	110
The Mission of Free Religion in the Realm of Morals, Charles E. Perkins.....	122
Shylock, the Jew, Rev. Dr. E. Kohler.....	134
"Creation" and "Creator," L. B. Farrar M.D.....	146
Is Liberalism Moral? L. K. Washburn.....	158
In Memory of John Weiss, William J. Potter.....	170
An Address delivered at Faine Hall, Sunday, March 30, 1879, Elmer Wright.....	182
Exclusive Rights in Religion, Frederic A. Hinckley.....	194
What is Truth? Francis E. Abbot.....	206
The Faust Legend, Morris Ellinger.....	218
About the Foundation of Morals, Elmer Wright.....	230
Origin and Growth of Moral and Civil Law, Charles J. Buell.....	242
The Christian Tragedy at Pocasset, L. K. Washburn.....	254
The Failure of Transcendentalism and Individualism, John W. Chadwick.....	266
Garrison's Funeral. An Eloquent Tribute to Garrison's Character, by Wendell Phillips. A Poem by John G. Whittier. Addresses by Rev. Samuel May, Samuel Johnson, Theodore Weld, and Lucy Stone. The singing by a colored quartette.....	278
The Commands of the Lord: Where do we find them? Wm. J. Potter.....	290
Anniversary Lecture before the Society of Ethical Culture, New York, May 11, 1879, Felix Adler, Ph.D.....	302
Free Religious Association. Twelfth Annual Report of the Executive Committee, Wm. J. Potter.....	314
The Unconform Legends of Chaldea, and their Relations to the Early Hebrew Writings, Lewis G. Jones.....	330
William Lloyd Garrison, William J. Potter.....	348
The Priests of the Sun, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut.....	358
The Priests of the Sun (concluded).....	362
The Coöperative Colony Aid Association of New York. Its History.....	374
Will the Coming Man worship God? B. F. Underwood.....	386
Industrial Equity, Frederic A. Hinckley.....	398
Political Liberty, A Hindu Youth.....	410
State Socialism, George Jacob Holyoake.....	422
The Decline in Commercial Morality, G. Nes.....	434
The Resurrection of Jesus, L. B. Farrar, M.D.....	446
The Resurrection of Jesus (concluded).....	458
Our Conceptions of Physical Law, Prof. Francis E. Nipher.....	470
The Principle of Life, Dr. G. J. Allman.....	482
The Principle of Life (concluded).....	494
The Defence of Character, Rev. N. A. Haskell.....	506
Another Impostor unearthed (D. M. Bennett).....	518
"If a Man die, shall he live again?" L. K. Washburn.....	530
Secularism, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut.....	542
The Ministers' Institute and its Lessons, Frederic A. Hinckley.....	554
Comments of the Press on the Exposure.....	566
Recreation as a Part of Morality, George Jacob Holyoake.....	578
Marriage: True Love vs. Free Love, Mrs. Sara A. Underwood.....	590
The Ministers' Institute at Providence, Rev. U. A. Bartol, D.D.....	602
Whipping-Posts, N. McGregor Steele.....	614

EDITORIALS.

Prof. Tyndall on Science and Religion.....	6
Radical and Conservative, B. F. U.....	7
Three Schools of Ethics.....	18
A Letter from Mr. Wasson.....	30
Ethics as the Science of Society.....	31
About "Disingenuousness," Elmer Wright.....	32
Cook the Calumniator.....	42
Judge Harbut's Address, W. J. P.....	43
Tests of Right and Wrong.....	54
Church and State in Switzerland, A. W. Kelsey.....	55
"Of the People, by the People, for the People," Hannah E. Stevenson.....	55
Liberty and License.....	58
A Ballot, O. A. Bartol.....	59
"The Garments of Religiousness," E. W.....	67
Calumny, E. W.....	67
Liberalism and Libertinism.....	78
A Needed Philanthropy, W. J. P.....	79
Mrs. Spencer's Lecture.....	79
Two Views of Free Religion.....	90
The Free Religious Association and its Calumniators.....	90
How shall we be Buried? J. L. S.....	91
Christianity and Crime, B. F. U.....	91
Corporate Conscience.....	102
Notes from the Field, B. F. U.....	108
"The Final Appeal in Morals".....	114
Funeral Ceremonies, W. J. P.....	116
Reformed Liberalism.....	126
Resurrection of the Catechism, E. W.....	137
A Hopeful View, B. F. U.....	137
The Moral Failure of Individualism.....	138
Individualism, E. W.....	139
Letter from Mr. Wright.....	140
Individualism as Demoralization.....	180
A Case in Point.....	180
The Core of Free Religion, W. J. P.....	181
About the "Final Appeal in Morals," E. W.....	181

The Facts and their Meaning.....	182
What did it? Elmer Wright.....	183
The "Burning Question" of the Hour.....	174
Public Schools and Public Morality, E. D. O.....	175
The Individual at the Bar.....	188
"The Consensus of the Competent," W. D. Le S.....	187
The Meaning of that Change, C. D. B. M.....	187
A Retrograde Ideal.....	198
Theology at Harvard, W. J. P.....	198
Social Reform, Albert Warren Kelsey.....	199
The Tendency to Inquisition, E. W.....	199
Is the "Consensus" a Failure?.....	210
The "Consensus of the Competent" a Practical Failure, W. H. S.....	211
Marriage, E. W.....	211
"The Doom of Individualism".....	222
Russian Socialism, A. W. K.....	223
The Supremacy of Moral Law.....	234
Pious Crookedness, D. E. O.....	234
Notes from the Field, B. F. U.....	235
What Repealers demand, E. W.....	236
The Sovereignty of Reason.....	246
Theology at Harvard Again, W. J. P.....	247
The Law giving Women the Right to Vote in the Election of School Officers, E. D. O.....	247
Seven Ethical Laws of Rationalism.....	256
The Future of Rationalism.....	258
Life, B. F. U.....	259
Parable of Abraham, C. D. B. M.....	259
"Through Rome On".....	270
Marriage, B. F. U.....	271
Freeman's Case, Elmer Wright.....	271
Private Judgment and Universal Reason.....	282
The Sacrifice of Edith Freeman, W. D. Le S.....	283
The F. R. A. Meeting of 1879, W. J. P.....	283
The Trinity of Free Religion.....	294
"Anniversary Week," E. D. O.....	294
A Demurrer, Elmer Wright.....	295
Society of Ethical Culture, D. E. O.....	296
Greeting, David H. Clark.....	306
The Era of Construction.....	306
Notes from the Field, B. F. U.....	307
Preliminary Considerations.....	318
Sabbath-breaking.....	318
Unity of Spirit.....	330
American Library Association.....	330
The Garrison Memorial, W. J. P.....	330
Rational Rationalism.....	342
Mr. Wright's Exceptions.....	343
Progressive Friends, C. D. B. M.....	343
Harvard and Bussey College, E. D. O.....	344
"Here Individualism," E. W.....	344
Reason and Morality.....	354
Heresy.....	355
A Query, E. D. O.....	355
Is the League a Church? E. W.....	355
A Popular Fallacy, B. F. U.....	355
Requisitions.....	366
Method or Results? W. J. P.....	366
A Word for Liberty, E. W.....	367
The Aid of the Types.....	378
Sunday-school Lessons.....	378
The Work of Rationalism.....	390
Oaths and the Truth, W. J. P.....	391
Local Rationalistic Societies.....	402
The Concord School of Philosophy, E. D. O.....	403
The National Liberal League, Elmer Wright.....	403
Religion and Crime.....	414
Who will respond? W. J. P.....	415
Materialism and Crime, B. F. U.....	415
Intropection.....	426
Practical Individualism vs. Sentimental Socialism, Albert Warren Kelsey.....	427
The Woman Movement.....	436
Is it Retreat or Advance? W. J. P.....	439
Hereditary Genius, E. O. S.....	439
Reply to a Critic, B. F. U.....	439
Harvard Divinity School Controversy.....	450
Spiritualism as a Scientific Question? W. H. S.....	451
A Belle of Barbary, B. F. U.....	451
The Close of the Summer, E. D. O.....	452
A Peep at Fayal.....	462
The Cincinnati Meeting.....	474
A Question for Mr. Bradlaugh, Francis E. Abbot.....	476
A Plea for Religious Honesty.....	488
Wendell Phillips, B. F. U.....	487
Social Dynamics, Albert Warren Kelsey.....	487
The Next Step in Advance.....	498
Fifteen Years too Late.....	499
The Scientific Study of Religion.....	510
A Partial Deity, W. D. Le S.....	510
Social Inequality, A. W. K.....	511
An Open Letter to Mr. Wright.....	522
An Open Letter to Mr. Abbot, Elmer Wright.....	524
Mr. Wright's Letter.....	534
Mr. Parkman's Article on Woman Suffrage, E. D. O.....	535
"A Moral Interregnum," W. J. P.....	535
Mr. Bradlaugh's Reply.....	546
The Great Question discussed by the Liberal Leagues, E. D. O.....	547
A Time to Speak, C. D. B. M.....	547
Mr. Underwood on the Genuineness of the Bennett Letters.....	548
Division must come.....	558
Wandering Acknowledgments, George Jacob Holyoake.....	559
"Antichrist" at Providence.....	570
G. B. Stebbins on the Genuineness of the Bennett Letters.....	571
Mr. George Jacob Holyoake's Prayer.....	582

A Letter from Dr. Bartol.....	583
A Letter from Mr. Savage.....	583
The Appeal of the Free Religious Association.....	583
An Abandoned Draft, F. E. Abbot.....	593
Death of Mrs. Potter.....	594
A Letter from Rev. Mr. Thayer.....	594
Stickney's "True Republic".....	594
The Schism in the Liberal Banks, W. D. Le S.....	596
Unitarian Christian Fellowship.....	596
Catholics on the School Committee, E. D. O.....	597
Notes from the Field, B. F. U.....	597
The Catholic Conscience and the Natural Conscience.....	618
George Jacob Holyoake.....	619

COMMUNICATIONS.

A Woman's Verdict, Cora Wilbur, B. F. U.....	9
Free Religion Run Mad, Henry Appleton.....	9
Catholicism and Protestantism, Horace L. Traubel.....	19
Amelioration of Orthodoxy, A. E.....	19
The Science of Universology, Stephen Pearl Andrews.....	20
Social Science, F. S. O.....	21
Aid from Australia, B. R.....	21
"Hear Both Sides," C. A.....	21
Liberal Christians versus Bigoted Liberals, Charles E. Perkins.....	23
Silver and Gold, F. S. O.....	23
Another Voice, Leola G. Jones.....	33
The "Second Plank," Iowa.....	44
Letter from Mrs. Neymann.....	45
The First Liberal League of Boston, J. P. T.....	45
Is the National Liberal League committed to "Repeal"? S. Brewer.....	56
A Word from the West, T. H. Everts.....	57
A Word for Mr. Underwood, H. Clay Neville.....	57
Socialism, Carl H. Horch.....	57
Vote of the Jacksonville Liberal League, John C. Grierson, Sec'y.....	57
Æsthetic Sentiments of Primitive Man, Wiley Britton.....	63
Prof. Tyndall's Position, O. O.....	68
"The Bible of To-day," D. O.....	69
De Tocqueville on Church and State, Charles J. Buell.....	69
A College for Liberal Education in America, Peter M. Herold.....	69
Government and Rights, F. S. O.....	69
A Card, E. H. Heywood.....	69
Joseph Cook's Career, C. K. W.....	80
The Double or the Single Standard, E. D. Stark.....	81
The Drayman, Cyrus Lee.....	81
The Albany Liberal Association, C. M. O.....	81
A Fearful Warning, L. C. Briggs.....	81
The Science of Universology, Stephen Pearl Andrews.....	87
Social Reform, J. F. Cooper.....	88
The Impassable Gulf between the two Liberal Leagues, H. Clay Neville.....	93
Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester, Hume H. Cole, Sec'y.....	93
The Obligation of Veracity, Charles Ellershaw.....	93
First Liberal League of Boston, W. H. H.....	93
Colonel Ingersoll on Moses, Charles M. Bartol.....	104
The Chelsea Liberal League, Benj. H. Crandon, Sec'y.....	105
A Case of "Libertinism," J. A. J. Wilcox.....	105
Cookians, E. L. Crane.....	105
"The Double or the Single Standard," Charles J. Buell.....	105
"Liberalism and Libertinism," Charles E. Perkins.....	105
Liberalism that is not Liberalism, Horace L. Traubel.....	116
The Subjective in Ethics, W. S. K.....	117
"A Stitch in Time," C. E. W.....	117
The Moral Responsibility of Liberalism, H. Clay Neville.....	117
Radical and Liberal Conservatism, Charles Ellershaw.....	123
Card from the Ithaca League, W. R. Lasenby, Sec'y.....	128
Rev. Chas. Beecher and Spiritualism, Wm. Emmette Coleman.....	129
Free Thought in Sweden, Marie A. Brown.....	140
"Jesus and the Wine Cup," Ingersoll Lockwood.....	141
First Liberal League of Boston, J. P. T.....	141
A Question for Materialists, H. Clay Neville.....	141
Lecturers wanted in Kansas, S. M. Whistler.....	141
The Need of "Social Reform," A Kansas Woman.....	152
A Question to Mr. Wright, T.....	153
Thoughts of an Invalid, P. D.....	153
Hot-House Reformers, H. Clay Neville.....	153
The Votes of Woman in Reform, Mrs. Emma Burton.....	153
Æsthetic Differences Subjective, Wiley Britton.....	159
Death, J. G. Whyte.....	160
"A Question for Materialists," C. J. Buell.....	164
"The Impeachment of Christianity," L. D. Tunner.....	164
Labor is King, F. S. O.....	165
Starvation, L. K. Washburn.....	165
Purcell, B. W. Ball.....	165
Obedience to Nature, W. W. Tucker.....	165
The "Prince of Peace" and Seven-shooters, Ingersoll Lockwood.....	173
The Miraculous, E. P. Powell.....	173
Concessions of Orthodoxy, Horace L. Traubel.....	176
Capital Punishment, Elizabeth Oakes Smith.....	177
The Reason of the Split at Syracuse, Observer.....	177
Thoughts and Questions, E. L. Crane.....	177
"First Pure," R. Hamall.....	189
"Free Love," H. Clay Neville.....	189
Life and Conscience, F. H.....	189
Mrs. Hutton, Robert Cooper.....	189
Should we be Individualists? F. M. H.....	189
A Rational View of the Bible, F. M. H.....	189
A Statement by S. P. Putnam, Samuel P. Putnam.....	201
The Approach of Science, Daniel Cony.....	201
First Liberal League of Boston, J. P. T.....	201
"Stick," D. S. Grandin, Laura E. Farrar.....	201
"Law-Abiding," E. L. Crane.....	201
The Science of Universology, Stephen Pearl Andrews.....	207
Liberty of the Press, Leander Weierhell.....	213
A "Friend's" View of the Competent, David Newport.....	213
A New Enterprise, Caroline E. Streeter.....	213

THE INDEX.

Obituary, J. H. Bolens .....	213	Bigotry, David B. Hale .....	585	Absorbing Reforms.....	255
Woman and Christianity, Amelia W. Bates .....	224	Mr. Parton resigns, James Parton .....	585	Blotting Bondholders.....	276
Legalizing the Social Evil, Elizabeth Oakes Smith .....	225	The Division, Geo. M. Wood .....	585	To the Capitalists, Felix Adler .....	276
Life Tasks, G. Apkins .....	225	Notes from Germany, W. P. W. .....	587	Socialism.....	276
Infinite Intelligence, S. B. B. .....	237	Have not the Fears of "Timorous" Liberals been verified?	587	Reformatory Schools.....	276
"Social Reform," A. Submitter .....	237	H. Clay Neville .....	587	Nervous Debility.....	277
Louisiana Notes, Emerson Bentley .....	237	J. S. Millon Mormonism, Walter C. Wright .....	587	Christianity and Judaism.....	277
Aesthetic Differences Subjective, Wiley Britton .....	243	The Bible of Humanity, Theodore Stanton .....	589	Scenes in the Daily Life of a St. Petersburg.....	277
The Bloody Sweat of Jesus, Charles H. Goddard .....	244	Our Hierarchy, B. W. B. .....	589	The Corbin Crusade.....	277
The Oracle, T. W. Curtis .....	244	"Character and Capacity," Elisur Wright .....	589	The Future of the Indians.....	277
The First Liberal League of Boston, M. A. H. .....	249	A Letter from Mr. Hargrave, W. J. R. Hargrave .....	589	Garrison's Influence.....	277
The "Consensus" Again, S. S. Hunting .....	249	Letter from Mr. Leonard, William A. Leonard .....	589	The Bible in School.....	277
Individualism and the Consensus, F. S. C. .....	249	Open Letter to Mr. A. Bronson Alcott, Elizabeth Oakes Smith .....	589	Murder of Superstitious Beliefs.....	277
"Voice Building," J. P. Titcomb .....	249	Charles Watts to Charles Bradlaugh, Charles Watts .....	589	The Free Church of Scotland and Professor Smith.....	277
The Science of Universology, Stephen Pearl Andrews .....	255	Nature's Creed, Daniel Cony .....	589	Mr. Emerson on Memory.....	277
Molecular Potencies, R. H. .....	261	John Stuart Mill, Walter C. Wright .....	589	Some Testimony as to Jews.....	277
The Bat and the Cat, L. F. Gardner .....	261			What Col. Ingersoll says.....	277
Fanaticism, Elizabeth Oakes Smith .....	261			The Pious Indians.....	277
The Evil Real, George Nathan Hill .....	261			A Large Terrestrial Globe.....	277
"Emerson's Sunday".....	272			Roman Catholicism in Russia.....	277
Morality a Will-o'-the-wisp, S. J. Matthews .....	273			Progress.....	277
The Christian Faith, H. Clay Neville .....	273			The American Association for the Advancement of Science.....	277
Rationalistic Affirmations, Daniel Cony .....	284			The French Republic and the Jesuits.....	277
Analysis of Goethe's "Elective Affinities," Mrs. C. K. Sherman .....	284			Sunday Law in Norwich, Conn.....	277
Sunday-schools, Anna Gardner .....	285			The Indians.....	277
Why the Modifiers are Right, George Nathan Hill .....	285			The Influence of the Environment.....	277
The Science of Universology, Stephen Pearl Andrews .....	291			School Suffrage for Women.....	277
Thoughts on Marriage, Amelia W. Bates .....	296			A Talk with Benan.....	277
Criteria of Certitude, Charles Ellsworth .....	297			Advantages of a Mechanical Education.....	277
A Bomb in the Camp, Bacon Myrick .....	297			Familiar Poems.....	277
Sympathy across the Border, George Martin .....	297			Russia.....	277
Goodness, George Nathan Hill .....	297			Professor F. W. Newman on the Religious Mischief of Credulity.....	277
Explanatory, M. J. Seacoe .....	307			Thoreau's Thoughts.....	277
The Sovereignty of Reason, F. S. C. .....	307			A German Confraternity.....	277
Is Mind Matter? E. L. Crane .....	306			A New Gospel.....	277
Soul and Life, David Newport .....	306			A Million of People who have no Church, and want None.....	277
Aesthetic Conceptions correlated with the Environment, Wiley Britton .....	308			The Trouble with Mormonism.....	277
Should we be compelled to poison our Children? E. J. L. .....	310			Milwaukee Liberal League.....	277
Infinite Intelligence, E. B. B. .....	319			The Worcester Suffrage Meeting.....	277
My Creed, E. L. Crane .....	320			Secularism Past and Present, Charles Watts .....	277
The Church and Education in France.....	322			Books of Clay.....	277
The "Consensus of the Competent," S. J. Matthews .....	322			Association of Ethical Societies, T. W. Curtis .....	277
Over-Population, B. W. Ball .....	315			Change of Social Platform proposed by John H. Noyes accepted by the Oneida Community.....	277
Compulsory Vaccination, J. W. M. D. .....	315			Miss Alcott before the Registrar.....	277
The Question still Open, George Nathan Hill .....	315			The Kindergarten Society.....	277
What is Insanity? Causality .....	315			Society to encourage Studies at Home.....	277
The Aromatic Alphabet, F. B. P. .....	315			Freeville Liberal Lyceum.....	277
Three Social Forces, W. G. B. Smart .....	315			The Crucifixion in Northern Mythology.....	277
In Response, Charles Frederic Adams .....	317			Four Lo.....	277
F. B. B. of Providence Plots.....	317			Professor Hargrave's Talk to the School-boys.....	277
Past Thoughts, S. H. M. .....	318			The People's Private Garden.....	277
The Genesis of Ethics—Colloquially Canvassed, S. J. Matthews .....	318			Franklin's View of Sunday.....	277
Is the Tramp a Necessity? E. L. Crane .....	318			The Actual Blue Laws of Connecticut.....	277
Confounding Names, B. F. Fuller .....	319			A Misunderstanding.....	277
Prophylactic Value of Vaccination, E. J. L. .....	319			Leo XIII. presiding at a Philosophical Disputation.....	277
The "Post" and the Printer: An Anti-Strike, F. B. P. .....	319			A Circular, Charles DeB. Mills .....	277
Historicism: A Method, F. B. P. .....	319			The Evolution of Industry.....	277
Another Creed, George Nathan Hill .....	319			Not Up to their Work.....	277
Legacies, K. .....	319			Free-Lovism in Convention.....	277
The Genesis of Ethics—Colloquially Canvassed, S. J. Matthews .....	319			A Gospel of Dirt.....	277
The Brooklyn Philosophical Club, Louis G. Jones .....	319			Brief Comments of the Secular Press.....	277
Historicism, F. B. P. .....	319			The Two National Liberal Leagues.....	277
Mr. Underwood's Conclusions, David Newport .....	319			Limits of Toleration, George Jacob Holyoake .....	277
Christ's Resurrection, Marxey .....	319			George J. Holyoake's Address.....	277
The Danger of Jesuitism, Eden T. Clark .....	319			A Sun Dance among the Sioux.....	277
Liberal Bigotry, H. Clay Neville .....	319			Murder as a Means of Grace.....	277
Historicism, F. B. P. .....	319			The Grant Reception.....	277
Persecution of the Jews, Ingersoll Lockwood .....	319			The British Secular Union.....	277
Not yet Satisfied, E. L. Crane .....	319			The Concord School of Philosophy.....	277
Long's Virgil, J. A. .....	319			A Radical Unitarian on the Cincinnati Convention.....	277
The Genesis of Ethics—Colloquially Canvassed, S. J. Matthews .....	319			The Kremlin, J. L. Stoddard .....	277
The General Wealth, Charles Frederic Adams .....	319			Arming the Enemy.....	277
The Kernel of Orthodoxy, C. K. W. .....	319			A Strange Prophecy.....	277
Historicism, F. B. P. .....	319			Spiritualism not Free-Love, William Fishbough .....	277
Revival Frenzy.....	319			An English Visitor.....	277
Mr. Holyoake at Florence, Mans. S. H. .....	319			Pauper Morality.....	277
Mutual Assurance against Poverty, Charles Frederic Adams .....	319			The "Worker's" Plan.....	277
Perpetual Being, A. Osborne .....	319			Daniel Webster and his Great Speeches, Henry N. Hudson .....	277
Moral Defects of Materialism, H. Clay Neville .....	319			The Breakfast to Mr. Holyoake.....	277
Ancient Mystery-Plays, Lydia Maria Child .....	319			The Institute and its Exegetes, C. A. Bartol .....	277
The Concession, Horace L. Traubel .....	319			The Abbots.....	277
A Protest, A. A. Bell, M.D. .....	319			Boys, Latin and Other Things.....	277
Plain Talk, Ono .....	319			A Word with "The Index".....	277
Liberalism and Christian Sunday-schools, D. .....	319			Mark Twain on "Babies".....	277
Mr. Holyoake on "Cooperation," J. P. Titcomb .....	319			Reformatory.....	277
Questions to Candidates, Elisur Wright .....	319			Industrial Art, New York .....	277
Constructive Liberalism, H. Clay Neville .....	319			The Annex to Harvard University, Horace E. Scudder .....	277
Historicism, F. B. P. .....	319			Huxley on Individuality.....	277
"Search the Scriptures," C. K. W. .....	319			The Light of Asia, W. A. Leonard .....	277
"The Cincinnati Meeting," Elisur Wright .....	319
How does the World move? F. S. C. .....	319
Materialism and Morality, J. G. Whyte .....	319
Aesthetic Conceptions correlated with the Environment, Wiley Britton .....	319
Perpetual Being, A. Osborne .....	319
Mutual Assurance against Poverty, Charles Frederic Adams .....	319
"More Light," George Nathan Hill .....	319
Past Life, Elisur Wright .....	319
Our Standard-Bearers, Sara A. Underwood .....	319
A Letter from Judge Holmes, Nathaniel Holmes .....	319
Rev. Mr. Douthett's Reply, J. L. Douthett .....	319
"The Light of Asia," B. W. Ball .....	319
Help for the Sunday-Sabbath, C. K. W. .....	319
"Getting to Heaven," J. A. .....	319
Logic vs. Theology, J. S. H. .....	319
The Other Side, Elisur Wright .....	319
The Alleged "Obscurity" of the Bible, Sara A. Underwood .....	319
Mr. Seaver resigns, H. S. .....	319
Cardinal Newman, J. G. Whyte .....	319
Why did Bennett cry Persecution? The Exposer .....	319
"Prejudicing the Soil," H. Nye, M.D. .....	319
Religion, G. W. Keith, M.D. .....	319
Mr. Wright resigns.....	319
A Timely Action.....	319
Mutual Assurance against Poverty, Charles Frederic Adams .....	319
Shielding the Guilty, Horace L. Traubel .....	319
More Light wanted, E. L. Crane .....	319
The Free Religious Association Reports to Executive Committee, Chas. DeB. Mills, Seth Hunt, David B. Clark, Sub-Committee, F. E. Abbot, Wm. J. Potter, F. A. Hinchley .....	319
Mr. Wright Publicly sustains Rawson, Elisur Wright .....	319
Neglected Branches in the Public Schools, D. S. Grandin .....	319
Free Religion at Providence.....	3
The Decline in Godliness.....	5
Blaine's Speech.....	5
The Methodists and the Bible.....	5
Arraigning Protestantism.....	9
Oaths and Perjury.....	9
Dean Stanley on America's Future.....	16
Mormon and Gentile.....	17
Why Michael Angelo put Horns on his Moses.....	17
To the Electors of the Borough of Northampton, Charles Bradlaugh .....	23
The Concord Lyceum.....	23
A Lunch for a Penny.....	28
Machinery.....	28
Free Religion and the Postal Laws, Rev. Joseph Cook .....	40
The Anchor of Columbus.....	41
Heathenism for Children.....	41
Woman Suffrage in Wyoming.....	51
The Queen's Daughter.....	52
Mormon Polygamy.....	52
Thomas Scott, Annie Besant .....	53
A Protestant Confessional.....	53
A Plea for Fair Play, Oliver Johnson .....	54
Mr. Joseph Cook.....	55
Hans Andersen's Mother.....	55
Education in the South.....	76
Death of Theodore Brown.....	76
Switzerland.....	77
A Self-supporting Church.....	77
Church Debt-lifting.....	77
Huxley as a Handicraftsman.....	81
Creed and Conduct.....	81
The Story of Mrs. Packard.....	100
Train the Boys for Business.....	101
Early Thoughts of Professor Tyndall.....	113
Mr. Underwood's Arrest.....	124
Convict Labor.....	124
Priests of the Sun and Priests of Science.....	125
Can it be abated?.....	125
Theology in Court.....	125
John Weiss.....	136
The Plague in Russia.....	136
The "Fairy Tale" of Genesis, A. R. Grotz .....	148
Captain Boyton speaks his Mind.....	149
Promised Revival of Sodom and Gomorrah.....	161
John Weiss, Thomas Wentworth Higginson .....	171
John Weiss, John W. Chadwick .....	171
A Harvard University for Women.....	173
A Teachers' School of Science.....	173
Religious Toleration under the Constitution.....	183
The Mormons and the Law.....	184
Church and State among the Indians.....	185
Is Science Benevolent?.....	185
A Prayer of Voltaire.....	189
Secularism and its Allies, Thalassiopeleto .....	196
Annual Meeting of the Florence Free Congregational Society.....	196
The Pope and the Miracles, En Reclus .....	208
Franklin's Parable.....	219
Anthony Comstock's Work.....	219
New Methods of Conversion.....	221
The Ideas of the French Revolution.....	223
The Decline of Individualism.....	221
A Letter from Rev. Dr. Elliot.....	231
A Modern Sermon.....	232
Mr. Comstock's Annual Report.....	233
Renaud, Joseph P. Thompson, D.D., L.L.D. .....	233
The Sunday Laws in Albany.....	236
Osara in a Panic.....	245
A Parallel Case.....	258
Death of Dr. J. T. Blakeley.....	257
William Lloyd Garrison.....	268
Freeman's Sacrifice.....	269
The Inwardness of Protestantism.....	269
The Brahmo-Bomaj.....	273
Death of Garrison.....	280
Oliver Johnson's Letter.....	280
Garrison's Flight for Life.....	281
The Colored Men's Tribute to Garrison.....	281
In Morals—Private Judgment or Common Consent?.....	292
Not Individualism.....	293
The Funeral of Hon. C. Ingersoll.....	293
Altruism in Morals.....	293
John Hall on Moral Individuality.....	293
The Homes of Working-People in London.....	293
The English Race.....	293
Another Freeman's Horror.....	293
Mrs. Clara Neymann before the Turner Society.....	293
The Science that misleads.....	293
A Pair of Omphalotopes.....	293
A Pagan's Arrangement of Christianity.....	293
Adrift for Humanity.....	315
Lanning's Theological Conclusions, James Harrison .....	316
Were Franklin and Washington Christians?.....	316
The Students at Harvard.....	316
Harvard University.....	316
Cooperation: Why it is needed.....	317
The Modern Disciples.....	317
American Catholicism.....	317
Morris Knab.....	320
A Letter to the Women of Massachusetts.....	320
Mrs. Lucy Stone Blackwell.....	320
California's Constitution.....	320

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JAN. 2, 1879.

WHOLE No. 471.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

4. The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR to this gray-headed world and all it contains!

THE AVERAGE SALARY of the archbishops and bishops of the Church of England is $26,750.

THE ORTHODOX may yet be compelled by law to stop calling Sunday the "Sabbath"! "At the trial of the Bridgeport, Conn., cigar-dealers for violating the Sunday law, the first, E. G. Palmer, escaped because the information was defective in charging that the offence was committed on 'the Sabbath or Lord's Day,' instead of on Sunday as the statute demands. The Sabbath means the seventh day of the week, and Sunday is the first, while the Lord's Day means different days with different sects. The information against the next, a test case against W. L. Brown, was amended, and the case was tried. Judge Beers found Brown guilty on the evidence of violating a law which was not a dead letter. In scandalous violations of the law, he said, he would help the law's enforcement, but in this case he would suspend judgment indefinitely. Thereupon the cases against the rest of the cigar-dealers were nolleed."

SAYS THE Catholic Review: "The boasts of England are many; one of them is that her people are honest. For the most part, we believe they are. But the extent to which cheating by false weights and measures is carried on in England is almost incredible. The laws for the prevention and punishment of the fraud are faithfully carried out; but the profits are greater than the fines, and the practice continues. The poor are, as usual, the greatest sufferers. At Newington, the other day, the fines inflicted on small tradesmen for cheating with false weights and measures amounted to $700; there were sixty-four tradesmen thus punished. But they paid their fines out of full pockets, and went on their way to make up their losses by new frauds. We are glad to believe that this particular form of smug rascality is comparatively unknown in this country. An American citizen may not hesitate to cheat one in a big stock speculation, or to take an unfair advantage in a large transaction; but there are few, we think, who give their minds to the work of growing rich by selling fifteen ounces of tea for a pound, or three gills of molasses for a pint."

THIS WEEK we republish a report of the late convention of the Free Religious Association from the Providence Journal, and also an attack upon Dr. Adler by Henry Appleton, of that city, because the eloquent new President of the Association declared in his address that Free Religion is the "religion of morality." If we did not believe that such an attack is a crown of honor to him who is assailed, we should not give it place in these columns. It is useful, however, to know by their own confession that there are so-called liberals who openly protest against morality as well as against superstition, and who understand by "Free Religion" the utter abrogation of moral law. The Free Religious Association must take its turn; that is evident. The same rock on which the old National Liberal League went to pieces lies ahead of the Free Religious Association, for which we hope a better fate. Mr. Appleton, we are informed, is a "free lover," and (by what title we do not know) claims also to be "one of the most active workers in the up-building of the new religion"—by which he would evidently be understood to mean Free Religion. His article, "Free Religion Run Mad," taken simply as a symptom, we consider to be one of the signs of the times to which no friend of Free Religion should be blind. A crisis is evidently approaching in the history of religious radicalism. Those who believe that "virtue" is something better than an outgrown superstition of the past must prepare themselves to do battle in its behalf. Let them not always be caught napping.

REV. WILLIAM T. CLARKE said some good things about "Culture that Cultivates" at a recent meeting of the Goethe Club, in New York: "Goethe stands for culture. A club bearing his name represents that central thought. Culture is its own certificate, like the polish of the diamond. Carlyle says all heroism is rooted in sincerity. In a vast and intensely busy community like this, it is well that one association stands for the humanities and spiritualities the word 'culture' vaguely represents. Behind the sneers and ridicule that fringe the edges of popular feeling lurks the suspicion that culture has no practical aim or use; that it serves as an excuse for pettiness and indifference to all the serious purposes of life. You shall find plenty of men graduated from the university, trained in a professional school, polished by a European tour, fastidious in taste, refined in manner, stuccoed all over with elegant accomplishments, who cannot give a valuable opinion in political economy or morals, nor manage a caucus, nor break a colt, nor put out a fire. How many men have come out of Columbia, Princeton, and Yale, with the best intellectual outfit America could give them, only to fall into utter nothingness; and contrast these educated puff-balls with such men as Astor and Abraham Lincoln and Horace Greeley, who made the Tribune office a better training-school than half the colleges. But culture implies force to begin with. There must be mind, moral power, individuality, as the basis. Imagine Horace Greeley plus Harvard University. Put Yale behind Lincoln's humor and humanity. The culture that cultivates makes beautiful, useful, and strong."

THE LONDON Times has this instructive paragraph on the uses of pain: "The question is often asked, 'What is the use of pain? It is scarcely conceivable that the infliction has no object.' There are obviously two aspects of this question: In one, science has an immediate interest; with the other, it has a secondary, but not unimportant, concern. The first is essentially physical. What useful service does pain subserve in the animal economy? The answer is thrust upon us by daily observation and experience. There are two sentinels posted, so to say, about the organism, to protect it alike from the assault of enemies without and exacting friends within. The first of these guardians is the sense of fatigue. When this speaks, there is need of rest for repair. If the monitor be unheeded, exhaustion may supervene; or before that point of injury is reached, the second guardian will, perhaps, interpose for the vital protection—namely, pain. The sense of pain, however, is more directly significant of injury to structure, active or threatened, than an excessive strain of function, although in the case of the vital organs pain occurs wherever the pressure is great. Speaking generally, it may be set down as an axiom, that whatever collateral uses pain may subserve, its chief and most obvious service to humanity is as a deterrent and warning sensation to ward off danger. It is worthy of note, though sufficiently familiar to medical observers, that the absence of this subjective symptom in cases of severe injury is too often indicative of an injury beyond repair. The extinction of pain is not the highest, although it may be a generous, impulse. If there were no guardian sensibility of this nature, it would be impossible to live long in the world without self-inflicting the most formidable injuries. That pain, in the second place, has an educational value as regards the mind and temper, no one can doubt. Some forms of pain would seem to be chiefly intended for this purpose; but even in this view, pain has a practical interest, because the higher development of the mind and of which the brain is the formative organ, is a process of physico-mental interest, governed by natural laws, of which science is perfectly competent to take cognizance. The subject as a whole is one with which the physician and physiologist have much concern."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULLIAN	Ipsington, Ind.
HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT	Boston, Mass.
MRS. W. J. POTTER	Massachusetts, Mass.
MRS. E. P. HALL	Boston, Mass.
MRS. JAMES PARTON	Newburyport, Mass.
MRS. F. SCHUBERTHANN-POTT	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELDMAN	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER	Sparks, Wis.
MRS. SAMUEL L. HILL	Flomance, Mass.
MRS. E. W. MEDDAUGH	Detroit, Mich.
MRS. HORACE SEAYER	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston
MRS. ABRAHAM WISE	Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati
MRS. MORITZ ELLINGER	Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York
REV. ROBERT OOLYER	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN	Stamford, N. Y.
HON. E. P. MORTON	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON	New York City
MRS. AMY POST	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. RALPH HOLLEY	Litchfield, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER	Albany, N. Y.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB	141 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT	C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. ORANDON
Executive Committee.
Alabama	J. H. HALL, Selma.
Arkansas	JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
California	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado	DAVID T. REALE, Granada.
Connecticut	GEORGE W. D. GIBBS, Greenfield.
Delaware	T. D. GIBBS, Enterprise.
Florida	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Georgia	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Gainesburg.
Illinois	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Indiana	J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
Iowa	JOHN FARRINGTON, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	S. B. CLARK, Louisville.
Louisiana	JAMES H. BENTLEY, Orleans.
Maine	W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts	E. A. SAWYER, Boston.
Michigan	KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Minnesota	J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri	H. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska	W. M. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York	C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon	SAMUEL GALT, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee	DR. E. H. FRICH, Chattanooga.
Texas	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont	B. L. LAVERGNE, North Bennington.
Virginia	L. SEADLER, Norfolk.
West Virginia	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin	ROBERT C. STENFORD, Milwaukee.
Wyoming	D. F. WILCOX, Fortin.
Dist. of Columbia	W. H. DOUGLASS, Washington.
Idaho	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Montana	NORMAN S. PORTER.
Finance Committee.
D. G. ORANDON, Chairman	Chicago, Mass.
MRS. BERNARD B. OTIS	127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE	324 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

- FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
- SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
- ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
- BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
- PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orris.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

IN THE HOSPITAL of the Infant Jesus, in Paris, there is a little girl of six years, whose leg Dr. Saint-Germain was forced to cut off to save her life. She bore the terrible operation without a single murmur. "Now," said the doctor, smiling, after the operation was over, "I am going to cut your doll's leg off in the same way." The child immediately began to shriek in an agony, and nothing could assuage her grief.

A LITTLE Brookline girl, being reproved the other day by her elder sister for using a slang expression, sharply retorted, "Well, if you went into society more, you would hear slang."

The Real God.

A SERMON PREACHED IN THE MASONIC TEMPLE, NEW YORK CITY, DEC. 8, 1878.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

My subject this morning is "The Real God," or, in other words, the reality of God, and my design is, if possible, to show in what sense God may be, to us, a reality, a real force or being, a "living God." My object is not to discourse of the gods which are actual and real to men, for then I must speak of pleasure, of wealth and fame, of success and victory; for these are the deities that men truly and daily worship. There is an everlasting difference between the deity that is professed and the God that is adored, between the God that we write the name of in our creed and the God that we worship in our hearts, between the God of theology and the God of life. Many a man's God is the very opposite of what he says it is. He will talk to you about his deity, will define it, and describe it in well-considered terms, will tell you how it differs from the deity held by his neighbors; but follow the course of the man's life, consult the drift of his motives and impulses, see what it is that sways his desire, and you will find that it is some mean thing, some idle, grovelling passion that he would be shocked at if it was fairly presented to him.

I spoke one Sunday of the practical value of a faith in God. Now we must never forget that no faith has a great practical value that is not in some sense real. The faith in God must be real, if it is to prevail. The popular faith is real. The mass of mankind truly believe in a living, operative, personal deity. They cannot speak intelligently of him; they cannot define him; they cannot give reasons for the faith that is in them; they can follow no line of argument in demonstration of his existence; but yet there is an instinctive, awful feeling of his actual presence in the world, which controls, regulates, and predetermines human life. That this is so need not be argued. It is too evident to be doubted. Go among simple men and women of all classes, search the by-ways of life, and you will find a steadfast simplicity of goodness, sincerity, honesty, and veracity which can be accounted for, not on the theory of intuitive knowledge, not on the theory of an instinctive faith in God, but as a sense, a feeling, an impression that, outside of themselves, outside of the working world, there is a power which thinks, feels, purposes, and impels the world towards certain ends of its own. God becomes unreal when life ceases to be simple; when men, engaged in business, completely absorbed in terrestrial affairs, lose the sense of mystery that embosoms and exalts human life; or, it may be, when they are engaged in intellectual pursuits, in the study of science or literature; then, engrossed in themselves, interested in the working of their own minds, they forget the overarching reality that holds them and everything in its place. The unreality of God haunts the working mind. You find it in cities, where men are busy with their own affairs. You do not find it in the country, where men are natural, thoughtful of themselves, and earnest in their service of others; where they lay aside their vanity and conceit.

Men in all ages have insisted on having, not a speculative, but a living, God. The evidences of this are before us. Superstition, that grim, gaunt, awful thing that we speak of, sometimes in the language of horror, sometimes in terms of contempt, is, when duly examined, an effort to realize God, to make divine things palpable, tangible, to give them a local habitation and a name. Superstition takes its color from the mind that entertains it, from the fears or hopes, the hates or loves, that see a horrible ugliness or an immortal beauty in the immediate world of matter. Sometimes it is horrible, as in India, sometimes it is lovely, as in Greece; but, whether hideous or charming, it is an attempt to detain the fugitive spirit of the law that bathes and governs the world. All men are superstitious; all people are superstitious; and they will be, to a certain extent, to the end of time; for superstition, shading off in infinite degrees as it does, reaches the lowest, but does not leave the highest, intelligence.

Idolatry is another effort to realize or make palpable divine powers; to make God an actual living being. The world is full of idols, horrible idols, some of them ghastly, stained with blood, but all in their way symbolical. The deities of Greece were idols none the less for being models of beauty to all time. The image which one sets up in his mind when he undertakes to conceive of deity is an idol. It cannot be seen or touched; still it has its outline in the thought; it is palpable to the intellectual apprehension. The real secret of idolatry is doubtless this,—that the ideal expresses what the unaided mind cannot grasp. The idolator does not necessarily worship the image; he adores the idea behind the image. At last, perhaps, he comes to worship the image, but only at last. This he did in Pagan times. This he does in Christian times. The ordinary Catholic worships the picture of the Virgin as devoutly as the ordinary Greek or Roman worshipped his block of stone. The intelligent Catholic sees the spirit behind the picture and bends before that.

The Ark of the Covenant, which we read of in the Old Testament, was a symbol intended to localize deity. If we know anything about the deity of the early Hebrews, and I confess we know very little, perhaps nothing at all, that conception, without regard to its date, was the purest, the noblest, the highest, ideal on the whole that has ever been entertained by any considerable number of the human family, a highly intellectual conception of a deity without form or substance, having no abiding-place, fashioned after the image of no created thing, whether orb of heaven, or monster of the deep, beast, insect, man, creeping thing, or imaginary being, offspring of fear or fancy; but it has never been possible for a race of men for any length of time to entertain an intellectual conception of deity. The Ark of the Covenant was an attempt as innocent as could be made to localize and domesticate the impalpable. It was a wooden box of ordinary fashion and regular dimensions, furnished with conveniences for handling and carriage, all but devoid of ornament; yet the people became accustomed to look upon it as a divine symbol. Where it was, there was Jehovah; where it went, there Jehovah went. In the course of time the lowest, the vilest, superstition gathered upon it. To lose it was to lose the support of deity; to possess it was to have the living deity in the midst of the people.

Pass now to the Christian doctrine of Incarnation. That, again, was an attempt to realize the godhead, to take the divine being out of the vast bleak spaces of the heavens and make him a man. The Christ was "God with us," Emanuel; he was the word become a man, the whole of deity in the human form, walking about in the streets of cities, sitting at meat in human dwellings, talking with men and women as a friend, sympathizing with them in their sorrow, curing their diseases, raising up their dead. This was the thought that gave vitality to the early Church. Around this central conception the modern Church gathers. The jealousy that the Trinitarian even to-day has of the Unitarian is founded upon this belief that the Incarnation must contain the whole of God. The Christ must be verily God with us, not an archangel, not a spiritual creature of even the highest rank, but the infinite, the omnipresent, the omniscient, the perfect wisdom and love, the fullness, the All in All,—this, nothing else, and nothing less; the Trinitarian charges the Unitarian with dividing the godhead, letting the divine essence depart and become once more a film in the air. There is no longer, he says, a real deity. There is no longer a living, working, operative being. The most popular of our living preachers said in substance: Christ is my God; him I believe in, him I pray to; the other God, the absolute, the ideal, the infinite, is a mist in the air.

The Roman Catholic Church did its best to realize God in the sacraments. The sacraments were channels of grace by means of which the individual believer appropriated, by the touch, the taste, in drops of water, in the consecrated wafer, through the holy hands of the priest, the regenerating lord. The drops of water in baptism were supposed to convey the protecting God. In confirmation, the rite by which the mortal connected himself with the Church, was an electric bond by which helpless individuals became sharers in the life of the eternal. The Church was the living, initiated, domesticated deity. In the communion, the participant took the consecrated wafer, which was regarded as the very body of Christ himself, and, eating it, appropriated the substantiated deity. In extreme unction, in absolution, deity was supposed to trickle from the finger-ends of the priest. The words he spoke were the reasoning of the Almighty; the individual touched God. This was the mystery of the mass,—how a bread and God could be a real one. To the multitude no other was real; the multitude could worship no deity they could not swallow.

Turn to Protestantism; the eternal God, the God of whom law, justice, truth, endless beauty, are the suggestive names and the spiritual substance, is to Protestants nothing. He must be a real God, and to make God real there is the conceded necessity that he become tangible. The Protestant therefore clings to baptism, in the belief that the consecrated drops of water convey to the individual the regenerating spirit of heaven. He prizes the communion bread and wine, the elements of the supper being consecrated by the priest before eaten. The Bible to the Protestant is the portable God, a deity he can put in his pocket, lock up in his trunk, carry about with him on journeys; a divinity he can find lying on the centre-table, can take up and appropriate by the eye as occasion may serve. You see him in the saloons of the steamboats; you come upon him in the chamber of the hotel. Everywhere the effort is to place the idolized book, the printed, bound, enfeathered deity, within the easy reach of men and women. That is the sanctifying thing, to read the Bible, to read it devotedly, to read it on the knees. That is sacramental. That is immediate communication with the all-quickening love.

The last made effort to realize deity is disclosed in the proposition to incorporate his name in the Constitution of the United States. There seems to be somewhere a notion that if we can but vote ourselves a God-fearing people, we shall be so; that if we can contrive to get written as a phylactery on the forehead of our nationality the ineffable name, an ineffable power will thereupon take possession of us, sanctify us, sweeten us, and bear us on to national victory. Such an idea could be entertained only by the people who have for generations on generations been trying to incorporate God in some system or institution, to make him local; people who have believed in incarnating marble, canvas, paper; in fetiches and idols; in symbols and signs; in figures of speech and gestures of the body. No intellectual people, no rational people, would ever think of such a thing. Put the name of God into the Constitution! Why Philip II. of Spain did that, and was not saved thereby from the misfortune of being about the most despicably inhuman king that ever sat on a throne; a tyrant and a bigot who ruined the noblest empire under the sun. Napoleon III. did it, and what? became of him and his dominion? Did the name of God deliver him from his spiritual foes? Pope Pius

IX. was eminent in this achievement. To what end? Either the divine spirit is in the breasts of the people, or it is not. If it is, then how idle to write an acknowledgment of it on a sheet of paper! If it is not, then how idle! If the people are saved at all, it must be by faith in a real God, not by profession of a nominal one.

In the ancient city of Prague, in Bohemia, there is a venerable Jewish synagogue, its walls so thick with grime as to be absolutely black. The synagogue must be lighted in mid-day. A superstitious plety forbids its cleaning. There is a tradition that somewhere on the walls, the precise spot was unknown, the name Jehovah is inscribed, so that, if the walls were cleaned, it might be rubbed out. Would it not be better to clean the walls and realize purity, even at the risk of obliterating the word? The word does not cleanse the building; the dirt conceals the word.

Let us turn from these artificial and unnatural devices for realizing God, these fantastical inventions, and consider how reasonable, thoughtful, earnest people may do it. I have mentioned these instances simply to illustrate the necessity that men are under, from the constitution of their minds, to make God a real being, not an impalpable influence. Here, to begin with, is the outward world of Nature, the material universe, as we call it. How different the conception of Nature is to-day from what it was even a hundred years ago! We have been educated to think of Nature as a crude, solid, substantial mass, which must be roughly dealt with; a stubborn obstacle to intelligence. We now know that it is in ceaseless flux, irresistible, omnipresent, in perpetual action. We live in a living world. We speak now of force, of the correlation of forces. The doctrine amounts to this: that any force may be changed into another force; that its disappearance in one shape is no evidence that it is abolished. It reappears in another. There is always the same amount of force in the universe. It is never diminished; it is never increased. What a conception does that give of a living God, a creative power, which is generating, regenerating, animating, every moment of time, protean in its shapes, single in its essence, dropping this form, assuming that, passing from shape to shape, always changing its semblance, its substance always identical with itself.

Listening to Mr. Tyndall's lectures on light, we were obliged to confess that the world was a mystery of glory; we felt that the sunbeam held us fast by a luminous chain. Imprisoned in the world? Imprisoned in liberty? Dungeoned in light? Such a thing is inconceivable. The universe emancipates. Nature is not an enemy, but a friend; not an oppressor, but an emancipator. If we study it, adjust ourselves to it, it will give us wings, not hang leaden clogs on our feet. The name on all lips at this moment is the name of Edison, who is astonishing the world with his studies on the phenomena of sound. This discovery suggests to the dullest apprehension that the universe is vocal, that these apparently fugitive waves of sound which cross and recross each other are under law, that they can be measured and regulated, combined, subjected to the orderly service of man. There is another revelation of a living presence in the world.

Poets have always seen it. The immortal Shakespeare, in those tremendous lines which have been quoted many thousands of times, and never cease to be impressive, betrays his suspicion that the material world is but a mask:—

"The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
And, like this unsubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind."

Goethe had a similar thought in his mind when he put into the mouth of his earth-spirit these resounding words:—

"Thus at the roaring loom of life I ply,
And weave for God the garment thou see'st him by."

The thought is never absent from the mind of our own Emerson; every one of his essays is full of it. He describes himself as watching the winter sunrise; as making his way under a cloudy sky at evening through a lonely region, plashing over wet marbles, guided only by the light of stars; as standing, musing in the woods, solitary and silent, listening to that voiceless presence that abides there, enchanted always with an unspeakable delight. This idea saturates those immortal essays on compensation, on the spiritual laws, which contain the deepest studies on this theme that are to be found in literature. The poet sees it, for it is the gift of the poet to look behind the semblance, to pluck off the mask, to discover the reality, the soul of things, the creative spirit behind the painted show. The poet discerns the analogies that hold things together, traces cause and effect, divines how forces must ultimate in effects. But are we not all in some degree poets? Who has not felt, by the sea-side, in the woods, by the grave of a child, musing by a peaceful corpse, the mysterious sense of awe that penetrates to the very roots of his being, making him feel how little he was, how majestic, how awful, how sweet and tender, was the animating spirit of the world?

But more impressive still than the world of Nature is the world of circumstance. We who live in cities know little of Nature; we see it through the crevices of the streets; a constellation here and there, a bit of sunrise or sunset. But there is no day when every one of us is not living and working amid human conditions, tied up in a bundle of life with more or fewer human creatures. Stop, reflect a moment, and the closeness with which things are riveted together, are constructed all of one piece, is astonishing. Affairs seem to go by luck, hazard, chance. The careless observer believes in accident. But the instant one stops and considers, he is convinced that there are no such things as luck, chance, hazard, or accident; that a supreme necessity works through the world of circumstance, knitting part to part, effect to cause, each effect being a cause in its turn, until the universe is resolved into a close net-work of laws. In fact, if one thinks too much on this, the impression of destiny is overpowering; he loses all sense of individual existence; he becomes in his estimation nothing, a bit of straw before the wind, the crest of a wave. His personality is drowned. It is the easiest thing in the world to become a fatalist, a pantheist, to become persuaded that there is nothing real but God. The ignorant, the superstitious, the credulous, who must have an interpretation of every event, are perpetually committing the blunder of misplacing cause and effect, confounding their own fancies with the eternal laws. The evangelical Protestant is convinced that if sickness befalls, or disease, or pestilence, it is because the people have neglected church-going, have not listened to sermons, have omitted to say their prayers or read their Bible as they should. Does a child die? The calamity befalls because its mother loved the child too much, loved it more than she loved its Creator, who would have no divided loyalty. Does public distress prevail? It is because the people have ceased to believe in the Trinity. Tenderden steeples is the cause of Goodwin sands.

This is hopeless; such an absolute want of logic, reason, common-sense, such resolute and complacent putting the cart before the horse, setting cause and effect at opposite ends of the planet, is stupefying. We must get away from this. It is simply the recourse of desperation to keep God within some sort of bounds. We must learn to think, to be intelligent, to reason, to put things together. Give us an understanding heart! should be the prayer of every earnest and simple person. Here is the merit of science. The scientific method compels us to look at things as they are, to put causes and effects together where they belong, to classify phenomena, to disregard feelings, sentiments, prejudices, to classify things according to their constitution and relations. This is the immense service that science is rendering to this generation. It is compelling us to recognize the real, to leave out of sight the artificial, the delusive. Talk of science as being irreligious, atheistic! Science is creating a new idea of God. It is due to science that we have any conception at all of a living God. If we do not become atheists one of these days under the maddening effect of Protestantism, it will be due to science, because it is disabusing us of hideous illusions that tease and embarrass us, and putting us in the way of knowing how to reason about the things we see.

But then, if I may be allowed to make a suggestion, it seems to me that the scientific method must be supplemented by the poetic. The scientific method is adapted to the understanding. It bids us consult visible facts, study palpable realities. The culture of the imagination, of the power to go behind facts, to discern laws, to appreciate principles, to get on the track of everlasting forces, is of equal value with knowledge; I had almost said, is of supreme value. The poetic sense,—do we not need more of it? Are we not too practical, too business-like? Would it not be of service to us to read oftener than we do in the great masters of imagination, who take us out of the small, low, irksome conditions of life, and enable us to lose ourselves in the contemplation of a vast universe? The study of art in its highest relations, the study of poetry, the study of the state-liest literature, the reading intelligently of the sacred books of the soul,—something of this is needed to give us a new sense of the reality of that spirit which is real, though we know it not. We cannot anticipate a return of the old-fashioned faith in God. No new definitions are to be expected. No new forms of statement are to be looked for; but we may anticipate a time when the real God shall be felt as he is not now; shall be felt even by the thinkers, certainly by the earnest, intelligent, progressive minds of the race. When the name of God shall be identical with justice and equity, with truth and freedom and beauty, then will God become truly real once more; then he will become indwelling once more, a quickening motive, a keen inspiration to all greatness and goodness.

EDWARD LEAR, the author of the famous and delightful Nonsense Verses, and many wiser books also, Mr. J. T. Fields describes as a great, broad-shouldered, healthy Englishman, who spends a large portion of his valuable time in making children especially happy. Mr. Fields adds that Lear is the classmate and much-loved friend of Tennyson, "and if you chanced, a few years back, to go to Farringford about Christmas time, you would have been likely to find a tall, elderly man, in enormous goggles, down on all-fours on the carpet, and reciting, in the character of a lively and classical hippopotamus, new nonsense verses to a dozen children, amid roars of laughter,—a very undignified position, certainly, for one of the best Greek scholars in Europe, for a landscape painter unrivalled anywhere, and the author of half a dozen learned quartos of travels in Albania, Illyria, Calabria, and other interesting countries. A few years ago he was obliged to build a cottage in Ravenna, in Italy, and live there a portion of the year, in order to get time for painting and study; for when he is in London, the little people, whom he passionately loves and cannot live without, run after him, as they did after the Pied Piper of Hamelin, to that extent he has no leisure for his profession. When it is known that the delightful old fellow is on his way back to England for the holidays, many of the castles and other great residences are on the alert with invitations to secure him for as much time as he can give them. Generations of children have clustered about him in different Christmas seasons. 'The world will never grow old,' he says, 'so long as it has little children and flowers in it.'"

FREE RELIGION AT PROVIDENCE.

SPECIAL CONVENTION OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

A special Convention of the Free Religious Association of the United States was held in Low's Opera House yesterday, under the auspices of the Free Religious Society, of this city, commencing at half-past two o'clock, or thereabouts.

Afternoon Session.

The attendance at the afternoon session was fair, though not by any means large. The Convention was called to order by Prof. Felix Adler, of New York, President of the Association.

Prof. Adler referred in fitting terms to the former President of the Association, Rev. Octavius B. Frothingham, through whose influence, firmness, forbearance, and strength and mildness combined, the liberal cause has made such progress in the last decade, in the city in which he labored. He felt a deep gratitude toward his predecessor, whose retirement from the Presidency of the Free Religious Association, as he considered it, meant more than the mere change of presidents. The Association has hitherto supported the principles of the utmost freedom and mutual tolerance. It was the first organization to attempt to bring men of different shades of religious opinion together. Its platform has been noted for its freedom. Men of the most opposite views of religion have from time to time appeared upon it, and spoken with the utmost frankness of their beliefs. But it has had somewhat more of a New England cast than its wisest friends, even New Englanders themselves, have desired it to possess. New England deserves credit for having formed this society to secure spiritual independence throughout the United States, as she did to secure political independence. New England desires to have it extended throughout the country, and in this way the society has selected to occupy its chair one who is not a New Englander by birth, but cosmopolitan. It may not be out of place to say that I descended from a house of Hebrews,—nursed at the breast of culture, mingled with scarcely no element of Christian culture. It is a sign of the broadness of view and the deep liberality which pervades this Association, that I, with non-Christian antecedents, should be chosen its President. It was the practical side of this Association that first won my allegiance. This Association desires to consider questions of abstract theory, and the discussion and analysis of religious problems; and the object of these discussions is, not to remain theoretical, but to prepare our countrymen for the results of the discussions. The question before the Liberals to-day is, "How is it possible to combine the utmost freedom with strength?" Orthodoxy has been strong, but it has cultivated strength at the expense of freedom; Liberalism has been free, but it has cultivated freedom at the expense of strength. What we want is to combine the two, freedom and strength.

ESSAY BY REV. WM. J. POTTER.

The President then introduced Rev. Wm. J. Potter, of New Bedford, who read an essay upon "Liberal Religion as a Philanthropic Power," of which the following synopsis is given:—

The objection is sometimes brought against liberal or rationalistic religion, that it is not practical,—not adapted to the masses; that radical or naturalistic views may do for the cultivated, but have no power to raise the common people. He proposed to discuss this matter, and show, if possible, that radical religion is naturally philanthropic. If this charge is true, it is a fatal one. That religion will last longest which has the largest heart. That faith will win the victory which has in it the most real humanity. If radical religion is wanting in humanity, it is wanting in the one thing which shall make it a live religion. The charge has been made, that radical or free religion cannot do the work of charity which the Christian religion is doing. This same charge has been made against Unitarianism, that it will do for the cultured, but no more. Radical religion must show itself begetful of benevolent social results, in order to disprove this charge. He is willing that his religion shall be put to the test, as to the improvement of social welfare. It is but fair that the element of kind should be taken into account in this test. The results of the evangelical religion are the results of eighteen hundred years. You must give radical religion so much history as this before you compare the results. If the leaders of the Protestant Reformation had been required during its first century to show its beneficent results, I fear these great men would have found some difficulty in defending their movements. For some time, the results of this Reformation were civil war and disorder. Their principles were proclaimed, and after three hundred years their practical beneficence is shown. There is a vast deal of individual philanthropy and charity among people of radical views which does not appear in statistics. Radicalism does not, from its nature, tend to organization. It is but natural that different phases of religious faith should work in different ways, and produce different results. Catholicism and Judaism work in other phases of philanthropy than does the Christian religion. It cannot be said that any religious faith does not work any practical philanthropy because it does not work in the same way as does any other faith. Taking these considerations into account, he had no fear of ranging the radical religion by the side of any other religion for such a test. Indeed, he was not afraid to throw out the matter of time. Though radical religion was of comparatively recent origin, there had been persons of rationalistic views for years who had done a great work. He instanced the abolition of American slavery. In this reform, the churches, with some few honorable exceptions, were not found in the movement. On the other hand, Phillips, Garrison, Lucretia Mett, and several others whom he named, who were foremost in this work, were persons of rationalistic religion. Was not this philanthropy? So also in the temperance movement, many of the leaders were radicals in religion. So with the spirit of liberty. If any one asks what one thing of a philanthropic nature rationalists have done, we have only to point to the Constitution of the United States, framed by men many of whom were radicals in religion, and which itself is liberal as far as religion is concerned, though the practice of living under it may not be. The fact of mission work among children has been stated to be one work of philanthropy which the free religionists cannot do; but one of the greatest children's missions of New York, as well as one of the oldest, is entirely unsectarian in its teaching, and the principal mover in this work for many years, the Treasurer, John E. Williams, was a Unitarian. There are two of these mission schools in Boston, one supported by Congregationalists and one by Unitarians, and he had yet to learn that the latter was not doing as much work and as good as the former. The founder of the ragged schools in London was a Unitarian. It is also claimed that when you go into the prisons you need something more than the kindness of this rational religion. But who has done more with prisoners, or more in the line of prison reform, than Dorothea Dix, who sat, during her earlier years, under the preachings of Dr. Channing? Florence Nightingale does not belong to the evangelical faith. In the work of the Sanitary Commission, during the late war, he had seen evangelicals and liberals working together side by side equally well. Those who succeeded best were those of large sympathies and tact, no matter what their belief,—the wise and understanding heart. Again, among the freedmen, some of the most efficient workers have been men, and all men of liberal belief. When will you find a hymn that has voiced the feelings of more hearts than "Nearer, my God, to Thee"?—now adopted by all Orthodox congregations,—which was written by one who was a theist. Who has written more that touches the heart than Longfellow? It may be true that believers in an evangelical faith may have greater advantage among the criminal and degraded classes. But these classes, so far as they know anything about religion at all, know only of evangelical religion. Go into the prison, and it will be found that nearly all there are either Catholics, or know about some evangelical faith. A person of the same faith has thus something in common with them. Then the evangelical faith offers the easiest way out of their troubles; it says salvation is so easy that a murderer may become a Christian on the way from the scene of the murder to the gallows; and scenes have been witnessed in this country of men being hung for murder who believed they were going straight to the arms of Jesus. It may be a question if this is a proper kind of philanthropy. The philanthropy of free religion may be less of the heart, but it has more reason in it. It will use discrimination in replying to demands. It allies itself with knowledge rather than with emotions. The main object of rationalistic views is the improvement of man. To be a humanitarian religion is its main object,—it is a religion for humanity. Rationalism does not necessarily deny that there is a life hereafter, but it affirms that man's prime duty is here and now, and to do his full duty here will be the best preparation for the hereafter. It places more emphasis upon the life here than upon the life hereafter, and does not pay so much attention to the hereafter as to neglect the duties of the present. Some of the ecclesiastical religions might well be styled religions of inhumanity. This religion of reason would awaken the human mind from the superstitions which rest upon it. It gratefully accepts the writs of the prophets of the olden times, but does not believe that the power which they had has gone from the world never to return again. It has the best literature of all ages for its Bible. It may be objected that this liberal religion has very little to say about the Supreme Being, or about forms of worship. It would require subtler logic than has yet been discovered to draw the line in the human soul which shall separate the line which divides the divine from the human, and say, "This side is God,—this side is man." When man lives by his highest sense of duty, and lives a life of integrity, of honesty, of philanthropy, though he may profess little, he does not need to seek God. God has sought him and dwells within him, acts through him; and he carries ever within him that worship which is in spirit and in truth.

ADDRESSES BY VARIOUS PERSONS.

Professor Adler said the instructive words of the speaker would be, he was sure, of benefit and service to many of those present. The essayist has accepted the challenge put forth by evangelical churches, and he felt that those present would accept it with him. He alluded to various points made by the essayist, in the most complimentary terms. One of the most important was that there is a difference in the method of the philanthropy of evangelicals and of liberal religions. The one seeks to palliate, the other to prevent and cure. He paid a tribute to the noble women who had shown, by their works, their belief in the liberal faith, and introduced Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer.

Mrs. Spencer expressed her gratitude at the manner in which the subject of the essay had been handled. She differed somewhat from the explanation of the President, of the difference between the philanthropic work of the two religions, one of palliation, the other of cure and prevention. However much these last may do, the other has its work to do. But, while palliating, find out why, when one criminal leaves the prison another takes his place,—find out why poverty always has an open mouth. While the yellow fever was raging, all combined in rendering aid; but when it was over, and even before, the people of liberal tendencies set to work to prevent it in future. The liberal philanthropy is for future generations; but one who has a loving heart must help those who are with us now. So we must have both methods. She thought we have got to improve the external condition of people, to prepare them for the work inside. She believed in the old Orthodox saying, that you have done little for a man unless you have saved his soul; but she differed in what was meant by saving his soul. What is meant by humanitarian work is not the mere aid of a person, but should include the saving of his soul. To strip off the old is not all that is needed, as many seem to think; but we must plant something new. To take away the old forms of religion, as scientists are doing to-day, and to plant nothing in its place, is a dangerous experiment. She closed by begging those present to feel that the free religious work would take them all in.

Colonel Thomas W. Higginson was next introduced. He said when he remembered how large a portion of the leaders in the anti-slavery cause were persons of liberal religious tendencies, he believed the essayist was perfectly right in claiming that movement and its result the work of the radicals. Even the clergymen who favored it were the radicals of that day. He mentioned and gave brief sketches of the work of many philanthropists,—John Augustus, of Boston, who was a religious radical, a radical before radicals; Lydia Maria Child, who is still printing books of liberal religion and still doing deeds of practical charity; Theodore Parker, Horace Mann, Dr. Howe. After all, we are liable to think too much of conviction, and too little of personal character. There are many of us in this work who still retain a liberal share of the sins which we condemn in others. It is a matter of personal temperament. He never could see while in the army that it made any difference to the men what faith the chaplain believed,—it was the man of the large heart and kindly manner who gained the confidence of the men. If you were going into any great philanthropic work, would you not choose the large-hearted man in preference to the narrow-minded one? What you seek is the largeness of the man or woman. The only advantage of free religion, so far as he knew, is, it offers better soil to produce this sort of people. As for saying that in dealing with the criminal and degraded classes you need evangelical religion, he did not believe it. Those who carry this with them have done good work, but not on account of this. It is the heart, the sympathy, the willingness to sacrifice, that does the work.

Rev. Frederick Hinckley, of Boston, was next introduced. He claimed that free religion has had much to do with developing the principles of philanthropy, and this religion is just the religion needed for this development. He defined free religion as a free religion, as a practical religion,—no narrow platform, but one broad as the race, and its object the development of real religion until it produces the highest character. He discoursed at some length upon the principles and needs of this religion, and made a plea for organic effort in its behalf.

The Convention then adjourned until half-past seven o'clock in the evening.

Evening Session.

The attendance in the evening was some larger than in the afternoon. Professor Adler presided, and opened the session by expressing his pleasure at meeting his fellow-liberals. Though those who dared to come out and join them were comparatively few in numbers, opinions were of weight and not numbers. There is approaching a great festival which has for years been observed by all religions,—has been celebrated even before the event from which it takes its name. It has been celebrated by all religions in much the same way. Ever since the twenty-first of September, the days have been growing shorter; but now they will commence to grow longer. It was the lengthening of the days, the increase of the sunlight, that originated this festival with our forefathers, who, by the burning of the Yule log, testified their joy. Though coming at a time when the ice is beginning to harden, it is a premonition of spring; and the arrival of spring is the reason for the Easter festival.

THE AIM OF FREE RELIGION.

Professor Adler then proceeded to discuss "The Aim of Free Religion." The aim of free religion is to destroy and to build up. There are dogmas in the popular theology so demoralizing that no efforts are misdirected which strive to refute them. He called attention to the divisions and dissensions among the popular religions. Love should be the rule of religion,—hate too often is. There is no hate equal to religious hate. Is it surprising that these persons should hate each other when such a surprising example of hate is set before them in the God of their religion? What human ingenuity or cruelty has ever imagined such a fate as that of a hell provided by God for his creatures from the creation of the world? What fiend has equalled this torture? If free religion only relieves men from this burden, it will do a great work. Then there is the other doctrine of sin and the vicarious atonement. If Jesus came to save us, how shall we be saved? By works? No. By faith? Yes. Is faith necessary to virtue? No. Socrates and Leonidas were virtuous. Is virtue necessary to faith? There's the rub. If so, many of the popes even would not be saved, though believing; many of the deacons of our churches, too, who have violated trusts confided to their care would not be saved. Many have bankrupted their virtue with the hope of removing that bankruptcy by faith. Then there is the doctrine of salvation. Unless you trust your child, it will never be worthy of trust; so with grown people. The only way to make them act the good is to believe them capable of good. But if you go among them and tell them they are hopelessly lost, they will not rise. There is no surer or more damnable way to prevent them from being good. There is another charge against the popular dogmas, the want of sincerity. Go to the churches and see who are there. For many of them, it is a lie to be there; ask them why they are there, and they will tell you, "It is in the interest of the Bank," or, "My wife wants me to go," or, "I go for social reasons," etc. Religion was sent to be a teacher by the way, to be a physician to those who are sick with falsehood. We have falsehoods honey-combing the city and village life of our country, and religion should be the physician to cure these falsehoods. That which should be the teacher of sincerity has become insincerity, and the physician has become infected with the prevailing disease. I give you a liberal's idea of religion: "Religion, if it is anything at all, is the science of sincerity,—no more, no less." The popular religion keeps back the intellectual life of the people. The public schools, fortunately, are protected against sectarian education, but the universities are not. The result is, the young man who would obtain a high education is sent abroad. It is because in this country theology fills the chairs of the universities, because theology throttles science and prevents investigation, that America does not take the high rank in science that she would if investigation were free. The mission of free religion calls, not only for freedom of the people, but freedom for those who are the leaders of the people. It is the dearest interests of the nation that are here at stake. We have, then, this work of destruction. Our mission is to cut down all that is wrong. We do destroy, we would tear down, not real religion, but that adulterous thing which calls herself religion, and which is no more like religion than is the outcast in the street like the bride at the altar.

He then explained what must be the constructive work of free religion of our day, first giving a sketch of the phases through which radicalism has already passed. First, at the end of the last century, radicalism waved its hand. Then lived Reimarus, in Germany, and Thomas Paine, in England. These men were so ardent that they were unjust. Reimarus used about the same language as Thomas Paine concerning the Bible. We of to-day cannot accept Paine's words about the Bible. The Bible is not a book, but a literature,—parts utterly worthless, to be cast aside as chaff, parts that are valuable, that are gems. These were the days of angry radicalism. The second phase may be called rationalism. If the motto of the angry radicals was "Reason against the Bible," the motto of the rational radicals was "Reason and the Bible." These attempted to account for the miracles of the Bible by natural causes, calling Christ a trickster. They have never obtained a large following; they never will. The third phase is materialism. After the year 1830, a school of thinkers arose again, mainly in Germany, who founded the materialism of the present century. The characteristic feature of this materialism was its popularity. He did not mean scientific materialism, but the coarse, crude materialism that says matter and force explained everything. The spread of this he attributed to the democratic tendency of the day. There is one more phase of radicalism to which he would call attention, viz., eclectic. They are the religious Micawbers of to-day. In contradistinction to all these, the free religionists take to be the true character of free religion. In all these there is a dogma; but we would raise our banner and say we want no dogma at all,—not by the creed at all, but by the deed. If you are a Christian,—Catholic, Protestant, Jew, Buddhist,—good, so long as you hold these views to yourselves, and do not attempt to force them upon others. Our charge against the prevailing religions is that they are not good enough. What we want is a nobler, purer manhood, and better lives here. Religion in the past has been egotism, and egotism is the great foe of religion to-day. Who of the dainty prophets of to-day dare call things by their right names, and exalt men to a higher standing in morality. We need a basis whereon all men can stand, the platform of morality, of virtuous acts, of purity. Unless liberalism stands for greater purity than the world has ever seen, it will not stand at all. Liberalism, if it means anything, means virtue. Radicalism has one platform upon which we can stand—deed. Free religion must demand greater purity than the world,—that the strong must not hold himself aloof from what is right for the weaker,—must demand chaste lives. A platform on the basis of deeds means first the basis of purity. Free religion, whose idea is humanity, must look upon a broader humanity; must look upon a world of social justice. When in the anti-slavery agitation the churches drew back, and one of the ministers declared that slavery was right according to the Bible, then liberalism went beyond the written word into the unwritten law of humanity. The Hebrew nation have lived on through all persecution, and have been the wonder of the world, because they believed they had a mission to perform, because they were a chosen people. The best spirits of the Hebrew people have always had the idea that "chosen" meant chosen to larger duties, not to greater privileges. We may look upon ourselves also as a chosen people. The world at large is not ripe to receive our ideas. But if the world be not mature, what hinders you from living a higher life? What hinders you from joining with a dozen others and saying, "We will live this higher life," from prescribing for yourselves certain sacrifices, from creating in your midst a higher opinion for yourselves. The aim of free religion is to organize for this higher life. Liberals are distrusted because men say we can talk only, but do not live higher lives. Yes, we do individually. But let us be known throughout this country and the world as the order of the higher life.

The address, though long, was a powerful one, and was listened to with the closest attention.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Rev. Dr. Dudley, of Boston, next addressed the audience. He said he came here hoping to catch the strains of this Association, and he thought he had caught it in the admirable address of the President this evening. He defined true radicalism as a radicalism that never pulls down except in the process of building up. He regarded it as exceedingly important that we organize campaigns in behalf of the future. The day of theology is passing away,—is already in the past. The constituencies of the old churches to-day are in accord with what has been said here to-night. What is to be the upshot of this movement? Is it to result in new organizations, strong, rational, pure, lifting the standard, or are they to return to the old organizations, or are these old organizations to be drawn into and absorbed by the new life? If radicals won't work, there will be no deeds, nothing done, and they will return to the old organizations. But we must show the more excellent way, or there will be no more excellent way to show. If we show this excellent way, there will be many to follow; if we don't, then there will be no future. We say theology is of the past; the dawn of reason is at hand. What is it in human nature that held a demand strong enough to keep itself in all the checkered drama of the past? If we can catch this, we shall be in accord with the movement of the present. If we have anything better to give to the world than the world has been gnawing at, the world will come to us. We ought to be the most liberal of men. If he were to give a definition of religion, he would say it is "loyalty to the higher part of man's nature." All religion is good for us to make splendid men and women, to make and perfect character. If that be the object of this Association, then it is safe. Isaiah was a radical, and Jesus was a radical of the radicals. If there is to be a convention here next year, let there be an enthusiasm here that shall fill these seats, and then we will have a good time.

The next speaker was Mr. Francis Ellingwood Abbot. He spoke very briefly, saying that the "aim of free religion" is to make men free and religious at the same time,—that Orthodoxy offers frequently the spectacle of deep religiousness without intellectual freedom, and that liberalism frequently offers the spectacle of intellectual freedom without religiousness, but that free religion aims to combine these two elements in a character rendered equally noble by its mental liberty and by its devoted self-consecration to the highest welfare of humanity.]

Mr. Frederic A. Hinckley next addressed the audience. He claimed that free religion embraced all sects and all religions; it is the platform of essential, universal, and practical religion,—not narrow nor superficial, but broad, profound, and as deep-rooted as human nature itself. The speaker alluded to the object of the Association, which is to increase the fellowship of the spirit in religion. This religion is broad and radical. It is always seeking a better conception of the nature of true religion. It would strike beneath the surface of all superficial speech. Religion is not a life, but life, the source whence all noble desire, and all grand manly and womanly efforts proceed. The speaker referred to the work required to be done by this religion. We must hasten slowly, and study circumstances within and without.]

President Adler thanked the good friends in Providence for their presence and for their efforts to give a kind welcome. A Free Religious Society in Providence means the beginning of a large future. He advised all those of liberal views, who have not yet identified themselves with this society, to join and extend their aid, and, again thanking them, he bade them good-night and declared the convention adjourned.—Providence Journal, Dec. 20.

THE "DECLINE IN GODLINESS."

Some of the causes of moral and religious decline in Pittsburg alleged by our Ministerial Association yesterday will sound to the lay mind rather queer. The "great activity of Satan," the first cause assigned by Rev. Donahoe, was of course one of the expected causes; though why Satan should have become more active within the last few years, or why he should have lately achieved greater success in his warfare against the Almighty than before, was not explained by the reverend gentleman. The second reason, however, was certainly strange,—too much Sunday-school. "There is too great a disposition," the lecturer said, "on the part of many professed Christians, to deliver over the religious education of their children to others,"—a disposition much to be "deplored." A third cause was too much Young Men's Christian Association, temperance societies, and other agencies working outside the Church. They were a reflection on the Church's ability to take charge of people's morality and religion, that tended to damage her influence, and bring her into contempt. The most startling cause of all, however, suggested by Rev. H. C. Crane, was a dearth of infidels. A few robust aggressive "champions of error" in this city were sorely needed to "stir the people up" and keep them from sleepily accepting Orthodox doctrines, and never thinking anything more about them. Dr. Beatty supplemented this thought with the rather inconsistent remark that what was also needed was a "revival of doctrinal religion," that the people may be lifted out of the widespread "doubt" that prevails on important scriptural doctrines.

This gives food for thought. The Sunday-school has been much vaunted as a powerful and beneficial agency. It has grown into an organization almost as mighty as the Church itself. Yet now we are told that it is a doubtful institution, whose effects are to be "deplored." Perhaps it does not turn out a sufficient number of "infidels" to "stir the people up." In the same way, Young Men's Christian Associations, Murphy movements, and other evangelizing revivals are deplored as injurious to the very cause they profess to serve. Are, then, all the new agencies the Church has in the last thirty years put in the field not only failures but "aids to Satan," boomerang weapons returning to plague the inventors?

But what are we to think of Mr. Crane's suggestion, that we haven't enough infidels for the Church's good? We think he probably underestimates the number in this city. He would be encouraged if he would, like Talmage, go in disguise among the lawyers' offices, the doctors' shops, the newspaper rooms, and find the real religious sentiment of a large number of the educated classes of Pittsburg. He would find plenty of "champions of error": all he would have to overcome would be their prudent hesitation to talk out openly, and "stir up the churches." Perhaps it would be a good thing for Mr. Crane to get Bob Ingersoll to settle here; he would stir the people up, without a doubt, and bring about by his violent diatribes that revival of doctrinal religion that Dr. Beatty thinks we painfully need.

Before resorting to such a seemingly desperate measure of evangelizing, we should advise our Ministerial Association—they continue the same subject next week—to take a lesson from the story of Franklin and the French savans; wherein the American sage, having got them into a learned discussion as to why putting a fish into a globe of water didn't increase the weight, interrupted and discomfited them by showing that it did increase the weight. Is the allegation that there has been a marked "declension of morality and godliness" true? It is an easy and natural thing to assert. As the generous and observing souls of each generation come upon the stage of life, the wickedness of the world bursts upon them like a revelation from hell, and they jump to the conclusion that they are the original discoverers of a new thing. Talmage having made a tour of the night side of New York comes back and proclaims the awful things he has just found out, with all the fierce fervor of that burly coal-miner who, catching a Jew on the street one day, was about to choke him to death for killing Christ, and who, on the poor Hebrew's objecting that that happened eighteen hundred years ago, replied, "Well, I only heard of it this morning." The truth is, that these bad things are not new. They were just as bad, and we think worse, twenty, thirty, a hundred years ago. They were much worse a thousand years ago. All the facts point to a slow but sure rise in the race, in the matter of morality and religion, as in everything else. The belief that it is deteriorating morally is probably an illusion of exactly the same character as the proved illusion that it is deteriorating physically. Both can be explained by the fact that old men forget that in their boyhood they had an exaggerated idea of the size and goodness of their elders. They didn't know the bad and weak side of their fathers as they know the bad and weak side of their contemporaries.

We do not believe that the Pittsburg of to-day, allowing for its growth as a city, is a particle worse either in "profanity," in "licentiousness," or in disregard of the "marriage vows," than it was when Mr. Donahoe was a boy, nor do we believe that even in "the disposition to evade pecuniary obligation" we are a bit worse than the fathers of our present citizens were in times of equal business depression, such as 1837-'40. And we challenge him to produce any tangible facts to prove that we are.—Pittsburg Leader, Nov. 5.

BLAINE'S SPEECH.

Heartily commending, as we have done and still do, the President's withdrawal of troops from South Carolina and Louisiana, and commending also his treatment of the Southern question in his recent message, we yet declare that Senator Blaine, in his speech in the Senate on Wednesday, not only voiced the deepest thought and truest conviction of the Republican party, but represented the principles of justice and equality that lie at the foundation of this Republic. His description of the ways and means by which, while the negroes of the South are counted in the basis of representation, their votes have been suppressed, and his demonstration that sixty thousand Southern white men have actually as much power in shaping the action of the National Government as one hundred and thirty-two thousand white citizens at the North, are not the special pleading of a demagogue, but the calm, sober, unanswerable argument of a statesman. Whatever may be thought or said of Mr. Blaine's attitude upon the Southern question heretofore, or of his secret purposes now, he has not in his Wednesday's speech uttered a single word that should not command the hearty assent of every Republican, the President included. Senators Thurman and Lamar, in attempting to answer him, evidently felt that they were "gnawing a flea."

Mr. Blaine did not attempt to point out a remedy for the evils he depicted and deplored. He steered clear of every issue that could possibly divide his party. He simply proposed a thorough investigation, leaving the question of a remedy to be considered hereafter. At the same time he warned the Democrats that while their iniquity might prosper for a time, a day of retribution would come:—

"No disguise of State rights will close the eyes of our people to the necessity of correcting a great national wrong. Nor should the South make the fatal mistake of concluding that injustice to the negro is not also injustice to the white man; nor should it ever be forgotten that for the wrongs of both a remedy will assuredly be found. The war, with all its costly sacrifices, was fought in vain unless equal rights for all classes be established in all the States of the Union; and now, in words which are those of friendship, however differently they may be accepted, I tell the men of the South here on this floor and beyond this chamber that, even if they could strip the negro of his constitutional rights, they can never permanently maintain the inequality of white men in this nation; they can never make a white man's vote in the South doubly as powerful in the administration of the government as a white man's vote in the North."

There is nothing sensational or sectional here, nor yet anything partisan in an objectionable sense. The thought and the words are such as befit a Senator of the United States. Those who seek to break their force by sneers at the "bloody shirt" mistake the temper of the American people, who will never allow the government to be administered by a party that sanctions or seeks to cover up such frauds as those which Mr. Blaine has exposed.—Orange (N.J.), Journal, Dec. 14.

THE METHODISTS AND THE BIBLE.

Some two or more years since, the Methodist Church upon this coast became, either by accident or through the manoeuvring of a certain clerical clique, committed against the Bible as a class-book of ethics in our public schools. In the last Conference, in September, however, resolutions were adopted whereby the church sets itself right again before the world. These resolutions read as follows:—

On the Bible Cause.

"WHEREAS, This government in its bill of rights acknowledges God, and recognizes his providential interference in our nation; and in the first Congress recognized the utility and the beneficial effect upon the people by the study of the word of God; and, in attestation of their confidence therein, made two appropriations for the publication and circulation of the Bible; and,

"WHEREAS, Our country, for more than a half century, placed in the hands of our children the Bible without hindrance; and,

"WHEREAS, Foreign countries have sent to our shores a great number whose principles and practices are at variance with our institutions, and make demands inconsistent with our highest interest as a State; therefore,

"Resolved, 1st. That we believe the highest interests of our country demand the introduction of the Holy Bible in our public schools as a standard of morals."

Simple declarations are not enough. Organized action becomes a necessary complement of this great work. Parson Benson, of the Christian Advocate, has done well in publishing this set of resolutions, but he must now follow the act with energetic and fervent editorials. He should at once commence to arrange by recommendation for a conference or a congress of all the Protestant clergy of San Francisco, which shall have for its object the placing of the Bible in the public schools, not as a sectarian book, but as an ethical standard of education. We feel quite sure that such eminent men as Dr. Guard, Revs. Hemphill, M. C. Briggs, David Deal, Dr. Platt, and others leaders of the Protestant Church upon this coast, would respond with alacrity. We are sure that they believe with the good parson that the Bible is an inspired book, and that if it was read in our schools without comment, as it should be, it cannot fail of awakening finally wholesome inspiration in some reflecting hearts.

True, their effort might fall in securing the object desired, but then the labor would not be lost. 'Twould embody a sublime idea of conscience, of morality, of republican law, and of loyalty to the Supreme, which would add to the dignity of the hour. No great work is ever accomplished without effort and organization, and it is to be hoped that the editor of the California Christian Advocate will set himself about this great public necessity. It seems to be but a natural supplement of the late act of this denomination in the question. We feel that if we wore the sandals of this apostle of God, we would not rest until the Bible, that great inspiration of free conscience and of free law, was placed in the public schools of the State and nation as an inspiration of conscience and of free law.—San Francisco Commercial Advocate.

"DOCTOR, my daughter had a terrible fit; she continued half an hour without knowledge or understanding." "Oh, never mind that," said the doctor; "many people continue so all their lives."

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 21.

W. J. Ferris, 50 cents; F. M. Sandford, $3; G. Wolcott, $3.20; W. S. Bell, $3.20; Hon. A. P. Prichard, $1; S. L. Smith, $3.20; Jehu Hlast, $3.20; J. S. Merrill, $2; D. Reed, 80 cents; R. A. Hall, $2.70; True Crozman, $2; D. F. Henderson, $3; A. H. Newton, $3; John W. Truedell, $3; Prof. F. H. Clark, $3.20; Mrs. A. P. Tapley, $3.20; Chas. H. Lunt, $3.20; Wilnot Wilson, $3.20; Isaac Hall, $1.50; Edwin Alden, $3.20; William Dodgeon, $5; Jos. S. Hill, $3; American News Co., $6.35; W. C. Macdonald, $1.00; J. G. White, $3.20; Chas. F. Kreig, $3.20; Dr. J. E. Jones, 80 cents; G. Billings, $5.50; S. W. Strong, 40 cents; J. J. Ver-tree, $5.00; David Tenney, $3; H. W. Moore, $3; Miss A. Seeger, $1.50; Miss P. Oarkin, $3.20; A. E. Gilce, $3.25; H. S. Shurtlett, $10.38; Huldah P. Robinson, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JAN. 2, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 331 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 36 Monroe Street: J. T. FAWCETT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBET, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUKUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1878 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD has been lecturing at Norborne, Missouri, and will lecture at Independence, Kansas, January 5, 6, and 7.

A CANADIAN physician writes: "I very much regret the schism that has taken place in the liberal ranks in the United States; but I need scarcely say that I entirely approve of the stand you have taken."

WE WOULD CALL to Mrs. Neymann's advertisement on our last page the special attention of our Western readers. Every one who hears her lecture is quite sure to become her friend; and we hope she will find as many audiences as she can possibly attend to.

MR. F. J. MEAD, of Minneapolis, particularly desires us to state that he is "for repeal." We cheerfully grant his request, and add, unsolicited, that he "mourns over the intellectual wreck of the mind which governs THE INDEX." Since we cannot assuage his grief by removing its cause, we may be at least permitted to mingle our tears with his over this irreparable calamity.

A PENNSYLVANIA subscriber writes: "The grand moral protest made by the minority at the late convention has an historical parallel in the protest and secession of what is now the 'Free Church' from the 'Auld Kirk' of Scotland. The causes of the split, of course, were not the same in both cases, but both protests were made in defence of a principle. All honor to the men who have the courage in these calculating times to stand up and be counted in defence of right."

SAYS THE New York Tribune: "Mr. Beecher recently received a letter from Texas, in which the writer says, 'Nearly two years ago I wrote you, saying that God had sent me to you for $750. I have not yet heard from you. . . . Send the draft at once, payable to my order, and God will reward you.' Mr. Beecher has sent the following reply: 'Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of November 3, I will say that I await the proper commercial documents. Any draft the Lord may make upon me, in your interest, I shall esteem it an honor to meet promptly. As yet I have not been notified by the alleged drawer, nor has any draft been presented through the regular channels. It may be worthy of inquiry where the hindrance or mistake lies, inasmuch as I receive hundreds of letters like yours, informing me of the Lord's will, but without the Lord's signature and without authentic commercial paper. Henry Ward Beecher.'"

PROFESSOR TYNDALL ON SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

Professor Tyndall, in his recent article on "Virchow and Evolution," says: "Feeling appeared in the world before knowledge; and thoughts, conceptions, and creeds founded on emotion had, before the dawn of science, taken root in man." He goes on to state that these early notions based on feeling were illegitimately taken advantage of by the priesthood, who should have treated them as simple poetry, but who, on the contrary, claimed for them objective validity. "It is against this objective rendering of the emotions," he declares, "this thrusting into the region of fact and positive knowledge, of conceptions essentially ideal and poetic,—that science, consciously or unconsciously, wages war. Religious feeling is as much a verity as any other part of human consciousness; and against it, on its subjective side, the waves of science beat in vain. But when, manipulated by the constructive imagination, mixed with imperfect or inaccurate historical data, and moulded by misapplied logic; this feeling traverses our knowledge of Nature, Science, as in duty bound, stands as a hostile power in its path. It is against the mythologic scenery, if I may use the term, rather than against the life and substance of religion, that science enters her protest. Sooner or later, among thinking people, that scenery will be taken for what it is worth—as an effort on the part of man to bring the mystery of life and Nature within the range of his capacities; as a temporary and essentially fluxional rendering in terms of knowledge of that which transcends all knowledge, and admits only of ideal approach."

Let us express this theory in a little plainer language, divested of the inimitable rhetoric which renders all that Professor Tyndall writes so charming, yet which also veils from common eyes the substance of his thought. If we make no mistake in apprehending him, he means that all mythologies and theologies were originally mere products of the poetic imagination, prompted to activity by the uncontrollable awe, wonder, and veneration of primitive man in the presence of Nature; that these poetic guesses at an explanation of the universe ought never to have been treated as if they were actual truths, but left as the graceful creations of fancy, unconfounded with facts; that, having nevertheless been treated as facts by the priesthood, they were at last believed in by the multitude and accepted as creeds which stated objective truth; that science has never had any quarrel with religion as a creator of poetic dreams recognized as such, but only protests against accepting them as true; that the sole function of religion is to feel and to dream,—that this feeling and dreaming, utterly regardless of objective truth, is the "life and substance of religion"; that man can never know whether that which he thus dreams about is true or false, and that science will never give him any light on the subjects which so profoundly stir his emotional and poetic nature. In other words, Religion is a mere affair of sentiment and fancy, having nothing whatever to do with truth, and is indestructible simply because men cannot help feeling and fancying as long as they remain human; while Science, dealing exclusively with "the truth as it is in Nature," has no more to do with Religion than Religion has to do with her.

Is this a completely satisfactory account of the matter? We think not, and present a few reasons for thinking so.

1. In the first place, all the deep and powerful sentiments of the human soul are bound up with convictions of truth. Strike out the element of conviction, and the feeling soon dies out. Persuade a man that the beautiful qualities he sees in the woman he loves are all illusory,—that his own imagination has created them,—and he straightway ceases to love her. Persuade him that the God he believes in is all a myth, the Heaven he hopes for is a mirage, the Hell he fears is a nightmare, and the sentiments which had thickly clustered about these ideas speedily perish. If it is true that Religion is only a matter of emotion, let us not violate the fundamental laws of emotion by supposing for an instant that the deepest and grandest passions of human nature can pour themselves out upon fantasies known to be such; they may expend themselves on fantasies, it is true, but only because these fantasies are mistaken for realities. Professor Tyndall seems to us to have the crudest possible conception of religion, which has carried men to the stake with a joyous smile, when he sees only the superficial element of feeling in it, and not the central, lofty, overmastering conviction of truth which gives to it all its practical power. It is impossible to cancel this, without destroying utterly the inmost soul of religion herself. Religion insists on having what she can at least believe to be the truth; she indignantly flouts the phantom which is too transparent; she continues to ponder and dream, to feel and aspire, only because she seeks the highest truth and believes it attainable. Convince her that the truth she struggles for is forever unattainable, and she will pine, languish, and die; she cannot love, when the object of her love is destroyed; she can only weep herself to death. What surprises us in Professor Tyndall's theory is his apparent ignorance of this fundamental law of all deep sentiment—his naïveté and unconscious absurdity in supposing that religion will ever be content to play with her ideals as a little child with her dolls, knowing them all the while to be stuffed with sawdust! Religion is nothing if not earnest. Her favorite word is faith. She demands above all things to believe. On Professor Tyndall's terms, she prefers death to life; and the world must get along as best it can without her, if his poetic, dreamy, myth-fabricating and myth-contented agnosticism is the only substitute to be found for the rapt, intense, undoubting faith of the world's childhood.

2. In the next place, Professor Tyndall's notion of science as mere "physical science" is as partial and clipped a conception as his conception of religion. Speaking of the grand old Carlyle, he says: "I could see that his contention at bottom always was that the human soul has claims and yearnings which physical science cannot satisfy. England to come will assuredly thank him for his affirmation of the ethical and ideal side of human nature." This is most true. But England (and the whole of humanity) will thank him, because he has ever affirmed the "eternal verities," not the eternal dreams of luxurious imagination. Poetry and religion are akin, but not the same. It is Carlyle's magnificent wrath with "shams," his burning devotion to the highest order of truth, that is his title to the everlasting gratitude of the world. Cannot Professor Tyndall perceive that it is this glorious passion for truth which has given Carlyle his hold on the human soul? It is something more than mere subjective truth to which this prophet of the nineteenth century has dedicated his life; it is self-consecration to truth as vast as illimitable Nature that has ever filled his soul with inspiration, and made him, with all his surface crustiness, a crater of the universal soul of man.

Now science itself is inspired with the same self-consecration, and exemplifies thus the inmost nobility of religion—to which it is so frequently and so foolishly opposed. Even Professor Tyndall, in this very article, shows that he is wiser than his own theory, after all: "Science soon fascinated me on its own account; and I could see that, to carry it duly and honestly out, moral qualities were incessantly invoked. There was no room allowed for insincerity—no room even for carelessness. The edifice of science had been raised by men who had unwaveringly followed the truth as it is in Nature, and in doing so had often sacrificed interests which are usually potent in this world. Among these rationalistic men of Germany conscientiousness in work was as much insisted on as it could be among theologians. And why, since they had not the rewards or penalties of the theologian to offer to their disciples? Because they assumed, and were justified in assuming, that those whom they addressed had that within them which would respond to their appeal." In this passage, the eloquent apostle of physical science shows that he is fully conscious of the moral fidelity to truth which lies at the heart of science and religion alike. Science, even physical science, could not be herself without it; and the fact only proves the equal folly and futility of setting her in an artificial opposition to religion, or of trying to assign to either a work in which the other has no part.

3. In short, it is a great and mischievous mistake to separate science and religion,—to assign exclusively to one the function of discovering truth, and to the other the function of creating poetic fignments for the satisfaction of merely subjective sentiment. What is the real relation of the two?

No narrower conception of religion, we are satisfied, will ultimately or permanently find acceptance with mankind than the conception of it as the perfecting of human nature in all its relations,—the natural development of man into the highest possible character, whether as an individual, a member of society, or a denizen of a limitless cosmos. Viewed in this manner, religion includes science as a part of herself, extends its domain so as to cover the entire field of intellectual activity, and supplies to it her own supreme motives in the faithful cultivation of this field. Religion demands the truth first of all things, and it is the special function of the intellect to supply this demand by a faithful application of the one scientific method wherever truth is sought. The ancient mythologies were more than poetry; they were man's first, childish, bungling attempts at a scientific colligation of all facts in the unity of a single view. That is the reason why they were believed; no trick of priestcraft lay at the bottom of men's faith in these mythologies. They were the work of the intellect, acting as well as it could in the absence of all conception of the true scientific method; the poetic imagination itself was only an exercise of the hypothesis-making faculty so essential to modern science. And these old mythologies would have lasted to this day with undiminished authority, if the intellect had not continually improved upon its own creations, and gradually shaped larger and larger conceptions of the universe as a whole. All through this long process of evolution, the intellect, not self-conscious fancy, told men what to believe; it has always played, and will always play, the part of a creed-creator. Professor Tyndall's theory of the universe is his own creed, created by his intellect; every man's is of the same origin, however unskillfully fashioned. Around this bony framework of intellectual belief, imagination and poetry and sentiment are the flesh and blood of the living organism, giving it grace and beauty and life. Thus science and religion do not sit apart, like two monarchs on distant thrones, with no intercourse save that of formal and suspicious diplomacy; on the contrary, they are one and the same, in the same sense as the head and the entire body are the same. Religion holds up the ideal of complete, perfect, and symmetrical development of the whole man, in all his manifold relations, commanding him to "know himself" and the universe he inhabits as the necessary condition of this development; science, acting on the grand motives supplied by religion, undertakes the task of perfecting him in all that concerns his intellect, and of guiding him to all the truth within the range of its powers. Such is the actual relation of religion and science, as we have presented and urged it for nine years in these columns; and we have never yet seen any reason to believe it otherwise than substantially correct.

4. The consequence of representing religion as a mere blower of poetical bubbles for the satisfaction of subjective sentiment, without any regard to objective truth, and of representing science as restricted to physical phenomena alone—hence disqualified forever for satisfying the deep hunger of the human soul after spiritual truth as a cosmical reality, is necessarily to wound the human soul, so to speak, in its tenderest parts. We have seen no more pathetic illustration of this than is contained in the following just published verses of the late Colonel Reelf:

My Slain.

This sweet child which hath climbed upon my knee,
This amber-haired, four-summered little maid,
With her unconscious beauty troubleth me,
With her low prattle maketh me afraid.
Ah, darling! when you cling and nestle so
You hurt me, though you do not see me cry,
Nor bear the weariness with which I sigh,
For the dear babe I killed so long ago.
I tremble at the touch of your caress:
I am not worthy of your innocent faith;
I who with whetted knives of worldliness
Did put my own child-heartedness to death,
Beside whose grave I pace forevermore,
Like desolation on a shipwrecked shore.
There is no little child within me now,
To sing back to the thrushes, to leap up
When June winds kiss me, when an apple-bough
Laughs into blossoms, or a buttercup
Plays with the sunshine, or a violet
Dances in the glad dew. Alas! alas!
The meaning of the daisies in the grass
I have forgotten; and if my cheeks are wet,
It is not with the blitheness of the child,
But with the bitter sorrow of sad years.
O moaning life, with life irreconciled;
O backward-looking thought, O pain, O tears,
For us there is not any silver sound
Of rhythmic wonders springing from the ground.
Woe worth the knowledge and the bookish lore
Which makes men mummies, weighs out every grain
Of that which was miraculous before,
And eases the heart down with the scoffing brain;
Woe worth the hearing, analytic days
That dry the tender juices in the breast
And put the thunders of the Lord to test,
So that no marvel must be, and no praise,
Nor any God except Necessity.
What can ye give my poor, starved life in lieu
Of this dead cherub which I slew for ye?
Take back your doubtful wisdom, and renew
My early, foolish freshness of the dunce,
Whose simple instincts guessed the heavens at once.
Here is the wall of a deeply religious nature, robbed of its legitimate nutriment by the half-science of the day, withered by the arrogant physicalism which knows nothing of the larger, fuller, more reverent and more tender science of the future. Only the physical aspects and facts of Nature are as yet included in the recognized domain of science; but, just as surely as the human soul is more than the human body—just as surely as conscience, will, love, hope, aspiration, and all the other great realities of our human consciousness, are more than mere digestion and respiration and locomotion,—just so surely will the prying mind of man assert and vindicate its right to investigate those higher facts by the same victorious method which has won such signal triumphs in the world of physical phenomena. Religion is not dead yet; she will not die, neither will she surrender her inalienable prerogative of seeking the "eternal verities" which lie at the heart of universal Nature. Patient she must be, but hopeful and devoted ever, in her search for the divine secrets of this marvellous universe; and science will yet discover that her own insatiable thirst for truth in physical matters is only leading her to fit herself for the task of discovering those higher truths for which religion lights a burning and unquenchable desire in the heart of man.

RADICAL AND CONSERVATIVE.

The radical and the conservative spirits and dispositions are both necessary to the true reformer, who, while he works for the removal of the false and the bad, strives to strengthen and perpetuate the true and the good.

But in these times, when there is much passing under the name of liberalism that is quite undeserving the name, the words radical and conservative are often used in connection with liberalism, in a manner that indicates more confusion of thought than discrimination. Thus, Brown is a man who is very careful and accurate in his statements, and expresses himself with becoming modesty on subjects on which his views do not admit of positive proof, and concerning which the greatest men differ. He is therefore a conservative. Jones makes loose and wild statements, and affirms his convictions without qualification, and with clenched fists. That makes him a radical. Brown has been a liberal many years, and his views are the result of careful thought and study. But he exposes the absurdity of creeds without bitterness, and criticises the positions of opponents without vituperation. He is conservative. Jones, who has recently left an Orthodox church and is yet under the influence of his early faith, much of which still clings to him, is particularly severe on the doctrines of "hell" and a "personal devil," which he denounces with terrible severity. That makes him a radical. Brown never descends to the abuse of those who differ from him, because of their views; Jones always does,—another proof that the former is conservative and the latter radical. Brown has read the best works on the subject of the Bible, and, after years of reflection, has come to regard that book as an outgrowth of the human mind through ages of ignorance and superstition, written by men who generally believed what they wrote, and who in most cases were in advance of their times,—a book that contains, with much error, a great deal of moral wisdom. This is a conservative view. Jones has read two or three pamphlets pointing out contradictions and absurdities of the Bible, and he fiercely denounces the book as "a pack of lies," and the invention of priests gotten up to enslave mankind. This is the radical view of the subject. Brown, having studied profoundly the great questions of philosophy, is forced to recognize the fact of mystery in the universe, and back of all phenomena an unexplained and inexplicable mystery. That is conservative. Jones says it is nonsense to talk about anything back of phenomena, or to use the term "unknown" or "unknowable." Kant and Spencer are too conservative for him. He is radical. Brown, although perhaps an atheist, and a firm believer in the evolution of life on this globe without any supernatural agency, is interested in recent discussions in regard to spontaneous generation. He is perhaps doubtful as to the validity of Bastian's experiments. He is conservative. Jones has no doubt of spontaneous generation now, for anybody, he says, can see evidence of it by examining a pool of stagnant water or a piece of old cheese. He is radical. Brown, after years of investigation, remains unconvinced of the truth of modern Spiritualism, and perhaps regards the problem of a future life as an open question. Possibly he inclines to the view that death is an endless sleep. He is so conservative! Jones has been to see Mott, Holmes, Bliss, Eddy, Huntton, et id omne genus, and now in emphatic language declares he knows there is another life, and wonders why anybody can doubt it. Twenty years from now, he says, everybody will be convinced. He is a thorough radical. Two years ago he was an Orthodox Christian, and then declared that he knew there was "a reality in religion." Brown regards monogamic marriage as one of the institutions worthy of support. This is the result of his conservatism. Jones is opposed to marriage, and says there can be no general improvement of society until "free love" prevails. He pities those who are so much in bondage to the past as to speak in commendation of the marriage system.

The word radical has been applied to those in favor of reformatory movements, and it has been regarded among liberals as an honor to be a radical. The word conservative has been used to designate those in favor of perpetuating old errors and abuses. But if the word radical is to be applied to everybody who agrees with Jones, and the word conservative to everybody who agrees with Brown, let the fact be understood. Some liberals might prefer to be considered conservatives.

R. F. U.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism, such as the organization of new societies, reports of liberal lectures and meetings, or criticisms of freethought and Free Religion—would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Men build houses to keep secrets in.

Many see in art only the charm of nakedness.

What do people do all the time who have nothing to do?

To take no notice of an insult is to conquer the one who offers it.

Ten dollars spent in vice are atoned for by giving ten cents in charity.

An African bishop once counselled a missionary to work "where there was most devil."

Opportunity does not wait for inclination. Occasion passes while we hesitate to improve it.

There are persons who do nothing but stand in other people's light and get in other people's way.

Young lady at tea-table to young gentleman by her side: "After tea, what?" Young gentleman: "U."

Let every friend of THE INDEX begin the new year by sending the name of a new subscriber to the paper.

The stone that the young man sat on for two hours, waiting for his sweetheart to meet him, he calls the "Rock of Ages."

The boy who was taken across his mother's knees for stealing grapes, when asked, "How do the grapes look now?" replied, "Transparent."

Man is not unfortunate because he does not get rich by sitting still; nor is the world cruel because a man chooses to starve rather than to work. The world is well rid of laziness at any cost.

The following is a fac simile of a notice we found posted in a store in the rural districts lately: "found A black kid glove one button on a fur round the risk the 22 the owner can have by calling at—."

Professor Edward S. Morse has been lecturing before a Japanese audience on Darwinism. He says that Japanese students evince great delight to find that there are other views held abroad than those taught by the Christian missionary, and, "by the hearty way in which they applaud, show how welcome rational views are."

To overcome a foe is not the test of a people's strength, but not to be overcome by vice and immorality and selfishness. The home, the shop, and the cultivated field, that tell of peace and her victories, are fairer monuments than granite shafts or marble columns. Places of industry, not battle-plains, are the indices of a nation's triumphs.

Mormonism, according to Rev. Joseph Cook, is a "relic of barbarism." Yes, of the barbarism which inspired the greater portion of the Old Testament. Mormonism is a remnant of the patriarchal polygamy of ancient Israel, and is a Bible institution. Brigham Young was only an humble imitator of Solomon, who, according to the author of I. Kings, was "wiser than all men." It was after the Lord said to Abram, "Walk before me, and be thou perfect," that he commenced the business of polygamy.

In a town not forty miles from this city, lives a man notorious for his unchristian habits. On Sunday, when the weather permitted, he used to go clamming, or engage in other week-day employment. Recently he has changed somewhat his programme for the Sabbath. A deacon of the Congregational church of the place met him the other day, and said: "Tim, I don't see you drive by to the beach on Sundays now. What do you do with yourself?" "Oh!" replied Tim, "I go down to the hall to the free religious meetings." "Stick to your old ways, Tim, stick to your old ways!" said the deacon, as he passed along.

What has become of the Sabbath? Sunday was once a holy day; it is becoming an amusement day. We do not object. Old things are passing away. Old theology, old philosophy, old nonsense of every description, is below par. It is but right that the old Sunday should go with the rest. Cars run on our railroads, and horse-cars are as thick on Sunday as on Wednesday. Theatres are open Sunday evenings, and a Fair has been open on the Lord's day, right here in Boston. The Church is losing its hold upon Sunday. Man has learned that this day is as much a part of his inheritance as either of the other six days, and he proposes to have the benefit of it.

"Is another revelation necessary?" is the question agitating theological circles. Need we say that, among those who regard the Jewish and Christian Scriptures as the "Word of God," the question is answered in the negative? If by "another revelation" is meant another volume similar to the Bible, we should echo the answer. We have all such revelations that we need. But if it is meant more facts of Nature and of life, more knowledge of things, more of what is good and true and beneficial to mankind, we should say we want all the revelations of this kind we can have. But we do not care for any more "Geneals" from Moses; any more "Song" from Solomon; any more "prophecy" from Ezekiel; any more "Revelation" from John. The world is waiting to hear anything that is worth hearing; and to those who know what will help or bless the world, we would say: "Tell it! Your revelation is needed."

Rev. Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, and Rev. Henry Morgan, of this city, are making themselves notorious as pulpit scavengers. The streets of Boston and New York will be no cleaner morally after these sensational preachers have finished their work, while they will be fortunate if they escape without any smell upon their clothes. This is a kind of business that had better be done by the police, and not by ministers. There is a vicious way of speaking of vice, and Messrs. Morgan and Talmage have the art to perfection. The recent harangues of these two preachers have drawn crowded houses, but such entertainments are immoral, and the Music Hall performances are cheap at ten cents a head. This is a low way to make money, and a man with "Rev." before his name ought to have a higher ambition than to be a pious mountebank. Mr. Morgan's effort on the evening of Dec. 15 was called "Fighting the Tiger." He began his speech by saying: "I may as well confess that, in striving to reform Boston, I have met an elephant. I am myself whipped. Boston is a hard nut to crack." The reverend gentleman (?), in his attempt to prove Boston a worse place than New York, has failed to make out a case. We prefer to believe with Talmage, that "hell on earth," as he calls it, is nearer Brooklyn. Mr. Morgan did not visit the places of iniquity of which he speaks, but hired an agent to sound the shoals and depths of Boston's filth, while he only exhibits the specimens of mud collected by his deputy. This is a high-toned way of dealing with the subject, and satisfies the Christian conscience, which believes in vicarious performances; but we submit that second-hand information is not trustworthy, and would ask to have the agent tell what he knows, instead of hearing of our wickedness through the mouth of one who knows not whereof he speaks. We believe that Boston will survive the showing-up of Morgan and his agent, and will still be a safe place to live in.

It was said by a friend of Douglas Jerrold who had received many a proof of love from him: "If every one who had received a kindness at his hands should lay a flower upon his tomb, a mountain of roses would rise over his grave." Could we not say of our great countryman: "If every one who has been benefited by the life of Charles Sumner should make a pilgrimage to the place where stands the statue of this Massachusetts Senator in the Public Garden, a nation would visit the spot?" The death of this man sent mourning into every town in the land. Thousands of hearts swelled with sorrow and thousands of eyes dimmed with tears when they heard the sad, terrible words, Sumner is dead. Every paper became his pall-bearer, and the black lines between which were chronicled the tidings of his death seemed like the register of one's own family. All this has become history, and the world's tears have dried into a world's regret. It is left the nation which he enriched with his services to honor the man who, through the most turbulent period of her national life, was never charged with betraying his trust, nor forgetting the high and sacred duties which belong to the position which he, for nearly a quarter of a century, filled with rare ability and integrity. There should stand in every city of the United States a statue of Charles Sumner. They would be public monitors. Such memorials more fitly express the reverence of this age than do churches. Charles Sumner lived a life of marble grandeur. His political career was spotless. He was true to the ideas of his party. He built upon principle. When his voice was heard, it was for the right. He never stooped. He laid aside the robe of his high office as white as he received it. Let young men who aspire to places of political honor remember that Sumner won a people's love and reverence by being faithful to his trust and above bribe or fear.

Boston has no nobler monument than this statue of her great son and citizen, Charles Sumner.

Mr. E. H. Heywood is out of prison, and that is where he ought to be. He never should have been sent to Dedham jail, or any other jail. Had he been guilty of the charge preferred against him, he would have deserved his imprisonment, and we hope there are jails enough ready to hold every person who is detected in circulating obscene literature in any manner. But Mr. Heywood was not guilty of this crime. He has suffered wrongfully, and the nation ought to repair the wrong which it has done him as far as possible, by paying him for the six months' labor of which it has robbed him. The friends of free speech everywhere will rejoice that Mr. Heywood has received a full and unconditional pardon. But let them not make a martyr of him. Immortality may sometimes have its root in a prison, but not in this case. We defend human rights when we protest against the wrong done to Mr. Heywood, but we do not apologize for his peculiar ideas. We must say that we see no excuse for publishing Cupid's Yokes. But while this work is open to criticism on grounds of morality and taste, it is not obscene. We stand with those who are opposed to obscenity. We do not believe that a word should be spoken, written, or circulated, that is obscene. We shall rejoice when mankind shall be pure enough to give us books that are not tarnished with foul words. But we cannot understand how the moral sense can be offended at anything in Cupid's Yokes that can yet read the Old Testament without manifesting objection to the odor of some of its sentences. The last person to condemn this pamphlet should be the Christian. A man or woman who can read the Bible through without a blush for the author ought not to feel the quick, hot blood paint the brow with shame when reading what Mr. Heywood has written. Mr. Heywood has been foully wronged by the court that tried and condemned him. The only approach to justice in a case like this that we can think of would be to compel the judge and jury that sent him to jail to be sent there themselves for the same term of imprisonment.

G. P. Putnam's Sons have issued a volume by Rev. J. W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, entitled The Bible of To-day. The book contains eight lectures (which were first given to Mr. Chadwick's congregation), four on the Old Testament, one on the Apocrypha, and three on the New Testament. There is a kind of liberalism to-day which allows one to say almost anything in the way of criticism in regard to the Old Testament, but which keeps its hand reverently on the New Testament, and says: "You must not touch this." But Mr. Chadwick, although ostensibly a Unitarian, is too sincere and honest to fall into this kind of stultification, and he exercises his common-sense just as much when speaking of the Gospel of John as when speaking of Genesis. In the December number of The Unitarian Review, Rev. J. H. Morison, D.D., takes the author of The Bible of To-day to task for his irreverence, and administers a severe rebuke to this radical sheep of the Unitarian fold. Dr. Morison is unable to get the beam of Christian theology out of his own eye, and hence does not see clearly how to extract the mote out of Mr. Chadwick's eye. In fact, the Doctor is almost a worshipper of Jesus. He calls him Christ, and believes that he was concealed enough to have used the language ascribed to him in the Fourth Gospel. About one half of the Unitarian clergymen of to-day are sailing under false colors. They are Orthodox to the bone, and ought to lay aside their pretensions to being liberal. They may be most excellent men, but they are behind the times, and are wedded to old ideas which have no significance to our civilization, and are unfit to criticize a work like Mr. Chadwick's, because they are unable to understand and appreciate it. We will cite a few passages from The Bible of To-day, to show the fearless manner in which the author deals with his subjects:—

"The egotism with which Jesus insists on his own spiritual grandeur would be intolerable, even if we allowed his claim. It is a wonderful relief to know that all these representations correspond to nothing actual. The critics who have proved the Fourth Gospel unhistorical have not only cleared the character of Jesus from a degrading imputation, but they have done an equal service to the Deity, for whom we should lose all respect if he could thus insist on his dignity and his prerogative." (p. 283.)

Speaking of Paul, he says (pp. 268, 9): "What shall we say of this remarkable double transformation? First, that, if Paul was such a man as he is represented in the book of Acts, he is but little worthy of our admiration, leaving the Epistles out of the account. But, second, taking the Epistles into the account, that either Acts misrepresents him grossly, or he was not only a liar and a hypocrite, but a blustering Falstaff, bragging of heroisms of which he was incapable, and slandering men who were of larger mould and better spirit than himself." He refers to the other apostles as "ecclesiastical Turveydrops." Dr. Morison cannot restrain his indignation at what he calls "the books which deal with the Bible so freely, so loosely," and he deals their authors a second-hand blow from the words of Jesus (which he thinks too true to be doubted, too sacred to be criticised): "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God." The Bible of eighteen centuries ago is not the Bible of to-day. We want a later guide. The Old and New Testaments are both too old for this age. If half as much time and talent were devoted to a defence of what is right and reasonable as are employed to keep up faith in the worn-out divinity of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, the world would make more progress. Mr. Chadwick's volume is timely. It is bright, fearless, sufficiently reverent, and shows not only wide research but independent thought. The book will live to help men out of darkness, and no feeble tirade against it or its author can prevent it from finding its place in the world. It is another contribution of honest thought, which is the only holy writing.

We have added another year to the circle of our existence. We are one year more or less a man. We stand here to look back if we will, but never to go back. The past is within us now. Though we can never forget the pains which our lives have borne, though we may never quite outgrow our sorrows or our sins,—we may win sweeter and more lasting excellence by being softened by our griefs and corrected by our errors. Whether the past be bright or dark, we must bid it farewell; and whether the future have for us pleasure or pain, we must say to it, Welcome! We have ceased to write 1878, but we are not sorry to write 1879. While the old year is crowned beautiful, and half the poetry of the soul rhymed to sing its praise,—while its white hair is a benediction on the past, and a blessing on the future,—we would not have the year always old. There is a providence of mutation, and things go away as well as come for some good purpose. The old man is as dangerous as the "old boy." The only progress for the world is to be born again. There has been (for some time at least) a notion among human beings that at this particular period of the year we ought to see how we stand with man and God: The beginning of the new year is "the appointed time of salvation" for a great many persons. On the first of January, some people pay their debts; some count their gains for the year; some repent of their sins; but any day is a good day to repent or to pay one's debts. The first of January is no better season for looking over our moral ledgers than the first of June. In fact, these winter days are too frosty for regeneration. The evil in our nature is frozen so hard at this particular season that to attempt a reformation would be only to clear away the snow from before our doors of repentance, and reopen the paths to the wells and wood-sheds of our vices and shortcomings. It is too cold for grass and flowers. It is too cold for moral resolves to blossom and bear fruit. We would keep in the ranks of custom where we can do so without stepping unseasonably; but if the laws of common usage forbid us the free exercise of our limbs, then are we bound to seek a liberty that is not hedged in, a freedom where the light of truth is not strained, nor the soul of man cut into a triangle, a pentagon, or a polygon, with "thirty-nine" sides and angles. We want the longest day of the year for repentance. The moon then will rise upon some sins unconfessed. A person can then have some sympathy from Nature; but now she turns a cold shoulder to our lamentations, and freezes harder and harder the more sins we unbosom. If the confessional were a snow-bank, and a north-east wind our confessor, we fear that we should forget some of our errors. The stream of memory would be frozen over, and our sins, taking advantage of such a fate, would be buckling on their skates for a winter's enjoyment. Alas! could a human being have the heart at such a moment to chill their joys? Nature has given them a reprieve in forgetfulness. Let her mantle cover them as long as it will. In June, when Nature is beautiful and joyous, she will forgive any error if we only repent. One can get nearer to her through a sweet meadow of clover and columbine than through a snow-bank six feet deep. Sitting on the ground in a summer's day, when the earth and sky are so near together that heaven does not seem far away, one almost takes delight in confessing his little or big mistakes. When the words of repentance are spoken, when the soul is waiting for its doom, every part of Nature seems to say: "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more." The little blue-eyed violet—that snow-flake of the sky—that blooms so modestly beneath the great blue-eyed heaven; the yellow buttercup and dandelion,—those fire-worshippers that look as though they held some secret of the sun told to earth long ago, and which no man has read; the dainty white daisy,—that homely little angel which few but children love; and the whole band of earth's bright flora,—all with one sweet, sad voice say to man's weeping heart: "We too have stained our souls; there is earth in our hearts, though the color of heaven is in our eyes; we were born of dust with you." Flowers are the redeemed sins of men. Confess your faults when Nature is glad and bright, not when forgiveness is below zero.

"WHERE ARE YOU going with the puppies, my little man?" asked a gentleman of a small boy yesterday, whom he met with three pups in a basket.

"Goin' to drown them," was the reply.

"I want a pup for my little boy to play with; what do you say to letting me take one of them?"

"I'll sell you one," spoke up the boy, with true American enterprise.

"I'll sell you this yaller one for half a dollar, the black one for seventy-five cents, and the spotted one is worth a dollar."

"I think my boy would like the spotted one best, but you ask too much for it. You had intended drowning all of them, but I'll give you twenty-five cents and save you the trouble of drowning the spotted one."

"Twenty-five cents for that spotted pup!" exclaimed the boy; "I can't stand it. Taxes is high; rent is high; groceries is high; oil is down and going lower,—oh, no; I can't take less than a dollar."

"But you intend to drown—"

"Take the black one at seventy-five cents."

"My little boy wouldn't like the black one."

"Take the yaller one at half a dollar, and he's dog cheap."

"I don't like his color."

"Well, then, you'd better tell your little boy to play with his toes," and he continued on his way to the river, remarking that "No party can dead-beat his way on me these hard times."—Oil City Derrick.

Communications.

A WOMAN'S VERDICT.

WYOMA VILLAGE, LYNN, Mass.,
Dec. 20, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have not waited for others to take the lead before congratulating you on the high and honorable stand you have taken, but private griefs, troubles, and perplexities have occupied my mind. The abominations of "free love" have driven many earnest souls out of the ranks of Spiritualism; and now the same "old serpent" has caused dissension in the liberal ranks. To many undisciplined hearts and unreasoning minds, freedom means only license; and I rejoice to find that the blessed minority to which you belong is not of that order. Mrs. Victoria Woodhull, after breaking up homes and destroying the happiness of many families, after poisoning the well-springs of affection for a multitude, and making of purity and duty mere bywords of reproach (in her vocabulary), has gone into an evangelical church, wherein I, for one, doubt not she is as great an intriguer as she is a hypocrite.

Mr. Abbot, you will never land upon any shores of superstition or mercenary calculation. May the sincere admiration of one who reveres truth and honors moral courage be acceptable to you, as it is offered without flattery by the heart of your Jewish friend. May you live on earth to see the triumph of your labors. As it is, you have from hour to hour awarded you the sweetest, holiest compensations of approving conscience.

"Stand for the Right! alone you'll be more strong Than all the world to back you in the wrong."

With the utmost respect, I am yours truly,

CORA WILBURN.

F.S.—Thank you very much for sending my letter to Mrs. Besant. I have had the pleasure of receiving a line from that noble woman. I utterly dissent from her atheistic views, but honor her courageous truthfulness, and sympathize with her in the cruel outrage committed on her maternal feelings.

[Our sincere thanks are due to this as yet unseen friend for her kind and appreciative words, which we only publish because it is right that the better mind of liberalism should make itself heard at this time.—ED.]

FREE RELIGION RUN MAD.

PROVIDENCE, Dec. 20, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I beg your generosity for a few heart-felt reflections on the spirit and "true inwardness" of the Free Religious Convention which has just been held here. Perhaps I deserve it in part, since I have been one of the most active workers in the up-building of the new religion, and have suffered ostracism and professional neglect in an unequal fight for various liberal reforms in these benighted plantations.

I listened with profound attention and respect to the address of Prof. Felix Adler, the President of the Association. His analysis of religious beliefs was intelligent and scholarly. His classification of the prominent schools of philosophy was logical and comprehensive. The mission of free religion in the present stage of theological development was beneficent and necessary.

Finally, Prof. Adler summed up, in substantially these words: "Free religion says to a man, No matter what your belief, come and join us, and we will not quarrel over creeds and externals. If you are a Buddhist, come and join us in good works; if you are a Jew, come and emulate us in the religion of deeds. It says to all: Believe or disbelieve what you choose, but join with us in that religion which has no choice,—a good, nay, a better life."

But at this juncture of the discourse, there gathers a dark, dreadful cloud over the spirit of the free religious dream. Alas! Prof. Adler, for your liberalism, as you continue: "But there is a religion which admits of no choice, where we will be dogmatic as you will, severe as you will, yes, intolerant as you will: it is the religion of morality. Liberalism must stand for virtue. Radicalism has one plank where it tolerates no difference of belief: that plank is purity."

As I wended my way from the hall, I was indeed pained and utterly astonished that a man of the assumed culture of Prof. Felix Adler should be so fatally blind to the tendencies of history. Is that all, then, that free religion has to offer, in this age of progress? Freedom of theological belief? Why, within a stone's throw of that platform is Grace Church. The Episcopal bishop told a gentleman who inquired as to the binding force of creeds, as a condition of membership, that the Church ranged all the way from Atheism to Orthodoxy. The bishop himself is a firm believer in modern Spiritualism. And this is the most fashionable church in Providence. Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, who sat upon the platform, once told me that, having outgrown the creed of her Congregational church, she went to the clergyman and told him that she could not conscientiously keep her name on the books, since she did not subscribe to the dogmas. "Why?" said the reverend gentleman, "that is of no consequence,—stay and work with us in good deeds." And is this the one great especial virtue of free religion?

The average student of history understands the great point that was achieved in the mighty struggle of the Reformation. Two centuries of blood and savage strife finally wrung an assent to liberty of conscience from theological despotism. Luther stands out in history as the herald of the right of private judgment in matters of religious belief. That matter was settled, and went upon the records, stamped with the seal of blood, three centuries ago. Now does Prof. Adler not see that the next step in order is to push the right of private judgment still further, into the domain of conduct and morals? and has that not been the order ever since the Reformation? The whole civil and social history of Europe and America bears witness to it. What are the chief questions to-day which have interested the intelligent pulpits and parlors? The moral propriety of woman's taking part in politics, the morality of opening the libraries on Sundays, and the morality of scores of demands on the part of woman. The case of E. H. Heywood, just released from Dedham jail, is one exactly to the point. The editor of THE INDEX admits that the private life of this gentleman is as clean as any man's in Massachusetts. It finally amounts to this, then, that Mr. Heywood believes a certain social order to be most conducive to purity and virtue, while Mr. Abbot believes that such social order would be most conducive to impurity and demoralization. One is just as sincere in his belief as the other. They appeal to the "new religion," and what does its head and President say? "Radicalism has one plank where it tolerates no difference of belief: that plank is purity." But whose purity? Has not Mr. Heywood as good a right to his purity as Mr. Abbot has to his? Do you mean to set yourself up as an infallible judge as to what is purity, and then call the system which tolerates no choice on Mr. Heywood's part free religion?

In all sincerity, I confess that I have seldom seen a man stand in so humiliating a position as did Prof. Felix Adler when he uttered those unfortunate free religious bulls. If his following endorse such moral intolerance, then I for one declare free religion to be the most dangerous sect in the community; for we look to professed liberals for better things.

But without trespassing further, Mr. Editor, I beg you to be tolerant towards these candid utterances. I have set my heart upon seeing a thoroughly liberal movement inaugurated in this great land of promise. It is in a spirit more of grief than anger that I have permitted myself to presume so far upon your temper and toleration.

HENRY APPLETON.

CATHOLICISM AND PROTESTANTISM.

CAMDEN, N.J., Dec. 18, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I hope the enclosed articles will command your interest.

About the World extract, you might note that Father Preston does not at all agree with the Catholic priest (mentioned in your last extract from the Religio-Philosophical Journal) who claimed that Catholicism no longer has any fight with Protestantism. It remains to be seen which of the two ecclesiastics the more truly speaks the spirit of the Church. That Catholics and Protestants will one of these days unite to crush what they choose to call "infidelity" is little to be doubted. To a degree, and in one view, they do it now; but the time will come when scepticism will assume grander growth than at present, and then the Church will make one more effort to hold her possessions. In what shape this will be wrought, no prophet can foretell; but I think it certain that, when that time comes, as it surely will, a common feeling and purpose will sweep away all the present nice distinctions between Romanism and Protestantism, and will combine all the power of the two great sects into one compact body opposed to progress. Then the stars will twinkle over some great events!

Yours most sincerely,
HORACE L. TRAUDEL.

Arraigning Protestantism.

DR. PRESTON DECLARING THAT THERE IS NO CHOICE BETWEEN INFIDELITY AND THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The uncommonly plain language in which the Rev. Thomas S. Preston, of St. Ann's Catholic Church, attacked the tenets of the Protestant doctrines, at the first of his series of Sunday evening lectures against Protestantism a week ago yesterday, drew an immense audience to St. Ann's last evening. At 7 o'clock, the galleries and vestibules were thronged; at 7.15, the crowd overflowed into the street; and at 7.30, when the sexton clapped his hands,—a signal for the ushers to swing open the pew-doors and to throw down the bars that had been placed across the aisles on the lower floor,—there was an eager scrambling for seats. The aisles were crowded to the doors with persons standing in them when service opened. During the short preliminary mass, Father Preston sat in the shadow of the altar, at the left, fumbling his manuscript, over which he bent his white head occasionally with a quick, nervous movement. At the close of the mass, however, he tossed the manuscript on an upright book-rest, adjusted his glasses, and with a firm step advanced to the centre of the altar. The address, delivered in a clear, ringing voice and without the slightest hesitancy, held the audience in close attention for more than an hour. The subject was, "The Results of the Protestant Reformation," which were, he said, the destruction of the morality of society, of the Christian Church, and of the Christian creed and faith, and could be so proven by the professions of the Reformers themselves. By advocating the doctrine of predestination, thus depriving man of free will in relation to matters between himself and God, Protestants, he said, denied the possibility and hence the necessity of good works. Such was yet the doctrine of the followers of the Reformers. Infidels were now seeking to govern men by humanitarianism or materialism, the principles of which were the legitimate results of the teachings of the Reformation. The Reformers had argued for a change because the Church had erred in faith. But was it not the Church of Christ? and if so, could it so err? If it erred, then Christ had broken his word given when he said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." If Christ had broken his word, he was not worthy of confidence; yet they themselves declared him worthy of confidence by accepting a new Christianity out of his hands. They had rejected the established custom of worship through a visible agency, and prostrated themselves before an invisible one. Division on every side was the natural result, which meant a destruction of Christian faith. Individuals were not only permitted, but were encouraged, to make their own creeds, and there was no possibility of unity of belief in Protestantism. The Bible itself was not a guide to faith, since its pages take the color of the individual reader's education or ignorance. There were a few Protestants who believed in the divinity of the Scriptures, but they necessarily based such a belief on the creed of the Catholic Church, which alone had claimed for them from the beginning a divine origin, and which alone pretended to be infallible. Protestantism had torn the Bible to pieces, and by private interpretation had virtually declared it to be "of straw."

"In conclusion," Dr. Preston said, "I wish to make two remarks. The first is, that the doctrine of the Protestant Reformation contains the germs of the broadest infidelity. Any one who adopts it must become an infidel. In providing for your spiritual welfare, therefore, you must choose between this infidelity and the Catholic Church; between rationalism, which under the garb of religion is a movement that leads to the destruction of faith, church, society, and creed, which no human mind can measure; an infidelity foul and indiscriminate,—and Christian faith. The Catholic Church stands against this paganism, declaring the unity of God, and the Vatican begins again, 'I believe in God alone, maker of heaven and earth.' The second remark is, that God was not the author of this Protestant dissension, nor of the variations in religion which flowed from the Reformation. They who learn of him must do so in the face of his incarnate son, at the altar of this Church; they must lay aside infidelity and rationalism,—the scourges of our day,—and turn to God. Then they will be true to themselves and to their reason, for reason and faith go hand in hand."—N.Y. World.

OATHS AND PERJURY.

There are two elements in an oath,—the human and the divine. It is with the former only that human laws deal. At all events, perjury is punished, not because it is a crime against God, but because it affects the interests or rights of human beings. A man may go before some officer, duly authorized to administer an oath, and swear, every hour of his life, that he is twelve feet tall, and no human tribunal can punish him for perjury. It is only when false swearing occurs in the course of some legally authorized proceeding that human laws interfere. It is generally supposed, first, that he who has summoned his God as a witness will be careful to utter absolute truth; and, second, that God will punish more severely the violation of an oath than an ordinary falsehood. The correctness of the first supposition is doubtful. The leopard does not change his spots; the liar maintains his character, no matter how solemnly he may swear that he will speak the truth; and nearly every trial of a cause furnishes proof of the fact that he who is accustomed to bear false witness against his neighbor in the every-day affairs of life will pay little regard to the sanctity of an oath. When the peers of England declare upon their honor that they will fairly try the issues presented to them, they are as certain to prove faithful to their obligation as those who make the like declaration before their God. The second supposition is manifestly absurd. Will one human being who has by a false declaration taken from another human being his life or liberty or property deserve or receive any greater punishment from his God because he has made such false declaration after listening to a formula called an oath, and kissing a book called the Bible? Surely He who searches the heart; He who considers the motive; He who, summoned or unsummoned, is ever present, will mete out the same punishment to a falsehood which is intended to injure others, whether or not that falsehood be contrary to the obligation imposed by a form of words.

But if the oath is to be retained,—and a superstitious majority seems to be in favor of retaining it,—then at least it should be so administered as to appeal most powerfully to the superstition of those who take it. How is the oath commonly administered in our courts? Who understands it but those who have already learned it by heart? A prayer to the Deity would not be rattled off so volubly; and yet an oath is certainly as sacred and solemn as a prayer. Is it not possible to so administer the oath that he who utters it shall feel that he is performing a sacred ceremony, and he who takes it that he is incurring the most solemn obligation? Might it not be well for the judge to relieve the clerk of a duty which is evidently regarded by the latter as rather tedious mummery? An oath properly administered, however opinions might differ as to its necessity, would at least have the advantage of solemnity, which it now does not have.—J. H. Hopkins, in the Albany Law Journal.

JANET: "Mamma, dear, what time in the day was I born?" Mamma: "At two o'clock in the morning." Jack: "And what time was I born?" Mamma: "Not until eight o'clock." Janet: "Ah, my birthday is longer than yours, Jack." Jack: "What's the use of being born before it's time to get up?"—Punch.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.	13 to 25	26 to 51	52 to 100
10c	8c	6c	5c

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEPHENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wesson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Ellis Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeble Under Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wesson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 25 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined list, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	1.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 11 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist, With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with "Patience".....	1.00
Story Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man, 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Henslow.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Middlemarch, 2 vols.....	3.50
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.50
The Name. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Joseph Smith, Jr. Edited by Adolf Blair. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.50
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREYS (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.). Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MISS HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.). The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By John F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	4.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.....	2.50
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann, by his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Works than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Lockyer.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., readable cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	3.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	1.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	4.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	11.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	1.50
The Classic-Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
London, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Dicks Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	6.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Air.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Addresses before British Ass'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterburg.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.25
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.00
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.*THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher, 84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

$12 WATCHES for only $3 each.

A bankrupt stock of watches, warranted for one year. This bankrupt stock must be cleared out in 90 days. The former price of these watches was $12.00 each. They are silvered case and open face, all one style, and of French manufacture, the movements of which being well known the world over for their fine finish. They are used on railroads and steamships, where accurate time is required, and give good satisfaction. Think of it, a $12.00 watch for only $3.00, and warranted one year for time!

CINCINNATI, O., May 31, 1877. The Walters Importing Co. is an old established and very reliable house, and we cheerfully recommend them.

After the closure of sale of this bankrupt stock of watches, which will continue 90 days from date of this paper, no order will be filled at less than $12.00 each; so please send your order at once. With each watch we furnish our special warranty for one year, for accurate time. We will forward the watch promptly on receipt of $3.00, or will send C. O. D. if customers desire and remit $1.00 on account.

Address all orders to WALTERS IMPORTING CO., 149 Elm Street, Cincinnati, O. Watch Speculators: We call particular attention to these watches, as they sell readily at from $12.00 to $20.00 each.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES.

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what extent has it helped or hindered civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is known and what is guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Paganism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address B. F. UNDERWOOD, THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD

Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Cecily Outfit Free. Address TAUN & CO., Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues of the day, and the most valuable of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn, AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BEY FORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.*GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, O. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 303 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN*ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878. ... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ... E. O. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOTRY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. BARNETT,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gamett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

Reason and Revelation, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

Proceedings of the F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING*NEW BOOKS*For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kruenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchate; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament (in preparation). Price $1.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 253 pages. Price $1.50.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Society of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 281 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION: with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 634 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lecture). 25 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School. The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY*INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES. Same style. Price $1.35.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS*OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. ABBOT, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 120. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 24, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of mankind in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JAN. 9, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 472

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION ON THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THE LONDON Athenaeum states that George Henry Lewes has left behind him as much manuscript as will add two additional volumes to his Problems of Life and Mind, which will be published under the editorial revision of his wife, "George Eliot."

COLONEL HIGGINSON is to contribute to the Literary World a series of critical and descriptive papers entitled "Short Studies of American Authors." They will be unquestionably both valuable and interesting, and will lend a new attraction to that excellent journal.

A LITTLE BOY has just been fined three dollars and costs in Malden, Massachusetts, for skating on Sunday. Here is a good opportunity for a little practical work by the Malden Liberal League. The plea that the boy was disturbing public worship cannot be urged; his punishment can only be justified on premises of an Orthodox-religious nature. How long shall Orthodoxy be suffered to infringe in this manner on the rights of the whole community?

MR. CHARLES BRADLAUGH announces himself, in the National Reformer of December 22, as again a Parliamentary candidate for the borough of Northampton; and he enumerates the principles and measures which he means to work for, if elected,—“separation of Church and State” among the number. Of course he will be forthwith accused of “dictating” to the borough and of trying to “put it in his pocket.” Nevertheless, we hope he will be elected.

MR. GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE is master of a peculiarly nervous and trenchant style. In a late number of the Secular Review, he says: “I am for fighting error in the open, and against assassinating by starvation. I would not put an opponent’s eye out before I attacked him. I am not on the side of the cowardly toleration which is afraid of error. It belongs not to the knighthood of Freethought to fight with lean and famished error. I prefer to fight with it when it is fat and well fed.”

REV. J. P. NEWMAN, D.D., well known a few years ago as pastor of the Methodist church in Washington usually attended by General Grant, made this astounding declaration in a recent sermon at Cleveland: “Christian countries are all prosperous. All the original discoveries in science have been made by Christian people. Never was an original discovery made by a man who was not a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ.” If it is Rev. Dr. Newman’s special mission to make Christianity ridiculous, he is faithfully performing it.

REV. E. P. TENNEY, President of Colorado College, spoke recently in Boston “on the social and educational condition of the people of New Mexico and Utah. Concerning New Mexico, he described the enterprise of the Jesuits and the potency of their influence in the political affairs of the territory. This society, he said, has entire control of the public educational funds, and, believing the American school system to be wrong, they consistently did all they could to abolish it and substitute parochial schools. After a brief statement of the number and character of the population of New Mexico, he gave some interesting points about Mormonism. Remarking that it was quite generally supposed that with the death of Brigham Young the institution would begin to decline, Mr. Tenney said there were several elements in it which promised its existence for generations to come. The secret of its success was the power of its leading men to conduct a gigantic land speculation. They sent missionaries to Europe with lists of people who had emigrated to Utah from certain localities. The missionaries going to these places would tell the former neighbors of the emigrants that each of their old friends was in possession of forty acres of land and a comfortable home, and that equal benefits would be bestowed on all who join them. These people, who knew nothing of the United States homestead law, supposed the land was the gift of the Mormon Church, to which they were accordingly grateful. Accepting the offer they were better off materially than before, and generally got a better religion.”

A CALIFORNIA paper says: “Rev. Otis Gibson, missionary among Chinamen, is taken to task by the Congregational Conference for unsound views on the providential purpose of Chinese immigration, and for misrepresenting his successful conversions to sustain his theory. The estimable visionary advocates encouraging further importations of Chinamen on the ground that ‘the Lord sends them here to be converted.’ The Conference denies any such purpose, and in proof of it says that facts give cause to despair of converting Chinamen. ‘How many of two hundred thousand Celestials that have been here give proofs of real conversion, with the unceasing efforts of missionary eloquence?’ The universal answer is, ‘Not one.’ The truth is, our religion is not adapted to Celestial wants, nor to Chinese comprehension. ‘Therefore,’ says the Conference, ‘their presence is an injury to Christianity, and some other providential cause must be sought for the infliction of this great evil.’ To which Mr. Gibson says, ‘If the views of the Conference are sound, it shakes my faith in the saving power of Christianity.’ The actual results are industrial and commercial only. Returning Chinamen carry back to their country skilled knowledge in a hundred new industries, and new tastes, promoting commerce. Presently this will be seriously felt. Meantime their moral law embraces all of our own code, and Confucius, centuries before our laws were promulgated, taught morality in a fashion better adapted to his countrymen’s acceptance than we can render it, though essentially they are identical. Rev. Gibson is a true man, but he goes astray by sectarian interpretations not warranted by existing circumstances.”

THE SUNDAY question has been brought up in this city in a manner which shows that Orthodoxy is not essentially changed in spirit. Says the Advertiser: “The newspaper men of this city who are members of churches in ‘good and regular standing’ are disposed to take issue with the action of the Young Men’s Christian Associations this week on the subject of Sunday observance; and they will have a good deal of public sympathy. The incident that led to the discussion was this: A gentleman prominently connected with one of the daily papers, having moved from the neighborhood of the church to which he belonged, took a letter to a church of the same denomination, and asked to be admitted. The standing committee refused his application on the ground of ‘Sabbath breaking,’—his business requiring him to spend a portion of each Sunday in preparing ‘matter’ for his Monday’s paper. There has been a difference of opinion in the church as to the propriety of this action; and one hesitating brother, who raised the question at the meeting of the associations above named was advised to ‘vote “no” every time’ on such applications for church fellowship. The church-going journalists who dissent from this action are asking, with much natural feeling, if the Church wants the sympathy and influence of the secular press, and yet none of its brotherhood? Will the Church ‘harness the devil as the Lord’s beast of burden,’ and yet proclaim its consistency? It is an issue, they say, that concerns not only the active Christian workers who are employed upon the daily press of Boston, but a host of others who are being prayed for, that they may be drawn into ‘the household of faith.’ The hearty applause with which the vote above mentioned was received showed the radical temper of the meeting, and opens up a suggestive field of inquiry for those ministers and congregations who like to have their Sunday services reported, and demand all the daily news at Monday’s breakfast.”

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Frederick, Md.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SOURNEMANN-POT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
HON. B. F. ELSENTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. HANUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mich.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ KELLNER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Birmingham, Ala.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. HALLIE HOLMES.	Lottsburgh, Pa.
JOSEPH MCDONOUGH.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
A. J. WILCOX.	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.	C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California.	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GALT, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GRIDGINS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. D. WATKINS, Kent.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. CLARK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	E. A. SAWYER, Boston.
Michigan.	KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.	C. D. B. MILLS, Obolena.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.	R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	L. SPALDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SEBAQUE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

A LITTLE GIRL, returning from church, where she saw for the first time a collection taken up, said: "A man passed round a plate that had some money on it, but I didn't take any."

A RUTLAND farmer found a potato-bug on his dinner-table the other day, and thus to the bug he ejaculated: "Good heavens! have you got to have your potatoes cooked this year?"

The State of the Nation.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

It was formerly the custom at least twice a year, on Fast day and at Thanksgiving-time, for teachers of religion to remind their hearers that they were not only individuals, not only members of a family circle, or of a church or town community, but also citizens of a great nation, and to invite them to consider the state of the nation, if haply, so considering, some path of public duty might be made more plain, some public sin be dragged to light, some public danger be proclaimed in time to be averted. This custom has never fallen into entire disuse, but since the war for liberty and honor, and the immediately succeeding agonies of reconstruction, the preacher has been more content than he was formerly upon these special occasions to dwell in a region of sentiment, to be poetical about the grapes and corn, and to leave questions of a more special nature for the newspapers and the politicians to debate and settle. The reason for this change is obvious to some extent. For many years before the war the idea generally prevailed in ministerial minds that there was really but one national sin, and that the sin of slavery. And although it was sometimes a test of courage for the minister to say his plainest word about this sin, aware that A or B, perhaps his wealthiest parishioner, was inwardly making a running commentary on his performance which sometimes became audibly profane, yet the courage demanded for such utterance was not so great as if the sinner had been there before him in the pews. Then, the long smouldering volcano having broken out into the fierce wrath of civil war, the special occasions were improved by pulpit orators to criticize the generalship of Burnside or McClellan, or to insist that the government should use its war-power to make an end of slavery. Still further on, the preacher found his occupation in demanding that the reconstruction of the South should be upon the basis of equal rights for all. This also having been finally accomplished, it must be confessed that the preacher soon began to find it much more difficult than it had been to deal with public questions in his pulpit. The question of a proper currency became more and more the uppermost question in the political sphere, and this question is not one the right and wrong of which appear so plain to the average mind as of other questions which had preceded it. The preacher might well feel suspicious of his ability to adjudicate upon so critical a matter, when close at hand in the community were men of equal practical sagacity, equally able to succeed in practical affairs, who nevertheless differed as widely as possible concerning the engrossing question of the time. And so his function has been more and more confined to personal ethics, with an occasional raid upon the civil service or a (generally) too indiscriminate attack upon the honesty of our public officers.

All this has been very natural, and perhaps unavoidable, but in the meantime the nation has been "sounding on, a dim and perilous way," now swerving this way and now that, and finally, to all appearance, it has quite irrevocably declared itself for that financial policy which seems to me the policy of simple honesty. It is neither here nor there whether the national financiering was wisely managed amid the overwhelming excitement of the war, and under the enormous pressure of those immediate necessities which it imposed upon us. There is the simple fact that under that pressure, amid that excitement, we made certain promises; and having made them, and upon the strength of them furnished ourselves with the sinews of war, there is nothing left for us to do but keep those promises, let come what will; and every man in the United States ought to prefer to live as simply as his father and grandfather did before him, and simpler if need be, rather than that the promises which the nation made should not be kept to the last syllable; and so they would, the poorest first of all, if the appeal had been made, not to their selfishness and envy, but to their honor and their truth.

"So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When duty whispers low, 'Thou must,'
The heart replies, 'I can.'"

But if the preachers have of late been more reluctant than formerly to enter on considerations of national duty and danger, the voice of criticism and of prophecy and warning has not failed us utterly. Rather has it made itself frequently and loudly heard, and it has been no "lovely song of one who has a pleasant voice and can play well on an instrument." Beyond the angry surge of war we thought we saw the smiling gleam of a millennial time; but like the crusading children whose "Jerusalem the golden" turned out to be a squalid hamlet swarming with thieves and harlots, so has what we took to be the goal of our desire proved to be but a single stage of an illimitable journey which still lengthens out before us, hundreds of weary miles. Never, it is safe to say, since we became a nation has there been so deep a tone of national distrust as there is now. Lying upon my desk as I wrote this sermon was a Thanksgiving sermon written more than a hundred years ago. It was preached December 15, 1774, by Ezra Stiles, the great grandfather of my friend William Gannett, the President of Yale College, and the most distinguished minister of his time. It is a manuscript sermon, but the writing is still legible enough, although the hand that wrote it has so long been dust. "It is the darkest day," he says, "that ever America saw." The first Continental Congress had met in Philadelphia only a few weeks before. And it was dark enough. But the darkness was from the overshadowing cloud of British tyranny. The light within the people was not darkness yet, and now we know that darkness held within its bosom the promise of our national independence. Many a time since then have men been ready to take up those words of the old revolutionary preacher and say, "It is the darkest day that ever America saw." And more than once, no doubt, it has been true. But every time the darkness has been a forerunner of the light. And every time till now, the danger seemed to come either from some power outside the State or from some party in the State which threatened it with ruin. Never before has there been prevalent, as there is now, a very wide distrust, not only of the fundamental character of our republican institutions, but, which is the saddest thing of all, of the moral fibre of the American people. Men are saying, The institutions are good enough, only they are too good for the people. They require virtue for their successful operation, and virtue is not to be had. The rich care only for their riches; the poor care only to do as little work as possible for the most pay they can browbeat their employers into giving them. This sort of talk and feeling is not so much here and there as it is everywhere. It is, you might say, in the air. But now and then it is condensed into some newspaper or magazine article of unusual force, which attracts much attention and does much to increase the amount of pessimistic thought and feeling in the community.

The extent to which this thought and feeling enter into individual minds is dependent very largely upon subjective conditions. "To him who wears a shoe," the saying is, "it is as if the earth were carpeted with leather." So long as a man's own business and digestion are first-rate, the chances are that he will take a very cheerful view of the political and social situation. But let his business or digestion get into a bad way, and straightway he is haunted by visions of general bankruptcy, and communism, and so on. For the most part, too, theories of radical social reform are generally the offspring of the involuntary idleness of cultured men whose self-esteem obliges them to suspect a fundamental weakness in the structure of society in order to account for their individual misfortunes. They cannot conceive it possible that in a well-ordered society, even if in a well-ordered universe, persons of their ability should not have everything they want. And as the involuntary idleness of cultivated men is the seed-garden of radical social ideas, so the wide field in which these ideas are broadcast is the involuntary idleness of uncultivated men, who if they had work enough to do, and consequently bread enough to eat and clothes enough to wear, would have neither the time nor disposition to inflame themselves with vague anticipations of a general breaking-up of the existing order.

Nevertheless, we must beware lest our own well-fed optimism obscure for us the facts. Making all due allowance for subjective bias in men's estimate of the political and social situation, the fact remains that in the state of the nation there are at present a good many things which are not as they should be, and which may well excite the interest of the most thoughtful men. And by the state of the nation I do not mean the state of the government. One of the hopeful signs of the times is that so many are coming to see that the nation and the government of the nation are not equivalent terms. The nation is the total life of forty millions of people, and more, here in America. The government, or rather the administration of the government, does not include, national and State together, the official life of more than half a million people, if so many. And this distinction between the government and the administration of the government is another distinction that we ought to learn to make. The best governments are capable of reckless administration. The government of England now is the same that it was a dozen years ago. But the administration is very different; in Gladstone's day it was ministerial and parliamentary, now it is almost wholly personal. Men talk about our government as if the system of official patronage were an essential part of it. But it is nothing of the sort. The election of John Quincy Adams in 1829 was to all intents and purposes a party change, and yet John Quincy Adams only removed two civil officers out of the thousands under his control, while Andrew Jackson, his immediate successor, removed hundreds and thousands. I do not mean that administration is everything, the form of government indifferent. Some forms of government are premiums upon official tyranny and corruption. But the best form of government that can be devised is capable of maladministration, as the best locomotive that was ever built is capable of running a whole train-load of passengers into perdition if a drunken engineer and fireman have it in charge. I do not doubt there are details of the American government which can be improved. But take it as it is, and let the administration of it be of corresponding wisdom and justice, and there shall not be a government on the face of the earth that shall insure so much security of life and property, and so much general happiness, as ours. Ay, even as it is, with all the maladministration, it is the best government to live under that the sun shines upon.

The administration of the government is one factor in the state of the nation, but it is not exhaustive of the whole. As one factor, however, it is an important one. And I shall not deny that in the administration of our government there is abundant ground, not for despairing of the republic, but for the deepest sorrow and humiliation. There is, however, little need for me to say anything upon this head, the whole subject has so recently been canvassed here by one who is the most earnest and eloquent antagonist of our present system in the whole country. And I need not remind you how conclusively Mr. Curtis proved that this system is neither essential to our republican form of government, seeing that, until the time of Andrew Jackson, that incarnate mob, we never had any such system, nor to our method of party politics, seeing that England has this method just as much as we, without our monstrous system of official patronage. But there are other evils in the administration of the government besides the maladministration of the civil service. Theoretically our government is a government of the people, by the people, for the people. Practically it is not exactly this. It is a government of the people, by the caucus, for—the Lord knows whom. We must vote for the candidates nominated by the caucuses, or our vote is thrown away. The moral is, that if a man would have political influence, if he would have his unit count, he must attend the primaries. But here again the individual is a mere puppet. A set of candidates has been agreed upon beforehand. Everything has been cut and dried by a few ignorant but very knowing persons in the back parlor of some retailer of wine and lager-beer. "What are you going to do about it?" The individual alone can do next to nothing. But honest men of force and pluck can so combine that they can counteract to some extent the back-parlor oligarchies. If they do not, then we may well despair for the Republic. The Nation, which would be infallible if its council could make it so, says that men of force and pluck will not combine to secure honest administration; that they would rather be plundered by political rings than take the trouble to break them. If it is so, then the most pessimistic view of our political situation is likeliest to be true. That form of government cannot be devised which like a perfect crystal shall exclude from itself all impurity. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This ancient saying has not yet lost its point. But I have faith that there are men of force and pluck in all our cities, towns, and villages who, once they realize the situation, will go to work to mend it with a will. Here is a splendid opportunity for you young men to break up the monotony of your too joyous lives or the dull apathy of your habitual amusements. You rejoice in athletic physical sports. Here is a chance for an athletic mind; sometimes, perhaps, for an athletic body too. Here is occasion for you to brace and measure yourselves against the ignorance and criminality of the community. The future of America is in your hands if you are equal to the task imposed upon you by the present emergency, if you can rise to the high level of your glorious opportunity.

One of the saddest things in our political situation is the draining off of the best talent of the country from the sphere of politics into the sphere of mercantile activity. Time was when the best men in the community, the most able, the most cultured, looked to the political arena as the one place which they would choose wherein to exercise their gifts. For a long time this has not been the case. The acquisition of wealth has had superior attractions to the acquisition of political power. But now that wealth has proved a dead-sea apple in so many hands, I can but hope that once again our best young men, upon the very threshold of their career, will set their hearts upon the acquisition of political power, and, to the end that they may be worthy custodians of it, I would have them give the best part of their mental energy to studying the science and the art of government, and especially to making themselves acquainted with the origin and development of our own political system. One day, while I was at my bookseller's, a man came in, and said, "Have you got any book about money?" He had been elected to Congress only the day before, and he was going to read up! Here was a specimen of the men who do our financial legislation. And yet we speak of professional politicians with a sneer. Why, the desideratum of the time is a class of professional politicians, men with political ambition, but not less with political culture and political enthusiasm, and stern resolve that the political administration of America shall not always be the sweetest consolation of monarchs and aristocrats across the sea; nay, but a herald of their doom.

We want here in America not only a class of professional politicians, men educated to the science and the art of government as carefully as physicians are educated to the science and the art of medicine and lawyers to the science and the art of law, but also a class of educated journalists who shall make journalism as much a profession, and as honorable a one, as divinity, or medicine, or law. Journalism is to-day the one great force in our American life. In power and opportunity it is what the pulpit was one hundred years ago. The newspapers make and unmake the politicians. But they are seldom leaders of thought. They lag behind the average intelligence and moral sentiment of the community. They consult expediency instead of justice. They are organs of party, not of the spirit. They do not keep both eyes for truth, but always one for the subscription-list. They do not lead, but follow, popular sentiment. Let this decree that General Grant or General Butler shall be the next President, and one by one every Republican or Democratic paper, as the case may be, will fall into line and discover that the candidate has all the cardinal virtues; or, under the plea of "principles, not men," conveniently forget a hundred doughty editorials of which the inspiring theme, and justly so, was, "Men are incarnate principles." To say a thing in such a way that just the opposite thing can be said three months hence without apparent contradiction is journalism considered as a fine art. The press is nothing if it is not oracular. Men quote to me as if they were infallible the judgments of the press on this book or that picture, when the chances are the criticism is written by a callow youth who confounds Edmund with Herbert Spencer, and but for the name in the corner could not distinguish between a painting by Alma Tadema and one by Gustave Doré. No matter how little the journalist knows about anything; if he can talk about it as if he knew everything, he is all right. The newsboy becomes a reporter and the reporter an editor, his grammar and his rhetoric debauched by having read newspapers and nothing else. And so it happens that although the press is a great power, it is a power for evil quite as often as for good. What we need is a profession of journalism, the training for which shall combine all the details of printing and of office-work together with many years of special study upon history and social science. I know of one young man who is training himself for journalism in this way. First a practical printer, he next acquired a first-rate college education, and now he is studying hard, especially in American history, drenching himself with its facts and its philosophy, and fitting himself thus to be a real teacher of his fellow-citizens. There must be many others of whom I do not know, but there ought to be hundreds of young men in America to-day at work in this direction, and sooner or later there must be if American journalism is going to be a savor unto life and not unto death. What I have now said is broadly true, but of course there are particular exceptions. There are journals which are representative of both culture and conscience, and this because men of culture and conscience sit in their editorial chairs.

The decay of patriotism in America is a notable sign of the times. But though Dr. Johnson said, "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel," the saying is not any truer than a hundred other of his sayings,—the offspring of ill-temper and defective culture and a narrow mind,—if it was intended to impeach the value of patriotism and not merely the value of the scoundrel. "O Liberty," said Madame Roland, "how many crimes have been committed in thy name!" and yet she did not doubt the good of liberty. Religion has from first to last been the cloak of innumerable hypocrisies, and yet religion is no worse on this account. We need an avatar of patriotism, a new birth of it, here in America. It need not be narrow and provincial. It need not be concealed. It need not blind us to our faults; nay, rather it may make us lynx-eyed to search them out. Mr. Emerson has written recently, "Let the passion for America cast out the passion for Europe." But there are some things in Europe we ought to have a passion for. I cannot sympathize with Emerson's desire that we should have a distinctive American dress and architecture and literature, and so on. Let us seek the best everywhere. At the same time I do detest the sycophantic way in which we wait for foreign verdicts on our American products. English enthusiasm did not prove Joaquin Miller a true poet, and English depreciation cannot prove our noble Whittier anything but one. And I would have a "passion for America," and not only a passion for her honor and her righteousness, but also a passion for her beauty and prosperity, and for her history, and for her literature, and for her heroes and statesmen. We can afford to laugh at the suggestion that the Yosemite was purchased for a national park "in order to show what sort of natural scenery can be produced under a republican form of government," and still be very proud of the Yosemite and the White Mountains and the Adirondacks and Niagara. Spread-eagleism has had its day, but I should like to have a little more of that good, healthy sense of national glory and achievement of which the most cultivated English writers do not seem to be ashamed. We have become much too shamefaced and apologetic. Let us acknowledge every fault and failure and still, upon the whole, dare to confront the civilization of the world with an unblushing front. The worst of our mistakes and crimes can easily be paralleled, if not surpassed, by contemporary mistakes and crimes of England and the Continent. The wonder is we are no worse, so many of their exasperated citizens have taken refuge on our shore. Yes, let us have a passion for America; and to this end let us begin to impress upon our children's minds in earliest youth the history of our national career, teaching full soon their lips to lovingly recite the ballads of our homespun heroism and heroic men. It is the disgrace of our higher education, for the most part, that it gives ten times as much attention to foreign and ancient as to American history, when it ought to give ten times as much to American as to foreign and ancient. Surely never was history more full of romance or adventure, noble excitement, generous inspiration. It only waits the genius of a Green or a Macaulay to make such a tale of it as shall keep "children from their play and old men from the chimney-corner."

The distrust and fear which have of late succeeded to our former confidence have fastened with special violence upon universal suffrage as the bane of our political life, the promise of our irretrievable dismay. But wherever this is already established it is safe to say that it will not be disestablished. With popular sentiment more rampant than it has ever been, no franchise that has been already given to the people is going to be withdrawn. Try it, and see what thunder you will have about your ears. And however ill-qualified thousands of voters may be, especially in our great cities, nothing is surer than that they are far less dangerous where they are than they would be on the outside of the body politic. The ballot is a convenient crater for volcanic passions that would else set the whole social continent to rumbling, undulating, and disgoring under our feet. But the inevitable corollary of universal suffrage is universal education. First, last, and always this must be insisted on. And the universal education must include some elementary instruction in the principles of the American government and the facts of its development. And lest the schools, especially the sectarian schools, should fail to do their duty, the State or national government ought to be so far paternal in its office as to see that every home is well provided with some simple instrument for such elementary instruction. These failing of their duty, it remains for individual effort to direct itself to such an end. Would that to this some elementary instruction might be added in the principles of political economy! If this had always been a part of our common-school education, I think we should not now have hundreds of thousands of people imagining that the government can create labor or manufacture wealth, any more than we should have a tariff which fattens eight millions of people upon the flesh and blood of thirty-four millions, and defies the principles which have been established science in the region of political economy for a whole century.

Another count in the indictment of the social pessimist is that the average morality of America has for some years past been deteriorating very rapidly. This count must be allowed, and the worst thing about it is that the deterioration is of that virtue which is the binding cement of all true society,—the virtue of integrity. It is not contended that the vices of intemperance and licentiousness have grown upon us. The facts, if we could get at them all, would probably show that in these respects we have been getting on. But whereas crimes of sensuality and intemperance were venial at the beginning of the century, now crimes of dishonesty are so. The abuse of public and of private trusts has been a startling feature of our recent social and political life. And what has been done on a large scale by national and State and county financiers, and by bank presidents and insurance managers, has been done on a small scale by people everywhere. In the hard times of 1867 people who could not earn but fifty cents a day lived upon fifty cents a day and gave up all their little luxuries; ate bread without butter, and drank coffee without milk. Now the same class of people earning $1 a day live at the rate of $2 a day, and let the grocer and the butcher pay the balance. Now they must have the best of everything, money or no money. This is the rule, but here again, of course, there are exceptions; men and women starving everywhere rather than eat the bread of charity or that for which they cannot pay.

It is easy enough to account in some degree for these diseased and moribund conditions of our social life. They are to some extent, to a considerable extent, the offspring of those "good times" of the war when, with a currency monstrously inflated, wages were high, money was plenty, and extravagant expenditure was the order of the day. Those were the times when bounty-money, which should have been as sacred as the lives it symbolized, vanished "like the dew of heaven on the cliffs of Foulah." Women who had never had a ten dollar bill of their own in all their lives before spent hundreds in a few days of glorious shopping. Contractors for the government earned thousands and millions of dollars in a few months or years. And then came the reaction. The bounty-money had been spent. The real estate shrank to a fraction of its original nominal value. The need of plain living became every day more evident. But the habits of extravagance engendered by the abominable "good times" were not easily altered. The luxuries and dainties must be had, paid for or not paid for. Hence defalcations on the right hand and the left; hence general defect of honesty, and with this the loss of self-respect and ever deeper shame. Alas! the blood of our young heroes was not the dearest price we paid for national union and emancipation!

If we had had here in America a type of religion preeminently moral, insisting above all things upon righteousness, it is quite possible that the destructive energy of an inflated currency might have been counteracted. But in fact, the prevailing type of our religion has been and is preeminently unmoral; it insists upon righteousness, not first of all, but last of all. Salvation is the principal thing, and righteousness has nothing whatever to do with the matter of salvation. This depends not upon character, but upon faith in the atoning merits of the blood of Jesus. If this religion had been a development of recent times, it would have had but little influence in the working out of our social problem. But it was on the ground when the demoralizing influences of the war, or rather of its attendant circumstances, first made themselves felt. It was in the grain of the community, de facto by centuries of preaching and teaching and ecclesiastical routine. And being what it was, it was a religion which, instead of counteracting the evil influences of the abominable "good times," conspired with these for the destruction of our moral life. The natural corollary of not paying one's own moral debts was not paying one's own business debts. If mercantile morality had nothing to do with salvation, why be so very anxious about mercantile morality? No wonder then that, almost without exception, the abuse of sacred trusts, the squandering of other people's money, has been the fault of men of highest evangelical repute, of marked religiosity, active beyond all others in their respective churches, "shining like stars in the firmament." No wonder that when the demoralization of the abominable "good times" was joined in marriage with the doctrine of salvation without character, the children born of such a marriage have been Dishonesty and Faithlessness.

There is another sign of the religious aspect of the times which demands some brief consideration. The old theology has lost its hold upon the more intelligent and cultivated people in America. But in the majority of cases, instead of boldly declaring their convictions, these keep up a show of Orthodox belief and worship. If now and then they have a twinge of conscience and consult the rector or the minister, he confesses privately that he is very much of their opinion. Asked to read a certain service in a certain church, I declined. "Why," said the gentlemanly warden, "two-thirds of the congregation put their own construction on these words. Why can't you do the same?" And so we go. The ignorance of the community is still implicitly devoted to the popular theology. The intelligence of the community keeps up an appearance which has no basis of reality. It is this state of things which might well make Ezra Stiles exclaim, if he were living now, "It is the darkest day that ever America saw."

To these phenomena of mercantile dishonesty and unspiritual religion add the phenomena of widespread discontent prevailing in the industrial classes, the communistic schemes that form the staple of a world of senseless talk and lawless aspiration, which would make the general government a gigantic soup-house and compel its legislation to reflect the shifting sentiments of the untutored population, together with the spectacle of ignorant or malicious demagogues appealing to all that is most selfish, mean, and sordid in the human heart,—and you have a horoscope which is not so cheerful as might be; which is indeed, and to no small degree, discouraging and ominous of ill. To cry peace, peace, when there is no peace is not the part of wisdom certainly. But no more is it the part of wisdom to exaggerate the popular discontent. The greater part of it is superficial, caused by the stress of present suffering and the enforced economies of our return to honest ways from our excursions into the illimitable void. Let there be honesty and frugality, with the readjustment of labor so that the overstocked departments of trade and manufacture shall make over their surplus to the short-handed agriculturists, and with the return of general activity, even without the false and lying appearance of prosperity which we have left behind us, Kearney and his fellow-demagogues would, if I am not mistaken, find their occupation gone. For the rest, our hope of rescue from the vague unrest or practical result of communistic speculations lies in the education of the whole community, not merely of the poor and uneducated, but of the rich who have the form without the substance of enlightenment. When men of much apparent culture and intelligence advocate the conversion of our city government into a great labor bureau, as if the city had a private mine and mint at its disposal, or as if the burden of taxation were not already greater than the majority can bear, it is a sign that ignorance of the first principles of political economy is not confined to manual laborers, but is an omnipresent evil. But there is intelligence in the community which only needs a challenge sharp enough to prove with overwhelming force that this great reformatory idea of a paternal bureaucratic government is one which we have been painfully disengaging ourselves from for hundreds of years; one which has always been the stepping-stone of tyrants to their thrones; and one which has ever been "the first and therefore the falsest that meets the mind when it begins to reflect on the reform of human society." If, with all the hoarded learning it has got from centuries of experience, the aggregate intelligence of modern society is not able to meet the great reformatory idea of a paternal, bureaucratic, communistic government in a fair field and "give it all it wants," then it deserves to be humiliated to the last degree. Well said John Milton, "Let Truth and Falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth to be put to the worse in a free and open encounter?"

But the quarter from which I expect the greatest help in the solution of this labor problem, as we call it, is practical, not intellectual or argumentative. For it is from the justice and the faithfulness of individual men who in their various positions of responsibility shall carry themselves so wisely, so forbearingly, so tenderly, that they shall not only convince those in employment under them that the interests of capital and labor are identical, but shall make them each and all apostles of this doctrine up and down the land.

And yet it well may be that in all these formless discontents and foolish aspirations, there is the promise and the potency of some more equitable distribution of that wealth which is the joint product of capital and labor than we have yet attained unto. I am by no means sure that the exact relative value of the brains and hands concerned in all manufacturing is fairly expressed by the relative profits of the employer and employed. The world is still young, and it would be very strange if we had got already to the highest point attainable in these concerns, and need not keep our minds open and receptive to some further revelation.

Moreover, in these discontents and aspirations, may there not be a hint that our political economy, though excellent in its own sphere, does not exhaust the social problem in its entirety? Within the sphere of political economy it is a lawful saying, "He that will not work shall not eat." But there are those who cannot work, and even of those who will not, the unwilling will is sometimes a disease as positive as cholera or typhus. These are phenomena of which our political economy takes no account. So then our social science, inspired by our Christianity or such other religion as we have, must take account of them. Here is the sphere for our paternal government. It is not for men and women "full-summed in all their powers," but for the weaklings and the drones; those to be cared for with a divine compassion, these to be dealt with firmly and compelled to earn their right to live.

It is not, then, to be denied that in the state of the nation, considered not merely as a working government but also as a society of upwards of forty millions of men, women, and children, there is much that is not as those who love America would have it, much that is ill and portentous of yet greater ill to come. And in all the horoscope the most baleful star is that which ought to shine with the most cheerful light, the pole-star of religion. And yet I cannot doubt that out of all these sorrows and distresses the Spirit will yet lead us up and on. "He will bring upon us fear and dread and trial. He will torture us with the tribulation of his discipline, till he try us by his laws and test our soul. Then he will strengthen us and make our way straight for us and give us joy."

But one word more and I will end your weariness. It may be that you are asking, If these things are so, what ought a man to do who would acquit himself right manfully? Some hints I trust I have given on the way, but the one thing that he should do, and can, is to see to it that one single individual, namely himself, in the midst of whatever falsehood, is true, in the midst of whatever dishonesty, is honest, in the midst of whatever insincerity, is sincere, and that, in the midst of whatever religion of glorified irresponsibility, his religion is to him first and foremost a principle and law of righteousness. So doing, happily it shall be made plain to him how he can help in other ways to make America a righteous nation whose God is the Eternal.

DEAN STANLEY ON AMERICA'S FUTURE.

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS ON DECEMBER 16 BEFORE THE BIRMINGHAM AND MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

In comparing the growing history of the present with the possible history of the future, may I be allowed to use a figure which I employed in one of my farewell speeches to my kind American hosts? In that memorable hour—memorable in the life of every one as the moment when he first sees the Pyramids of Egypt or the Alps of Switzerland—when I first stood before the cataracts of Niagara, it seemed to me that the scene which I witnessed was not an unapt likeness of the fortunes of America. It was midnight; the moon was full, and I saw from the vast bridge which spans the river the ceaseless contortion, confusion, whirl, and chaos which burst forth in clouds of foam from that central chasm which divides the American from the British dominion, and as I looked on that ever-changing movement, and listened to that everlasting roar, it seemed an emblem of the fermenting, perplexed, bewildering activity, the ceaseless, restless, beating whirlpool of existence in the United States. But into the moonlight sky there rose a cloud of spray twice as high as the falls themselves,—silent, majestic, immovable. That silver column, glittering in the moonlight, seemed an image of the future of American history,—of the upward, heaven-aspiring destiny which should emerge from the distractions of the present. Let me explain in a few words wherein that pillar of light has an historical substance in fact, which may lead us to hope that it will not vanish away with the morning light, but may continue to guide the coming times of the United States.

And for this purpose I select three points, drawn from the history of the past, which conduce to confidence, which, if not without "trembling," still "rejoice" always, and on which I venture to insist, because they bear practically on an educational institution like this.

First, there is the marked peculiarity apparent almost from the first, the singular buoyancy and elasticity both of the national and individual character. It may be the product of their brilliant, exhilarating, invigorating climate; it may be the accompaniment of the vast horizon opened by their boundless territory; it may be partly the youth of the nation, on which I have so much enlarged in this address; but its existence is unquestionable. If at times there is something almost of levity in the readiness with which misfortunes are thrown off and life begun over again; if at times the more sober part of the nation is depressed by the sense of the difficulties which they have to encounter; yet, on the whole, this spring of vitality, if turned to good account, must be of incalculable value in this working world, where the imagination still plays so large a part, and where so much is given to confidence of victory, even more than to victory itself. If, perchance, the United States have too much of it, we, it may be, have too little; and this confidence of Americans in their own political, ecclesiastical, and social system is a warning to us to rise above those doleful lamentations with which in these days we often hear citizens and churchmen and Christians of England despair of our country, our church, and our religion.

Secondly, there are the elements of that character which they possess in common with the English race, with which their past history shows it to be in so many respects identical. In spite of some dark and sinister features in both countries, there is on the whole the same keen appreciation of the delights of pure domestic life. In spite of the lawlessness which is perhaps the inevitable outburst of the evanescence of communities not yet fully organized, there is on the whole in the mass of the people something of the same self-control and common-sense and love of freedom and obedience to law on which we pride ourselves, and which we are glad to recognize in our descendants. And these points of contact between the mother-country and the daughter-States not only are themselves encouraging, but they derive additional force from the guarantee which they give that the union between the two, though severed by the Revolution of the last century, is in the essential elements of character and social sympathy yet unbroken. We no doubt may have much to learn from America; but if this closeness of sympathy and homogeneity of race is still maintained, they will always have something to learn from us, and will, we trust, be not unwilling to receive it. It is a solemn responsibility which this recollection of American history impresses upon us, that as we were their fathers, so, in large measure, we are responsible for them,—our children; responsible because they sprang from us, but yet more responsible because our good or evil actions still produce a direct impression on their susceptible minds. Commercial dishonesty, blind political partisanship, demagogic stratagems, frivolous luxury in English society, are a strong incentive to any like vices which appear in the kindred stock; and, on the other hand, every attempt on our part to maintain refinement of manners, truthful dealing, a policy that does not tend to popular fashion, simplicity, and self-control in social life, act and have acted with immense force in promoting the like virtues beyond the Atlantic. "It is the spirit of the British constitution," says Burke, "which, infused through the mighty mass of the English settlements, pervades, feeds, unites, invigorates, every part, even down to the minutest." Our kinsmen beyond the sea may be flattered for the moment by being told that they are a nation stronger and greater than we. But they have too much sense, they know our joint history too well, to repudiate or disparage their English parentage and their ancient home.

Thirdly, with them, as with us, in spite of the overwhelming forces of uneducated or half-educated ignorance and fanaticism, there is the chance that the voice of the reasonable few may more and more make itself heard. It is in literature (and for this reason I call the attention of this Institute to the fact) that this voice is chiefly to be heard and felt. The literature of America is still young; but that small but select band who are its leaders have exercised, and still may exercise, a controlling effect by their increasing identification with the better elements of the nation. It was Washington Irving who first knit together those bonds of family and domestic sympathy between England and America of which I have just spoken. After the violent disruption which tore us asunder, he had the grace and courage to diffuse his own kindly and genial feeling from his sunny cottage on the banks of the Hudson through the lurid atmosphere which had been produced by the successive wars of 1775 and 1812. Westminister Abbey, Stratford-on-Avon, and Abbotsford were transfigured in the eyes of Americans by his charming Sketch Book, and from that time has set in the pilgrimage of Americans to our English shrines which has never ceased, and which cannot but render any future dislocation of the two countries more difficult. Bryant, Longfellow, and Whittier have done perhaps even a greater service by touching with the sweetness and the light of their poetry scenes perhaps before hardly known, in the natural objects and the historic splendor of their own country. Bryant, to use the words of a distinguished American ecclesiastic, first entered the heart of America through the Gate Beautiful. When we see the Green River, and the rocky slopes of the hills of Berkshire, we feel that he did for them something of what Wordsworth effected for the lakes and mountains of Westmoreland. Longfellow and Whittier achieved their fame, not only by those poems which appeal to the general instincts of mankind, and are entwined with the sacred recollections of Europe, but they also attached themselves directly to the legends of the early inhabitants of the northern continent, and to the stirring scenes of the great conflicts both of America with England, and of the Northern and Southern States. The romances of Hawthorne, which connect themselves with Italian life, may to us for the moment have the most interest, but those which shall possess the most enduring value are the strange scenes of New England in the streets of Boston and of Salem. Such pathetic and elevated sentiments, so intermingled with national sentiment, must have a share in raising the nation above the rustic murmur of parochial or municipal life into the great wave that echoes round the world. And yet further, it is not only in this more subtle and indirect manner that the writings and the voices of the few may guide the opinions and passions of the many: it is by those direct lessons of wisdom and moderation which now and then the few have the courage to utter, and the many have the good-sense to welcome. In these latter days it has been sometimes implied that the uneducated classes are always right, and the educated classes always wrong.

THE NEED OF A HIGHER INSPIRATION.

But in every neighborhood, and not least in this great centre of popular life, from time to time we meet with instances which reveal to us, as with a lightning flash, the need of higher inspirations. The most widely spread and deeply rooted of popular illusions in our time received, if I mistake not, its first mortal wound when an eloquent voice from Birmingham, beloved also in America, had the boldness to denounce it as a groundless and miserable imposture. And in the close of the eighteenth century it is never to be forgotten that the last of the Pilgrim Fathers, as we may call him who was forced to migrate for conscience' sake from England to America, took refuge in the solitude of Pennsylvania, driven hence, not by king or bishop, but by the illiterate mob of Birmingham,—the illustrious martyr of freedom and science, Joseph Priestley. We all now acknowledge that the mob was wrong, and that the few who would have tolerated Priestley were right. This ultimate deference to mature knowledge and generous sentiments is as useful to cultivate in the institutes of our great English towns as in the United States of America. It was only this year that the venerable sage who stands at the head of American literature ventured in a lecture on the "Fortunes of the Republic" to point out one by one the salient faults of his countrymen, to express his certainty that their civilization is yet incomplete, that it has not yet ended or given signs of ending in a hero. It is this modesty, this sense of incompleteness, that entitles him to close with the expression of the calm trust in their future. "Our helm," he says, "is given up to a better hand than our own. Our little wherry is taken in tow by the ship of the Great Admiral, which knows its way, and has the force to draw men and States and planets to their goal. Such and so potent is this high method by which the Divine Providence veils the chiefest benefits under the mask of calamities, that we shall not by any perverse ingenuity prevent the blessing."

In like manner it was one of the most striking features of that banquet at Salem, of which I spoke at the beginning of this address, to hear the impassioned recitation of a vigorous ode by a gifted sculptor and poet, a native of that American village, but well known in this country and in Europe, who spoke to his countrymen words of terrible remonstrance, which were received, not with reprobation and aversion, but with significant and universal applause. He evidently had in his mind that abstraction of the higher order of characters from public affairs which, though happily not yet seen among ourselves, is said to prevail at least in the Northern States of America. He blamed

"The careless trust that happy luck
Will save us, come what may,—
The apathy with which we see
Our country's dearest interest struck,
Dreaming that things will right themselves,
That brings dismay.
"No! things will never right themselves,
Tis we must put them right."

He rebuked those who

"Apart in selfish silence stand,
Hating the danger and the wrong,
And yet too busy to uplift their hand
And do the duties that belong
To those who would be free."

He called on the

"Noble men and true,
High, low, young, old, wherever you may be,
Awake! arise! cast off this lethargy,
Your ancient faith renew,
And set your hands to do the task
That freemen have to do."

He bade them

"Cleanse the Augean stall of politics
Of its foul muck of craft and wiles and tricks;
Break the base rings where commerce reeks and rots,
Purge speculation of its canker-spots."

He bade his sleeping country rise

"And forward go upon the path
Of its high destinies."

Words like these, so uttered and so received, cannot but beget a hope that the country for which they were written, and in which they were spoken, has yet within it the instruments of regeneration, and the germs of future greatness. And as they give a forcible, perhaps too forcible, representation of the dangers and the hopes which lie wrapped up in the history of America, so also, conscious of that affinity of which I have before spoken which unites the two countries together, I venture to quote them here in the feeling that by analogy they are applicable also to England. Not only they in their youth and freshness, but we in our green old age, need to be reminded that we, also, in spite of our long ancestral traditions, and "the ancient inbred integrity" of the English nation, have kindred dangers threatening us on the right hand and on the left. Our safety, like theirs, lies in listening to the voice of those few noble souls and high intelligences who rise above the passions of party and the sordid interests of the moment; who have the wisdom not merely to denounce, but to discriminate; and the desire not merely to preserve or destroy, but to improve and bring to perfection the inheritance committed to our trust.

MORMON AND GENTILE.

The recent appeal to Mrs. Hayes and the women of the United States from the women of Utah opposed to plural marriages, praying them to use their influence for the suppression of polygamy, excited public attention and sympathy. It was a concise, earnest document, setting forth the degrading effect of polygamous practices as existing among the Mormons of that Territory, and the duty devolved on the women of the country of doing all in their power to relieve their sisters from the yoke of that bondage. The appeal, however, has scarcely excited so much feeling elsewhere as in Utah, and particularly in Salt Lake City, where the Mormon wives have lately held a mass meeting in the Theatre, to protest against the representations made by their neighbors who have not the felicity of sharing a husband's affections with other women under the sanction of a "celestial marriage."

This meeting was called to order in the Theatre at two o'clock in the afternoon, and organized by the choice of Miss Eliza R. Snow as chairman. The other officers were married women. The first exercise was the singing by the choir of a hymn of which this is the first stanza:—

"O saints, have you seen, o'er yon mountain's proud height,
The day-star of promise so brilliantly beaming?
Its rays shall illumine the world with its light;
And the ensign of Zion, exultingly streaming,
All nations invite to walk in its light,
And join to maintain the proud standard of right.
The standard of Zion! Oh, long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

The opening prayer was by Mrs. Precindia Kimball, who prayed that "everything might be done on this great and solemn occasion for the honor and glory of God"; that God would remember in mercy this free country, the President, and all its rulers, the governors of each State and Territory, and especially "our delegate to Congress, who is about to go to Washington; that he would uphold the principle of celestial marriage, which he had revealed in these last days for the good of the human family, notwithstanding the persecutions of those who sought to overthrow it." Then came another hymn by the choir, which had a decidedly martial spirit:—

"Up, awake, ye defenders of Zion!
The foe's at the door of your homes;
Let each heart be the heart of a lion,
Unyielding and proud as he roars.
Remember the wrongs of Missouri;
Forget not the fate of Nauvoo;
When the God-hating foe is before ye,
Stand firm and be faithful and true."

Miss Snow, the chairman, made the introductory address, explaining the purpose of the meeting. As "saints of the living God" who had been persecuted, driven from their homes and from place to place, and now living in the valleys of the mountains, they who had been misrepresented claimed the privilege of representing themselves, and as "true and loyal American citizens" they claimed the protection of the government under which they lived, and the free exercise of their religious rights. This maiden defender of polygamy bore her testimony as follows:—

"I am proud to state before this large and honorable assembly that I believe in the principle of plural marriage just as sacredly as I believe in any other institution which God has revealed. I believe it to be necessary for the redemption of the human family from the low state of corruption into which it has sunk. And I truly believe that a Congress composed of polygamic men who are true to their wives would confer a far higher honor upon a nation, and would perform better service to their country, than a Congress composed of monogamic, unreliable husbands. Virtue is the foundation of prosperity of any nation; and this sacred principle of plural marriage tends to virtue, purity, and holiness. Those who represent the women of Utah as ignorant and degraded are aiming to bring evil upon us, or they know not what they are doing."

Mrs. Bathsheba W. Smith read a brief address, expressing surprise that they who had come to the Territory through much tribulation, "because they loved God and the principles of righteousness," should be obliged to assemble to vindicate themselves against misrepresentations by their "Christian sisters who have arrived here at so late a date and for so different an object." She spoke with fervent zeal of the husbands whose burdens they were appointed to carry, and was followed in a similar spirit by Mrs. Zina D. Young, who recited the hardships they had endured for conscience' sake, and dwelt affectionately upon the happiness of their much-married condition.

Mrs. Hannah T. King said that in youth she had a passionate longing for this land of freedom. She was married early in life, and peace and plenty surrounded her habitation. When she heard of the Latter-Day Saints, she consulted no one but God, and earnestly studied their principles in connection with the teachings of the Bible, and found they corresponded in every particular. She and her daughters, beautiful and educated in all the refinements of the world, came to this country and cast in their lot with the despised people. Her husband did not join with her, but she never heard him say or hint a word against the order, even when his daughters entered into it. Mrs. Margaret T. Smoot said she was nearly seventy years old, and had been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints forty-four years. This aged woman spoke earnestly:—

"With regard to the principle of plural marriage, I wish to say that I have had experience in its practice over thirty years. I am the wife of a polygamist. His other wives and his children by those are just as much a part of his family as I and mine, I being his first wife; and his other wives are just as lawful and honorable in the sight of God as I am, and his children I consider to be just as lawful and honorable as any children born in wedlock. These are not only my feelings, but I know them to be the feelings of many others who occupy a position like that which I occupy, and I believe them to be the feelings of this whole community, who would, if they had the privilege, speak in their own defence. We have the noblest of children and the happiest of homes. I would be willing to compare my husband's family with anybody's family, to see what defect could be found in them. Our sisters, ladies of other persuasions, have spoken of us as being 'degraded.' They do not know us; we are not understood; our principles are not understood; neither are our motives known."

Other addresses were made by Dr. Romania B. Pratt and Mrs. Phoebe Woodruff, who said she was brought up to regard strictly the principles of monogamy, and when the order of celestial marriage was introduced in the church she thought it the most heinous thing she ever heard of, and opposed it with all her power, thinking she was doing right; but reflection and prayer made it manifest to her that it was of God, and that it came as a principle of salvation to the women of this generation; and now if she is proud of anything, it is that she accepted the principle, and remained with the people called "Mormons." Resolutions presented by Miss Annie Wells were adopted, setting forth their rights under the Constitution, asking for the passage of the sixteenth amendment, establishing woman suffrage, claiming the privilege of living unmolested in the social condition they had freely chosen. It is impossible to doubt the sincerity of these women. Their speeches bear the stamp of earnest feeling and conviction, and furnish another evidence of how completely delusion may take possession of impressionable persons, especially if it clothes itself in the garb of religion.—Boston Advertiser.

WHY MICHAEL ANGELO PUT HORNS ON HIS MOSES.

Why did Michael Angelo put the horns on the head of Moses? The answer is found in a wrong translation, by Jerome, from the Hebrew into the Latin Vulgate, which is the accepted Bible of the Roman Church. In our English version of the Bible, three times in the Book of Exodus (chap. xxxiv., 20, 30, 35), it is said when Moses came down from the mount "his face shone"; and the common impression probably is, that his face was all over radiant, as if rubbed with phosphorus in a dark night. The Hebrew language, however, like almost all of very early date, is in many respects what may be called an object language; that is, its terms are not so much abstract as taken from and expressive of visible forms. And the Hebrew word here used is a word expressive of shape, and signifying both a horn and a pencil of light; for as the horn of the oriental buffalo and a pencil of light were both conical in shape, the same word was used for each. It is the same word that is used in Habakkuk (chap. iii., 8 and 4), where it is said: "God came from Teman, and the Holy One from Mount Paran; and his glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise; and his brightness was as the light; and he had horns coming out of his hands,"—where the version should have been, "His very hands radiated light, or had rays—pencils—of light streaming forth from them."

Now Jerome, in translating the passages from the Hebrew of Exodus, made the Latin Vulgate say of Moses, as he came down from the mount, that his face, or head, was horned, or had horns on it, when he should have translated it, "His very face, or head, radiated light," sending forth its beams to the view of all Israel. In each of the three verses of Exodus, the same word is used by Jerome in his version. In the 29th verse he makes it read, "When Moses came down from Mount Sinai, he held the two tables of the law, and knew not that his face was horned"; in the 30th verse, "Aaron and the children of Israel, looking on the face of Moses, saw that it was horned"; and in the 35th verse, "They saw the face of Moses, that it was horned." And as the Vulgate was the Bible of the Roman Church, and the only version familiarly known to Michael Angelo, when he turned, as he naturally would, to the book of Exodus for a description of the appearance of Moses, and found that the verses we have quoted described him as horned or having horns, then, to be true to the language of Scripture, he put these horns on the head of his statue of the great law-giver of Israel. So strangely may one wrong translation mystify and mislead for ages interpreters as well as artists.—Sunday Afternoon.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"TOO HONEST TO PRAY."

A radical friend of mine, in a moment of mental depression being urged to embrace Christianity and give himself over to prayer, replied: "Impossible—I am too honest to pray!"

Too honest to kneel before altar & throne
And look for a harvest where nothing is sown;
Too honest to call himself vile and abject
When Nature says: "Thou art God—at and up erect!"
Too honest to close his eyes, making day night,
Since error is darkness and truth alone light;
Too honest to ask for a heavenly cure
For ills that humanity loves to endure;
Too honest to ask for a crust or a cup,
While rain cometh down and grain cometh up;
Too honest to pray that eternal decrees
Be changed as a creature of moments may please;
Too honest to call for a balm from above,
While earth is all budding and blooming with love;
Too honest to dream of a life of pure bliss,
While workers and helpers are needed in this;
Too honest and brave in the battle of life
To falter while thousands are breasting the strife;
Too honest to think of an armor of prayer,
While bravest of bosoms go naked and bare;
Too honest to reach for a crown, e'en in thought,
While those that are nobler of hearts have naught;
Too honest to rob mother-earth of a tear,
While human hearts bend o'er the pall and the bier;
Too honest to long for a realm of the blest,
While hope is alive in humanity's breast;
Too honest to cry for a savior to save,
While brothers go down 'neath the tide and the wave;
Too honest to cringe 'neath the lash of the priest,
Too human to tremble like fear-stricken beast!
Then give your brave answer whenever you can,
For more faith in God meaneth less faith in man.

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28, 1878.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 4.

Joseph McDonough, $3.30; W. N. Clark, $3.20; Seth Hunt, $3.30; D. M. Martin, $3; Charles Nash, $3.35; E. M. Smyth, $4; J. Ellenbass, $5; Mrs. S. C. Eastman, $7.50; Wm. A. Graves, $1.75; William Barrian, $15; Charles Zeigler, $3.50; O. C. Ogleston, $1.35; James Thompson, $3.15; Lucy S. Richardson, $3.40; Urray A. Taft, $8.25; Dennis Murphy, $2; F. W. Brigham, $2; A. B. Hulse, $3.20; Mrs. J. E. Langdon, $3.20; William Roth, 80 cents; Charles Apple, $3.25; E. R. Honey, $10; W. A. Thurston, $1.60; Mrs. C. T. Appleton, $3.20; Miss S. P. Beck, $3.20; Wm. G. Babcock, $3.20; Rev. Amos Smith, $3.20; W. R. Cole, $4.27; J. Churchill, $3; F. P. Partridge, $1; Rev. A. B. Camm, $3.44; James Mauck, 75 cents; Joseph Marsh, $3.50; Alex. F. J. $3.20; Mrs. Lucy E. B. Job, $3.20; A. B. Tuttle, $3; Hon. R. Bellow, $3.40; W. W. Wilcox, 10 cents; George Riker, $3.50; J. C. Owen, 50 cents; Prof. F. E. Nipher, $4; F. W. Christensen, $3.20; F. E. Sibley, $3.20; Richard Cogar, $3.44; G. G. Briggs, $7; Wiley Britton, $1; Noah Green, $3.50; Jacob S. Howes, $3.50; E. O. Avery, $3.20; Spencer L. Bally, $1.70; M. A. Blanchard, $1.20; L. F. Langley, $3.20; J. G. Holmworth, $3.20; Dr. L. F. Foster, $3.20; A. E. B. $3.40; M. A. Bartlett, $1.50; W. L. Rabb, $13.50; Dr. E. Wigglesworth, $3.20; Walter C. Wright, $3.20; Hon. Ada Thayer, $4.40; Miss M. Hovey, $13.50; J. Demarest, $32.54; Prof. W. C. Russell, $3.27; F. Warren, $1.40.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, JAN. 9, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON OFFICE, No. 85 MONROE STREET; J. T. FANEY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIJAH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUMER, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELLEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On Page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

MR. WASSON has kindly sent us a communication relative to our remarks on his recent essay before the Chestnut Street Club. It will appear in our next issue.

A MOST USEFUL tabular view of the "Growth of the Hebrew Religion," including Kuenen's and Davidson's approximate dates of the component books of the Old Testament, and giving an admirably clear synopsis of Israelitish history and literature, can be obtained from the compiler, Rev. W. C. Gannett, St. Paul, Minnesota, for only five cents.

MR. HORACE L. TRAUBEL, of Camden, N.J., sends this message under date of December 31: "I have just read Mr. Hinckley's address in the last INDEX, and I feel that he has made a powerful plea for 'reform.' I have my doubts about the wisdom of the League split, but do not at all question the 'reform' principle of itself. To it I rigidly adhere. I cannot see anything more wrongful in laws against obscene literature than in like statutes against murder, arson, and their fellow crimes."

MR. GILES B. STEBBINS, of Detroit, in a letter to the Chicago Religio-Philosophical Journal of January 4, infers from "the irrepressible conflict between Spiritualism and Materialism" that the attempt to unite the two in a common organization is futile and mischievous. He prefers the policy of strict sectarianism for Spiritualists in their meetings and publications. This he has an undoubted right to do. But we cannot concede his right to blame those who favor a larger and nobler policy, especially when he falls into misrepresentations of their opinions and conduct.

AN OHIO subscriber enclosed to us recently the following slip from a Cleveland paper: "At the afternoon session of the State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association, Rev. Dr. Payne, President of the Delaware College, delivered an address on religious education. He declared the Bible should be the principal text-book in every college, and claimed that no educator could do his whole duty to the young under his charge without being a practical Christian. He claimed that non-religious colleges were doing great moral harm by sending out as graduates men who were in effect infidels and non-believers in Bible truths."

THREE SCHOOLS OF ETHICS.

This little note from a life-long and venerable friend of human liberty touches a problem of perennial interest:—

FRIEND ABBOT:—

The question raised by Miss Taylor in the last INDEX, "whether, under any circumstances, it is right to falsify," suggests the following question: "What constitutes wrong in all cases?" Is it not the doing of something that will injure yourself or some other person? That which will benefit some and injure no one is what constitutes right action. If this definition of wrong is correct, then her question and all questions of conscience can be readily answered.

Yours fraternally,

WILLIAM GREEN.

WEST NEWTON, Mass., Dec. 27, 1878.

Surely nobody's definition of "wrong" could be entitled to more deferential attention than that offered by one who has spent a long life in battling with it. Mr. Green's honorable record as an "original abolitionist," his steadfast struggle with wrong in its most horrid guise, lays us all under obligation to ponder well whatever he has to say on this great subject.

Is there any other test of right and wrong actions than their practical consequences? Is the theory of utilitarianism, or the theory of intuitional morals, or some theory different from both, the basis of sound ethical science?

This is the ancient and still mooted question which is involved in Mr. Green's letter, though the discussion is far too wide-reaching to be entertained here in all its length and breadth. The literature of it is immense, and includes the ethical speculations of the world's greatest thinkers. Moral philosophers have been divided into two great schools ever since the days of Plato and Aristotle, and these schools seem as little as ever able to come to an agreement with each other.

The utilitarian school hold that the test of right and wrong is a posteriori, and lies in the determination by the intellect of the consequences or results of action, as tending to benefit or injure—whom? One branch of this school says, oneself; another branch, the greatest number; still another branch, the entire race. Moreover, there is a difference of opinion (at least logically possible) among utilitarians whether the "benefit" and "injury" shall be considered solely with reference to happiness, or to virtue, or to both. But all unite in the general principle that the right or wrong of actions must be determined solely by their consequences as revealed by experience.

The intuitional school hold that the test of right and wrong is a priori, and lies in the determination of the intrinsic quality of actions, totally independent of their consequences, by means of a special faculty supposed to be of a higher order than the intellect or "logical understanding," and called intuition. There are subdivisions of this school also, one holding that the intrinsic moral quality of actions is imposed upon them by the Divine will and revealed to man by Divine revelation, another holding that their moral quality results from the natural constitution of things and is naturally cognized, etc. But they all agree that right and wrong are absolute qualities of actions per se, wholly irrespective of their practical consequences in human experience, and that these absolute qualities are immediately known by a special, peculiar faculty superior to the intellect.

The antagonism of these two schools is probably irreconcilable; certainly no philosophy has yet succeeded in reconciling them. "Experience" and "intuition" have never yet been made to harmonize, by any ethical system of repute, as ultimate tests of right and wrong. The utility of actions, as tending to "benefit" or "injure," can be determined only by an exhaustive study of their consequences, both immediate and remote; their intrinsic quality can only be determined by attending exclusively to the actions themselves and excluding their consequences from all consideration. It is doubtful whether either theoretical test will be found satisfactory in a case of great practical difficulty. On the one hand, it is impossible ever to trace out all the consequences of any given action in their extreme and subtle ramifications; it must necessarily affect, more or less, multitudes of lives in such a manner as to defy the keenest scrutiny, just as a stone dropped in the ocean sends out concentric undulations whose effect on other waves is inevitably lost to sight, but never lost in fact. On the other hand, it is impossible to find in any given action, abstracted from all its actual or possible consequences, such a definitely determined or absolute intrinsic character as to render possible an infallible a priori judgment concerning its rightness or wrongness in all conceivable circumstances; for in matters of conduct, as in all other matters, it is certainly true that "circumstances alter cases." Taken as a guide to duty in real life, we are very sceptical as to the sufficiency of either rule. We are more than inclined to believe that the highest and noblest natures will be found not seldom acting in a manner which can be theoretically squared with neither. Be this as it may, we are convinced that the pertinacious survival of the two conflicting ethical schools indicates that the whole truth is lodged with neither one nor the other of them. There is ethical truth yet to be discovered,—ethical truth, too, of the highest moment to mankind. How is it to be discovered?

Not by disregarding wholly the intrinsic quality of actions, as is done by the utilitarian school; and not by disregarding wholly their concomitants and consequences, as is done by the intuitional school. Neither of these is the method of science, which demands full and complete consideration of all the elements of every problem; and whatever the morality of the future may not be, we are satisfied that it will be at least scientific.

Shall we venture in our turn on a definition of right and wrong? It is a perilous undertaking, but we will run the risk.

Right is such a relation between two or more intelligent and sensitive beings, or between two or more sensitive beings of whom one at least is intelligent, that each shall be secure in the fullest activity of all its natural powers which is compatible with the equal activity of the other or others; and wrong is such a relation as partly or wholly destroys this natural equilibrium. Those actions, therefore, are right which conform to the natural conditions of this equilibrium; those actions are wrong which do not conform to them.

If the definitions here given are correct, it will be seen that the test of right and wrong lies in a COMPARISON between a given action and a law of sociomoral equilibrium which has been previously ascertained. This comparison involves the test of utility, so far as it requires the study of consequences; it involves the test of intuition, so far as it determines the intrinsic quality of conformity or non-conformity with an ascertained law. By substituting a process of comparison between actions and their general law, on the one hand for a mere analysis of blindly conjectured consequences, and on the other hand for a futile search for qualities in an unrelated abstraction, we think that scientific precision is introduced into an otherwise confused and insoluble problem. So far at least, ethics may be safely said to acquire a hitherto unrealized scientific character.

But this is not all. How is the comparison just mentioned to be effected? We answer—by the METHOD OF MORAL EQUATIONS. A question arises, for example, in the mind of A, whether a certain action which he desires to do, but which more or less affects B, is right or wrong. First of all he recognizes the justice and binding obligation of the law that B's rights are exactly equal to his own; he then carefully analyzes the consequences of the supposed action, so far as he can foresee them, to decide whether in any particular the doing of this action will infringe at all upon these equal rights of B, and thus violate the recognized law of moral equality. If not, he then decides that the action possesses the quality of entire congruity with this law, and is therefore right. If he finds, however, that the net result of the action will be to disturb the relation of perfect moral equality which ought to subsist between him and B, he either abandons the action altogether, modifies it so as to avoid this result, or agrees with B beforehand on such a compensation as shall be satisfactory to the latter. The determining consideration in his mind will be the resolve not to do anything which shall disturb that entirely equal relationship between himself and his neighbor, in all that concerns the free exercise of their respective individualities, which is the essential condition of justice, happiness, and mutual good-will. All contentions arise, on one side or the other, in some infraction of this moral equality of rights; and, as a practical guide to conduct no less than as a theoretical principle of moral philosophy, we believe that this method of moral equations will yet become the greatest peace-maker and reformer of a quarrelsome world.

What we have given above is perhaps too condensed and abstract to be readily comprehended in all its deep and wide bearings. Nevertheless, it is the best reply we can make on short notice to our venerable friend's inquiry, and may serve at least to excite further questioning in other minds.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N.B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism, such as the organization of new societies, reports of liberal lectures and meetings, or criticisms of free-thought and Free Religion—would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Carlyle was eighty-three years old December 11.

There are morning performances at all the Parisian theatres on Sunday.

The idols worshipped by Mohammedans are made in Birmingham, England.

In the death of Caleb Cushing America loses another of her representative men.

The Protestant Episcopal Church claims 312,718 communicants, 3,380 clergymen, and 2,900 parishes.

It is reported that Victoria Woodhull has been taken into a Christian church. We reserve our congratulations.

"To what base uses," etc. A minstrel troupe recently gave a variety entertainment in the Newark tabernacle.

No infidel books are published in the Welsh language. The most bigoted people on earth are to be found in Wales.

All the brick and mortar in the city of New York piled together would not, it is said, make a structure as large as the Pyramid of Cheops.

We are sorry to have to record that Massachusetts has not yet advanced beyond the Christian custom of opening her legislature with prayer.

A correspondent of the Pilot thinks that a Roman Catholic would not sin by serving as a member of the School Committee. We should hope not.

Spurgeon believes in the Second Advent of Jesus, and says: "I look for the Lord to come in like manner as he went away; namely, in person."

Beecher says he attended Sunday-school only twice when he was a boy, and that on the last occasion he was expelled for kicking the teacher's shins.

It is a very pleasant thought, beautifully expressed, that "God leads man gradually into the truth." But is not truth here sacrificed to a graceful line?

The four pulpits in Hinsdale, N. H., are occupied by four men whose aggregate weight is nine hundred pounds. There ought to be solid preaching in Hinsdale.

The improvement of human life on earth is the first religious duty of man; and the worth of that life the one great truth to be taught in our pulpits and on our platforms.

Marous, the manager of the Jewish Fair, seems to have "put his foot in it" by saying that he "did not want the Virgin Mary at the Fair." There was no reason to expect such a visitation.

The Hon. Elijah Morse is trying his hand at answering Ingersoll's "attack on the Bible and Christianity." Mr. Morse had better stick to stove polish. He will shine more in that than on the platform.

The Rev. Dr. Preston says that Luther was "a glutton, a drunkard, and a lecherous man." Why not say he was a monk of the sixteenth century? Every one knows what Catholicism meant at that time.

Tuesday's Traveller tells of a case of Christian persecution in Malden. A boy was fined $3 and costs for skating on Sunday. We pity the church that is obliged to resort to such a measure to preserve its institutions.

Francis Parkman's article on "The Failure of Universal Suffrage" is attracting much attention. A translation of it has appeared in Germany, and it has been widely noticed and commented upon throughout Europe. Something may be said on the other side.

The subject of discourse for next Sunday at New Hospitaler Hall, 712 Washington Street, at 104 A.M., January 6, through Mrs. H. A. Cato, will be "The Effect of Placing the Body on Ice while the Spirit is Separated from it, and the Evils arising therefrom."—Banner of Light.

A Catholic "Father" who has been running a bank in Cincinnati has got himself into trouble. Dealing in real estate is at the bottom of it. There is no speculation that is infallibly sure to turn out well, even though the speculator is brother of an archbishop of the Holy Catholic Church.

Mercure D. Conway is soon to give to the reading world a book on Demonology and Devil Lore. It will make two large volumes of one thousand pages. The work is "an historical inquiry into the place the devil has held in popular superstition and theological opinion from an early period to the present."

One of the several new features which will appear during the next year in the Literary World (Boston) will be a series of "Short Studies of American Authors" by Thomas Wentworth Higginson. These papers will be both critical and descriptive, but their subjects will not be announced in advance.

The Rev. Alexander McKenzie in his election sermon stated the truth, when he said: "It is long since the Legislature of this Commonwealth was confronted with more difficult or serious questions than those which are met to-day." We shall wait anxiously to see how some of these questions are dealt with.

They who remember the benefits bestowed by parents are too grateful to remember their faults. They are happy who can return to father and mother the care they received from them in infancy; still happier are they who can return their smiles and caresses, and feel for them the same love they have received.—From the Chinese.

It is said that the manuscript of George Henry Lewes' Life of Goethe did not readily find a patron, but since its publication the work has steadily gained in public favor until it now is conceded to be the best "life" of the great German poet. Bayard Taylor was engaged on a biography of Goethe at the time of his death. The book will doubtless be very popular.

Professor Stanley Jones advocates "good music as an efficient method to wean the people from the temptations to intemperance." If "good music" could be had as cheap as good beer, and concert rooms were as free as saloons, the method might at least be tried. But intemperance is not a demon to be charmed by sweet sound; it is a vice, the fixed habit of indulgence, and is to be cured by the formation of better habits.

The Providence Journal thinks "Boston will be saved by common-sense, so as by fire indeed, but saved, so long as it listens to three such men as Withrow, Brooks, and Hale." This is not the Savior that these three men preach, however. But we readily agree with the Journal that, if Boston or Providence be saved by anything, it will be by common-sense. When men will confess this savior and abide by its counsel, we shall need less preaching.

The Church makes it dark and then offers to furnish man a guide—for a respectable fee. We prefer the light of day to a Christian lantern with which to find our way through life. Faith is a poor substitute for the sunlight of knowledge. The Christian faith seeking to lead modern civilization is like a blind man offering to show the way to a person with two good eyes. It runs no small risk of falling into the ditch, but, as we do not care to share the same fate, we respectfully decline its escort.

A newspaper article lately published in Japan deals with the question, "Of what good is Christianity to Japan?" In considering the moral effect of this religion, it concludes that Japan is rather superior to some Western countries in morals, and does not think that the influence of Christianity would be advantageous. The intellectual inferiority of the Japanese is frankly admitted, but the writer thinks that they can "enjoy sufficient happiness without any religion." As they receive no favor from the Christian religion, they have no enmity against it.

The Month, the organ of the Jesuits in England, is not very hopeful of Roman Catholicism there. It confesses that they are a small body, made up of a "score or two of men of title and property of the higher rank, two or three hundred country gentlemen, fifteen or sixteen hundred priests, a very small middle class and a very large class of poor, a great part of whom are immigrants from Ireland or the children of such immigrants." It says: "Our social and intellectual power, and our electoral influence, are those of a comparatively insignificant community."

The Bible tells man to take no thought for himself. If he does not take thought for himself, it follows that some one else has to take thought for him. We cannot see that shirking is a religious duty. It shows the good-sense of the world that it does not generally follow this advice. The Bible-command is to seek first the kingdom of God,—with the promise that food, drink, clothes, and all the necessities of life will be furnished gratis afterwards! If any one will inform the world how man can win this kingdom, there will be found swarms of candidates for admission. The kingdom of God is on the Continent of Common-Sense, and the key to it is to take care of yourself.

The poor of England, who are in a condition of suffering almost beyond belief, have found a way by which their distress can be relieved. It is to employ the vast revenues of the Established Church to alleviate the sufferings of the laborers who are out of employment. This sensible idea is called by a newspaper correspondent "a frightful thought." But is it not a "frightful thought" to think of hundreds starving, of thousands hungry and cold, half-fed and half-clad; of sorrow driving to crime or madness; of misery seeking a moment's forgetfulness in pleasure, in vice and sin? Better to lose the Church and save the world than to let men and women suffer and die, that a costly establishment may afford ease and luxury to the idle and rich. The next reform in England that justice and love of man require is the disestablishment of the English Church.

One of our city papers feels called upon to stamp out of existence a "worn-out libel" on that pious man, Cotton Mather. The libellous article is in the shape of a letter addressed to "Ye Aged and Beloved John Higginson." In this letter the "Beloved John" is notified of the sailing from London of the ship Welcome with a hundred or more of "ye heretics and malignants called Quakers, with W. Penn, who is ye scamp, at ye head of them." The letter contains this suggestion: "Much spoil can be made by selling ye whole lot to Barbadoes, where slaves fetch good prices in rum and sugar; and we shall not only do ye Lord great service by punishing ye wicked, but shall make gayne for his ministers and people." This letter is called a forgery; but, considering its source, we can say it is bad enough to be genuine. The next effort will be to prove that no witches were hung on Salem hill, and that Roger Williams was not driven out of Massachusetts.

The Churchman in a recent editorial said: "If the whole Church will pray aright for a good ministry, it will get it." Why try to deceive men with this ancient delusion? You cannot get a good ministry by praying, any more than you can get a good House of Representatives. We are told that ministers are divinely appointed, but "divine calling" is a poetical phrase for personal interest. Men do what they like best to do, or what pays them best. No more divinity hedges a clergyman than an oysterman. God does not lead a man to the pulpit more than to the desk or to the loom. The way to get better ministers is to open the pulpit to a better theology and a better religion. As long as the policy of the Church is to refrain from being too honest, it will be troubled with this question that vexes it to-day: "How shall it get a better ministry?" Let young men study with less direction from the past; let there be a lectureship of Common-Sense, another of Reason, and a third of Homesty in our theological schools, and we shall not have to pray to get rid of dull, stupid, and uninteresting ministers.

A church-debt lifter is the popular man in Christendom to-day. Was this what the man did whom Christendom pretends to honor? Did Jesus go around Palestine lifting the debts upon the synagogues? We have a tradition that the man of Nazareth went around lifting fallen men and women. But the soiled Sisters of Charity of this age, and the poor who have to walk the earth by day and sleep in it by night, have no demand on Christian love. Mary Magdalene and Lazarus to-day have to be well-dressed to be noticed by the Church. It does not make much difference how many sins the Magdalene has if she cover them with silk and velvet, nor how many sores are on the body of Lazarus if there be plenty of dollars in his pockets. It is matter of astonishment that the Christian dogmas are believed in an age that is surrounded by the circle of natural sciences. It is a reproach to our knowledge that a priest can get a living in the nineteenth century. It is a stain upon our humanity that we are paying debts upon Christian palaces of worship and letting virtuous families suffer for the necessities of life. We believe in men paying all they owe, but we do not believe in running the world in debt for a house of God. If God wants a house on earth, let him build it. Man has enough to do to build a house for himself. There ought not to be erected in the United States another church building until every man in the country has a good place to live in. It would be a more righteous use of one's powers to help lift the mortgages off of poor men's homes than to free a building from debt that pays no taxes to the State.

Communications.

AMELIORATION OF ORTHODOXY.

AUGUSTA, Me., Dec. 26, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

On visiting a dancing school in this place, which a young relative of mine is attending, I noticed the presence of three or four children of parents belonging to the Orthodox Congregational church here. That this should be the fact, occurred to me as an striking contrast with the dominant spirit of this same church some forty years since, as set forth in a book of two hundred and twenty eight pages, called Scenes in a Vestry. I have just been looking over this little book for the second time, attracted, indeed, by the raciness of its presentations, the keen sarcasm and ability of the writer, who was also one of the chief actors in the drama, as much as by the subject under discussion.

The author was a son of a late chief-justice of this State, and, at the time of its publication, in 1841, was himself a member of the bar, though now, for many years, he has been a clergyman of the Episcopal Church. In the preface, he says, "It is published at the earnest solicitation of friends and others who have become interested in the 'antic tricks' recently played before 'high heaven' by the South Congregational Church in Augusta." "If the reader discovers a good deal of tortuousness (to use a mild term) on the part of the church leaders, he must not be surprised. Persecutions for opinions' sake are set on foot, either from hypocrisy or from a defective or perverted moral sense; in either of which cases, indirection, sinuosity, jesuitism, and downright falsehood may be expected."

It may not be amiss to state that, in these later days, it is understood efforts have been made to annihilate this record, it being speedily given to the flames when falling into the proper hands, and that the copy I have been allowed to see is kept under lock and key for safe preservation.

The church referred to, it seems, was originally established on liberal principles, "recognizing no creed but the Bible, and allowing 'no spiritual interpreter to come between the conscience and its God.'" But, under the ministrations of the pastor then occupying the pulpit, encroachments upon liberty of conscience had been begun. "A lady was remonstrated with by him for allowing her daughter to wear a gold watch"; and another lady who wore flowers in her bonnet was complained of for countenancing the "vanities of the world." Among other things, dancing was thought to be a sore evil, and church action was determined upon to suppress it. But, unfortunately for its success, the persons who allowed the amusement were the "very salt of the church." However, resolutions were passed, declaring it "to be the duty of church-members to refrain from this amusement," and, by implication, not to allow it in their houses.

"It so happened," says the narrative, "that there was a sewing society, composed of misses between the ages of ten and fifteen, that met once a fortnight for the purpose of plying their needles for some benevolent object in the afternoon, and of spending the evenings in plays, among which dancing was included." "In April, 1840, soon after this action of the church, this society met at the house of the lady of the chief-justice, and the eyes of the pastor and those who acted with him were upon her to see if she could have the hardihood to allow this amusement, and thus run counter to their views. The society was allowed to dance for a short time, a daughter and son of the lady, and all members of the church, playing, the one upon the piano, the other upon the violin." "This was a trying time to the church. If they passed by in silence and without rebuke this act, they feared that others would follow this example. But, on the other hand, the lady was one of the oldest members, and of distinguished piety, and they feared the ridicule that would inevitably attach to dragging her to the bar of the church, for infringing, not a divine law, but one that had been enacted some few weeks before by men who could advance no just claims, that we are aware of, to infallibility."

Very soon, at a church meeting, after the "preparatory lecture," complaints were presented against all three of these persons, for the parts they had taken in the dancing, and it was resolved "that they would be expected to absent themselves from the communion until these complaints should be acted upon."

Meetings of the church were held for the trial of these guilty members, a motion to have them public, since the accusations had been so, being lost. The case of the wife of the chief-justice was first taken up, her husband and her son, both highly skilled in the rules of law and evidence, appearing in her defence. The unwilling testimony wrung from the complainants by the cross-examination of these two accomplished experts, bringing out the private caucusing, the tortuous course that had been pursued, the evident determination to carry their points, together with the evident want of any authority to punish for mere opinion's sake, added to the keen sarcasm of its logic,—was indeed pitiable to behold in those who undoubtedly thought they were doing God service. At the same time, the spectator could not but delight in the exhibition of such talent in bringing to light all the bearings of the case, and showing the spirit of persecution from a mistaken conscience' sake. As an ecclesiastical proceeding, conducted with such legal ability, it could not fail to interest almost any reader at the present day. The trial went on, with frequent meetings, for three or four months, without coming to a decision. At length, the chief-justice himself determined with his wife to withdraw from the church. Then came discussions how they should be separated from it, whether by excommunication or otherwise. It was finally "Resolved, that the oversight and relationship of the church towards them should cease." Yet, it was so managed that in the report of the churches of the county, they were included among the "excommunicated."

Evidence being wanting against the daughter, she was simply dismissed and recommended to another church. Then came on the case of the son. Without going into details, this only may be added, that, in the course of the investigation, it being asked, "Didn't he fiddle?" he replied, "He did fiddle, and that he should probably fiddle again, but that when he fiddled, he did not fiddle out of disrespect to the church." The final result was, that "his connection with this church he now severed, and his relationship to it dissolved." The prayer which followed alluded to him as "cut off from the Church of Christ." Thus terminated the discussion of these cases, which had been continued for six months.

A regular attendance at a dancing school for the purpose of learning, and of course practising, the art seems much more worthy of discipline than a little refreshing dance of a few young girls, after their afternoon's benevolent work. And yet it appears there is no objection now on the part of this same church. This is certainly a great change, and, it were to be hoped, illustrative of the general ameliorating process going on in all so-called Orthodox churches. But may not this be doubted from sundry signs of the times,—one among them being the recent refusal of admitting to the church a gentleman connected with one of the daily papers of Boston, on the ground of "Sabbath-breaking," his business requiring him to devote some time on Sunday to preparing matter for Monday's paper? Is not the alarm at the progress of freethought, termed often "flood of infidelity," causing stricter measures among those of the Orthodox faith, and greater efforts for bringing the arm of the law to bear upon those who reject their dogmas, and may not a reverse swing of the pendulum are long bring back a severity of discipline equal to that which the above history illustrates?

The bare possibility of such a retrograde movement should arouse those who are emancipated from the thralldom of such teachings, and "who have tasted of the heavenly gift" of freethought, to earnest effort in diffusing widely a knowledge of that better gospel which they have received. A. H.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

No. XXXII.

The last preceding article ended by an allusion to the objective synthesis, and the subjective synthesis, of universal things. These terms are derived from the positive philosophy of Auguste Comte, and need some explanation. To solve the problem of the universe is to obtain a satisfactory schematic conception of the world and of the relation of its parts. This universal schematic conception is a synthesis, in the mind of the thinker, of universal things, or of the way in which things are.

Any such scheme of things, entertained by us, being necessarily within the mind (whether it also exists objectively or not), is necessarily, in that sense, subjective; but the scheme itself may be conceived in either of two ways, such that they may still be appropriately discriminated as objective and subjective, respectively.

If the world is conceived of from its own point of view, or as it is supposed to be in itself, man taking his place in it only as a minor and inconsiderable portion of things at large, which he is, from that point of view, we constitute, in our thoughts, what is known as the objective synthesis,—assuming that the way in which we think the thing is substantially the way in which the thing is. This kind of synthesis is, however, of several sorts. Descartes attempted such a synthesis on the basis of the mathematics, the abstract ideas of magnitude, figure, and motion; and with algebra as his instrument. The evolutionists of more recent date are now attempting it on the basis of biology (see Evolution and Positivism, by J. H. Bridges, Fortnightly Review, June and July 1877). I, again, discover that the most ancient class of thinkers, founders of the pre-Christian theosophies and mysteries, and, prior to these, of the higher type of ancient philosophy, made the same attempt, also on a mathematical basis, but differing from Descartes by taking, as basis within the mathematics, the first elements merely of number and form,—one, two, three; odd, even; the curve and the straight line, etc. Universology re-discovers, re-affirms, clarifies, and enlarges this latter view, working out from these few simple elements a demonstrative objective synthesis as basis and guide, while, then, it accepts and further elaborates the subjective synthesis (defined below), and ends by integrating the two syntheses, making the new objective synthesis dominant, as the canon of criticism, on the other.

If, on the other hand, the world is conceived of from the point of view of man, and his wants and destiny, taken as the matter of focal and supreme importance, all the rest of the world being ranged as high and low, near and far, according to its relative importance to man (the cosmical subject), we constitute in our thoughts what is named the subjective synthesis. (See Bridges, as quoted above, and Wake-man's address before the Free Religious Association.) This also is of several sorts. The primitive selfish instincts of every individual race and nation begin by a subjective synthesis proper to him or itself. There is not a baby three months old but has a schematic conception of universal things of which itself is the centre, the all-important something, to which everything else is adjunct, and important precisely in the degree in which it tends to subserve the little despot's wants. This is the first type or variety of the subjective synthesis. The second remarkable subjective synthesis is that of the Christian scheme of salvation, or, in other phrase, of the Christian religion and theology. In accordance with these, the human soul is infinitely the most precious thing in existence; to save one's own soul and the souls of mankind is the great work and purpose of all sane thinking and exertion; and "the world," as contrasted with the soul, is "earthly, sensual, devilish,"—a something to be valued, used, or tolerated only in so far as it is indispensable, and its use unavoidable. The third and latest subjective synthesis is that of "Positivism" (Comtean), which, setting aside the supramundane factor, the world to come, otherwise agrees with Christianity (with which in that respect it is strongly contrasted) in making man and his concerns, that is to say, not his heavenly but his earthly destiny, the subject of our supreme concernment,—subordinating the world apart from man to the rank of a mere pediment for him; having no other importance than as it relates to and subserves the needs of his existence.

The doctrine of the objective synthesis, of any grade, is then that which presents, or attempts to present, in the language of Mr. Bridges, "a picture of the universe," man taking his very subordinate position as a minor part of it, a genus, a species, or a mere variety of the animal world; and the doctrine of the subjective synthesis, of any of its grades, is that which presents man with the world as his footstool, or that which, in the language of the same writer, "is no picture of the universe, but only of the relations of the universe to human life."

Further to illustrate these two technicalities which are destined to play a great part in the sciento-philosophic discussions of the future, the objective synthesis is like an occidental map of the world taken as a globe,—which gives no precedence to the locality of the most leading nations, but treats all alike; while the subjective synthesis is illustrated by a Chinese map of the world, which fills nineteen twentieths of the room assigned to it with "the central flowery kingdom" (China), and places all the other nations, England, France, etc., as little islets around the edges. The Chinese, when they insinuated their geography, were, relatively to this earth, situated as the positivist holds that we are situated with regard to the larger world, or universe,—in a state of inability to compass it as it is, and reduced therefore to the necessity of treating it in an incomplete and purely relative manner,—relative to the way in which it more or less particularly concerns us. The subjective synthesis is confessedly very imperfect; but it is the best, it is held, which we can hope to do, with our limited powers.

We have now to observe that the objective synthesis stands correlate with discursive and theoretical methods of thinking; in a word, with metaphysical philosophy and pure science. It is indifferent to the superiority of man over crude Nature, putting everything which is upon the same footing; while, on the other hand, the subjective synthesis stands correlate with practical affairs, with the social destiny of man, and with our duty as rational beings in the world; in a word, therefore, with religion,—whence it is that Comte's philosophy culminates in religion; differing from Christianity, it is true, in not attempting to reach beyond this world, but agreeing with it, as against mere philosophy and science, in making human destiny the focus and centre of all its purposes and exertions.

In a word, the objective synthesis, or a mental picture of the world as it is supposed to be, in itself (with no special prominence or supremacy assigned to man), is characteristic of philosophy and science; and the subjective synthesis, or a mental picture of the world as it stands related to man—to the needs, aspirations, duty, and career of man—(the outer or objective world being merely his pediment or footstool), is characteristic of religion and the practicalities of life; and, in fine, the integral or universo logical synthesis is that which embraces and coordinates these two in a higher unity, subjecting the religious and practical to the guidance of the purely rational,—the purely rational meaning, not a system of general raisonnements about the facts of history and observation, but an absolute metaphysical and logical analysis of the universal nature of things.

The earliest philosophy had aimed at this objective synthesis. John the Revelator had looked to it with confidence, before he became a Christian, to solve the mystery of being. As a Christian, his attention and hope were turned away from this earlier promise, as something disappointing and futile, and fixed upon the subjective synthesis of Christianity. It is the presentation of these two views, and the transition of the author's mind from the one to the other, as the hope of the world, which is the burden of the Revelation.

I now discover, therefore, that the Apocalypse is a divine drama in two acts, grander in conception, and more grandly wrought, from a purely literary point of view, than the Divina Commedia of Dante, but demanding the special key of the ancient hermeticism, to unlock the treasures of its peculiar form of literature. The subject of the first act of the drama is the promised solution of the world's problem (the enigma of existence) through philosophy, and the virtual failure of philosophy to redeem its promise. The enigma is represented by the "book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals (absolutely sealed, ch. v., v. 1.), impervious in all senses to the searching sight of the inquirer. The meagre outcome of the immense promise of philosophy to solve the enigma, and its small and disappointing result (the virtual failure of the attempt to institute an objective synthesis) is represented by the other "little book open" (ch. x., v. 2), sweet in the mouth, but bitter in the belly (v. 9, 10). The subject of the second act of the drama is the real solution of the same problem and enigma, through the new and true religion,—Christianity,—by the marriage of the God-man,—the divinizing teacher and martyr, "our Lord,"—and the prospective divinized humanity, the New Jerusalem, or the Church (John's conception of the subjective synthesis).

The first three chapters of the Apocalypse are a poem or general introduction, and a dedication of the drama to the whole Christian world. The first act extends from the first, or, excluding the poem, from the fourth to the tenth chapters inclusive. The eleventh chapter is a special introduction to the second act, sketching the long period of evil—what Fourier calls the subversive career of mankind—preceding the advent of high harmony. From the twelfth chapter, inclusive, to the end is the second act of this magnificent drama. It bursts upon us, at the opening of the twelfth chapter, with the presentation of the glorified woman, the Church,—the destined bride of the Lord. From this point up to the nineteenth chapter, eleventh verse, the space is filled with the most vivid pictures of the conflicts and conquests of the Church with and over the serpent, dragon, and beast, the old traditional doctrine; and over Babylon, the old and false social order. At this point, the Lord, the Word of God (ch. xix., v. 13), the Logos, the bridegroom, is introduced and duly celebrated. He aids the Church to her final conquest. The beast and the false prophet (another symbol of the prevalent badness of the times) are overcome and imprisoned (v. 20); and the action of the drama now moves on with majestic sweep to its grand dénouement, in the marriage of the KING OF KINGS and LORD OF LORDS with the Church, the redeemed world, symbolized by the New Jerusalem, and the new heaven and the new earth.

We may now return to the consideration of the numerical clauses involved in the drama, including to some extent a further notice of the hermetic numerals at large. The fact that seven means all is admitted on all hands, and has been sufficiently established. Shall we now ask why? Theologians are ready with their assumedly historical answer, and feeble guess: "It is most likely that the idea of sufficiency and completeness became originally associated with the number seven from the Creator having finished, completed, or made sufficient all his work on the seventh day; and that hence, also, it was adopted as a sacred number, a number chiefly employed in religious concerns in order to remind mankind of the creation and its true author." (Kitto, Cyc. of Bib. Lit. v. seven.) Philosophy inverts the order of response, after this manner. It first shows the adequate logical reasons for the values assigned to this and the other sacred numbers by the early or so-called hermetic thinkers, and then points out the fact that the supposed history of creation in Genesis, the rest of God on the seventh day included, is merely the reading of these early philosophic speculations into mythical story.

First, in respect to 7, with its meaning of all, summation, or the whole. This was nothing more than the tradition of the first discovery of the fact that certain numbers are sums or products of other numbers which are factors or parts of these larger and entire sums. Thus 3 is the all or entirety of 1 and 2 (1+2); 7 of 3 and 4 (3+4); and 12 of 3 multiplied by 4 (3×4), or of 7 plus 5 (7+5), etc. This incipency of arithmetic is now for us so simple, so much of the nature of necessary and obvious truth, that it requires a mental effort to conceive that it was, for its day, a great scientific discovery; proclaimed as such; talked of by the learned of that unlearned period; stamped upon the wondering mind of the masses, and so magnified in importance that it remained impressed upon the general public as something marvellous, and ultimately as mystical, magical, and "sacred," long after those early scientists who first made the observation had forgotten it, as anything other than a natural and simple fact.

Almost any number, being in fact the sum or product of certain other and complement of numbers, might be taken as all or whole, and accordingly 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, 10, and 12 occur in the Kabbala in that sense, when the confusion pointed out by scholars for instance in the philosophy of Pythagoras. The 7, however, gained a general and almost exclusive prominence for this idea, except that 12 represented it in a still higher and holier sense, less philosophic and more religious, especially when doubled, 24, or squared, 144, and again when augmented by the usual decimal series of numbers,—140,000, etc. The reason of this predominance of these two numbers 7 and 12, as indices of complete summation, was doubtless the pivotal importance of 3 and 4, the immediate (less elementary and more elaborate) successors of 1 and 2, and the relation of 7 and 12 with these numbers, and with each other, through the fact that 7 is their sum and 12 their product. We are thus conducted back to the question of the qualitative meanings assigned to 4 and 8.

The 4 was the elaborated head (2, the elementary) of the even number series, 2, 4, 6, 8, etc.; and 3 the elaborated head (1, the elementary) of the odd number series, 1, 3, 5, 7, etc. Even means equal, odd means unequal. Herbert Spencer has elaborately and conclusively shown that the universal form of intellectual mentation, or, in other words, of the whole process of reasoning, is the perception and discrimination of equality and inequality (of the dual relation of the equal and the unequal; i.e., of odd and even, even and odd). Spencer, Psyc. v. II., pp. 352-3, et al. The first discoverers of odd and even, as a simple fact of the distribution of numbers, were close upon the track of, and had a more or less clear perception of, this astute metaphysical reformulated in our day by Mr. Spencer. Their method of formulation was to assign a special and very significant meaning to the number 4, and another contrary and equally significant meaning to the number 3. Let us see what were the meanings so assigned.

The number 4 was first associated with the geometrical square, and with all things square, squared, or "on the square," and so with superior moral excellence,—number, form, and morals being thus analogically, and as it were spiritually associated by a tie of relation transcending the particular sphere; 4 came also to denote spiritual and divine affairs, and also ANALOGIA, or the higher logic. It was named in Greek the tetraktis, or sacred four.

The number 3 was first associated, on the contrary, with the geometrical triangle (isosceles), and with all things ratio-ed, or tapering from a broad base to an apex; and then with ratio or reason; and with reasoning of the inductive order (from apex to base) and of the deductive order (from base to apex), all of which was deemed a lower, inferior, and merely human method of mentation, as compared with the transcendental and divine method, signified by 4.

The 4 repeats analogically the cardinal series at large, with an augmentation of its sanctity and excellence; the 3 repeats, by its tapering divergency, the stream or snake-like protension of the ordinal series, with an augmentation of its profanity and badness. The 4 was, therefore, absolutely correct (square), supreme, analogical or figurative, spiritual, divine, masculine; and the 3 was relatively incorrect, (though in the form of ratio or reason), subordinate, merely logical or literal, human, devilish, and feminine (as contrasted with the spiritual, divine, and masculine). Cf. the theological expressions more divino and more humano. Herein is the germ of the whole doctrine of the imperfection of the human reason, and of the fact that it can be and is transcended by a divine revelation made to another and different faculty of the mind than that which merely reasons, after the human type of reasoning. We also now see clearly what Cicero, already quoted, himself doubtless an initiate, means, when he says that 7 (3+4) is "the knot and cement of all things, as being that by which the natural and spiritual world are comprehended in one idea."

The classical expression "ter, quaterque beati" (three and four times blessed), contains an allusion to the union of 3 and 4 in the composition of 7, meaning absolutely, or in the highest degree. It is the same with the frequent repetitions of three and four in the first chapter of Amos. See, for a striking exhibit of the great prevalence of 7 in the early writings of the world, Isis Unveiled, Blavatski, v. II., p. 467.

A great revival of interest in hermetic literature has already begun. The appearance within a few years, in America alone, of four such works as The Blazing Star, by the late Wm. B. Greene, Isis Unveiled, by Madame Blavatski, The Kabbala, by Dr. S. Pancoast, and Swedenborg a Hermetic Philosopher, by Gen. E. H. Hitchcock, are indications of this fact. It is believed, however, that a clear exposition of the divine comedy, if we may borrow the term, of John of Patmos will do more than all that has occurred to augment the interest in, and the recognition of, the importance of this unique literature.

The numerical exposition will be continued in the next number.

SOCIAL SCIENCE.

Surely the world moves when our friend "A. W. K." discovers that there is no "royal road" to a knowledge of social science. But there is a plain path, the first step in which is to perceive one's lack of knowledge; and if "A. W. K." will persevere in that path of study, although he will find it hard work, with no "short cuts," I venture to assure him that he will be repaid for all his labor, and will be saved the painful necessity of believing and promulgating the gospel of despair. He may soon learn the wide difference between political economy and social science, and be able to distinguish between destructive political communism and constructive social communism, and between all forms of communism and integral association as advocated by Fourier.

Of constructive communism we have good examples in this country, in the Shakers and kindred celibate societies, and in the Oneida Community and others having peculiar marriage systems. In none of these is there "an equal division of the results of labor," nor in fact any division of the results of labor except enough thereof to each according to his needs, to supply shelter, clothing, food, and whatever the individual uses. To make a division of the results of labor would individualize them, and so destroy the community of property.

In point of fact, in a pure communism all the property accumulated beyond that necessary to sustain the individuals is owned by the community, and is held and managed by one or more trustees.

This sort of social life satisfies a certain number of persons, and perhaps will always continue to do so; and that it does not "deprive these of the only stimulus to exertion," is proved by actual facts, a little study of which will make known to "A. W. K." that more industrious people than the Shakers and the Oneida Communists do not exist in our individualistic societies, and that they are rich in this world's goods, and raise and sustain neither paupers nor criminals.

But "we must build with the materials Nature has provided for us"; and the element of individuality, or selfishness, is as inherent as altruism, and an integral social science must take account of all the elements of man's nature, and must show us how to create an environment exactly suited to the complete development of all our faculties. Doubtless "it is easier to adapt ourselves to the environment than to create an environment that shall be more satisfactory." If one is a cowardly conservative. But no progress would ever have been made on that principle. If our ancestors had been content with their condition and environment, we should have been naked savages instead of partially humanized and civilized beings.

A noble and manly discontent is the first step in progress. All honor to the workmen for that they are not satisfied with their condition, albeit they do not yet know more of social science than most people do.

Herbert Spencer has done good work for his fellows, but his labors bear such a relation to social science as the work of the Coast Survey does to the discovery of the mariner's compass, or as a complete history of the origin and development of sailing vessels does to the invention of the steam-boat, or as a perfect map of one's own country does to the discovery of new lands, or as a history of roads and carriages propelled by animal force does to the invention of railroads and steam locomotion. We owe all science and all art and all progress to these brave souls who did not shrink from attempting to create more satisfactory conditions and environments than those in which they found themselves.

The social compass has been found and announced by Charles Fourier, and those principles which constitute it have been logically and mathematically demonstrated to be true by Stephen Pearl Andrews in his elucidation of social science as one of the most important branches of Universal Science.

Until one has mastered these principles, which cannot be got at by any amount of reading of Mill or Spencer, or by any short cut or royal road, it is hardly worth while for him to dogmatize about social science; and when he has done so, he will not preach the cheap and dismal doctrine of despair.

F. S. C.

AID FROM AUSTRALIA.

DEAR EDITOR OF INDEX:—

Receiving as I do much delicious spiritual food from THE INDEX, gratitude and justice impel me to help to support it. I cannot do so with my pen, nor does it require that help from me if I could give it, seeing that you have numerous learned and intelligent coadjutors and contributors who are thus aiding you to carry on the good work,—the advocacy of the calm expression of fair freethought. But I may help you a little with some of the money necessarily required for that work. I therefore send you another

25 (five pounds), my subscription for 1879, which please allot as follows: for—

1. Two copies of INDEX for 1879, to be posted to addresses named to you.

2. Two dollars, my subscription to the Free Religious Association for 1878-9, with compliments and thanks to the indefatigable Secretary, Mr. Potter, who will perhaps post to me the Eleventh Report, and a set of the pamphlets of—

3. Proceedings of the Free Religious Association from 1872 to 1877. Pay for these, and—

4. Place balance to INDEX fund.

If you think that my action may prompt others to send money-help to THE INDEX, you are at liberty to publish my letter.

Thanking Mr. A. W. Stevens for his delightful August thoughts in your absence, and you for all other mercies, and trusting that you have been much strengthened by the "spell," believe me yours in the cause of Free and Fair Inquiry,
B. R.
SYDNEY, Australia, Nov. 6, 1878.

"HEAR BOTH SIDES."

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Jan. 2, 1879.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I enclose my subscription to THE INDEX for 1879. Had I the power, I would be glad to increase it a hundred fold; but the times are terribly out of joint with me, and that delightful dream which I suppose is common to us all, of possessing a purse as full as the heart, has no prospect of realization. But I should be very sorry to part company with THE INDEX. I love it for what many would think its chief fault, because I find in it sentiments so opposed to my own, and its own as well. I cannot but judge of a man's real fealty to the truth by his willingness to abide by the motto, "Audi alteram partem." Since the old Liberator, I have not found a paper so just in that respect. I wish also to thank you for your course in regard to the subject which has been so prominent in your columns for the last year or so. It has not been a pleasant subject; no doubt it has been more disagreeable to you than to your readers. I think we all shall be glad when it ceases to occupy so much of your contracted space, though I am sure its ventilation has resulted in much good. There are few liberals in this city who do not heartily sympathize with you in the position which you took and held. Long may THE INDEX live to bear the standard of true religion,—that sanctum bonum which is of all things most desirable, but, I am afraid, of all things most difficult. Yours for all the truth it is best for us to know,
CHARLES APLIN.

P.S.—As I closed my letter, THE INDEX came in, and I have read the letter of Mr. Appleton. I have no acquaintance with him, but from the two or three speeches I have heard from him, I should think his religion consisted in bitter hostility to every existing institution in the world, and thinks that all we need to bring the millennium is a repetition of the French Revolution. If liberals ever do divide on this question, and there are "symptoms," put me down for the "Religion of Purity" now and forever.
C. A.

AN ENGLISH WRITER has been sharply criticizing the management of the London public schools known as the "Board Schools," and produces the following as specimens of the written examinations of some of the scholars:—

"Where is Turkey?"
"Turkey is the capital of Norfolk."
"Where is Turin?"
"Turin is the capital of China, the people there lives on birds nests and has long tails."
"Gibberralter is the principle town of Rooshia."
"What do you know of the patriarch Abraham?"
"He was the father of Lot, and ad tew wives—wun was called Hishmale and the t'other Haygur. He kept wun at home, and he turn'd the t'other into the desert, where she became a pillow of salt in the day-time and a pillow of fire at nite."
"What do you know of Joseph?"
"Hee wore a coat of many garments. Hee were chief butler to Faro and told his dreams. Hee married Potiffers dorder, and he led the Gypsians out of bondage to Kana, in Gallilee, and then fell on his sword and died, in site of the promias land."
"Give the names of the books of the Old Testament."
"Devonshire, Exeter, Littikns, Numbers, Stromomy, Jupiter, Judges, Ruth, etc."
"What is a miracle?"
"Don't know."
"If you saw the sun shining overhead at midnight, what would you call it?"
"The moon."
"But if you were told it was the sun?"
"I should say it was a lie."

"Another boy, giving his impressions in regard to Moses, wrote as follows:—

"He was an Egyption. He lived in a hark maid of bull-rushers, and he kep a golden carf, and wor-shipt braizen snakes, an he het nuthin but kwales and manner for forty year. He was kort by the air of his ed while riding under the bow of a tree, and he was killed by his son Abalon, as he was a-hanging from the bow. His end was peace!"

"What is meant by conscience?" said a school-master to his class. The almost simultaneous reply of half their number was:—

"A hinward monitor." An inspector who happened to be present inquired: "And what do you understand by a monitor?" To this an intelligent youth exultingly answered: "A hironclad."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " " "
 " 52 " " " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSOC., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEWART.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
 THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM R. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MULLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

ON THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Barleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laquer, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.75
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.50
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Vols. I and II. The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Madwomen.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Mental Science: A Compendium of Physics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	6.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.25
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLIE'S Works. Cheap edition. Completing the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 2 vols.; Frederick the Great, 16 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENNY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBIN (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CONSERVATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Emerson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols. Illustrated on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	6.00
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Hahn. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GROE'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Groe. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	4.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP S.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.25
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Fekton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.40
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.40
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Shallows.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.25
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints. Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERB (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	6.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Intellect and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Lyell's Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1838 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays. Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOSEPH STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	3.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swings' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Excuses from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.00
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. 1 and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	2.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.50
ROBERTTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
ROHLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., &c.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology 1 vol.....	.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Second Discourses in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tynany.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (E. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.00
The Classic Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.00
Van by Fair.....	1.00
The Newcomes.....	1.00
Adventures of Philip.....	1.00
Pendennis.....	1.00
The Virginians.....	1.00
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.00
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Hamlet, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Electric Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lectures on Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLE'S (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sanctaries.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	4.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Emerson.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We (sic): A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Vols.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fables. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESSES

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

GOLD

Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & Co., Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Malden Lane, New York.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUTH:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.*THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
24 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

$12 WATCHES for only $3 each.

A bankrupt stock of watches, warranted for one year. This bankrupt stock must be cleared out in 90 days. The former price of these watches was $12.00 each. They are silver case and open face, all one style, and of French manufacture, the movements of which being well known the world over for their fine finish. They are used on railroads and steamboats, where accurate time is required, and give good satisfaction. Think of it, a $12.00 watch for only $3.00, and warranted one year for time!

CHICAGO, O., May 21, 1877.
The Walters Importing Co. is an old established and very reliable house, and we cheerfully recommend them.

After the closure of sale of this bankrupt stock of watches, which will continue 90 days from date of this paper, no order will be filled at less than $12.00 each; no please send your order at once. With each watch we furnish our special warranty for one year, for accurate time. We will forward the watch promptly on receipt of $3.00, or will send O. O. D. if customers desire and remit $1.00 on account.

Address all orders to WALTERS IMPORTING CO., 166 Elm Street, Cincinnati, O.

To Watch Speculators: We call particular attention to these watches, as they sell readily at from $12.00 to $20.00 each.

THE*Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by scientists of the highest authority.

Prominent attention will also be given to those various sciences which help to a better understanding of the nature of man, to the bearings of science upon the questions of society and government, to scientific education, and to the conflicts which spring from the progressive nature of scientific knowledge.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY AND APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tollenmahe, Prof. Clifford, M. E. Grant Duff, Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn, and numerous others.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSS-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES.

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Freethought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-Christian Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

THE INDEX AS AN*ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. B. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

No. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.

Reason and Revelation, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS*For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. L. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kansen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $1.50 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 175 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion. 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 283 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 241 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION, with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Royce. 584 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lecture). 232 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,

West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES. Same style. Price $1.25. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo. 54 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 50 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGES FOR HOME—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 25, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

RELIGIONS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JAN. 16, 1879.

WHOLE No. 473.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbath laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

WORCESTER has $1,030,700 of untaxed real estate mostly belonging to the churches.

MISS ANNA DICKINSON is about to lecture again, but does not abandon permanently her histrionic ambition.

A SOUTHERN negro believes that Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year come too close together. He therefore recommends the consolidation of the three as "Thankchristyear," to be hereafter celebrated in a lump on the first of January.

NEXT SUNDAY afternoon, January 19, at 3 o'clock, the First Liberal League of Boston will hold a meeting at the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street. An essay on "The Hebrew Prophets" will be read by F. E. Abbot; after which there will be a general discussion and social intercourse. All friends of this League are invited to attend.

JUDGE HERSCHELL V. JOHNSON of Georgia, having an important suit on trial that could not well be interrupted, kept Thanksgiving Day by holding court, directing, however, that the court should be opened with religious services. This is the gentleman who, before the civil war, declared epigrammatically in a public speech that "capital should own labor." How beautiful is such a man's regard for religion!

THE OMAHA Herald is responsible for this ludicrous anecdote, which shows the Indian's mode of contemplating the government's attempt to "Christianize" him: "Recently General Crook, a Mr. Collins, of Omaha, and a son of President Hayes were on a hunting expedition in the West, and one day arranged to have the distinguished Indian man and statesman, Red Cloud, their guest at dinner. After seating themselves around the festive board, and being ready to begin the onslaught upon the bounteous dinner of game, Red Cloud addressed the carver, Mr. Collins, inquiring: 'Do you pray before you eat?' 'No,' said Collins. 'Then,' replied the chief, with great gravity and seriousness, 'you will not steal from me.'"

THE CHICAGO Jewish Advance gives this ludicrous instance of superstition in Russia: "The Hamelz reports the following curious incident, quoting the Russian journal Nedela, 'The Week,' as his authority: 'The farmers in the district of Kabilianski (Government of Poltava) have commenced to use kerosene lamps in lieu of the tallow candles or thin laths of pine wood which they had been in the habit of using. This innovation displeased their spiritual shepherd. He therefore preached at his church that it was unlawful for an Orthodox Greek-Catholic to light his house with this liquid. This sort of oil, he said, comes from the decomposed part of Satan, who had been confined to rot beneath the mounts of Caucasus since he rebelled against the heavenly powers. His parishioners listened to his wise expostulation, and banished the ungodly lamps from their houses.' Here it must be remembered that the Russian censor would not permit such remarks to circulate in the press as pleasantries. The story must therefore be taken as a veritable fact."

THE Tribune says: "It was about two years ago that Dr. Leonard W. Bacon wrote from Geneva, Switzerland, predicting the failure of the Old Catholic movement in Europe. He now writes a letter to the Christian Union, stating that the collapse of the movement is already visible all over Europe, and that 'it will be manifest and complete in about twelve months, extraordinary exceptions excepted.' He points out that the new government of Geneva begins with a general policy of non-interference in religious matters, and, as the Old Catholic Church in Geneva was created and is upheld by decrees and subsidies from the Hotel de Ville, non-interference is equivalent to annihilation. 'The Church consists simply of a clergy, salaried by the State, without congregations.

When the salaries stop it is easy to infer where the Church will be.' Dr. Bacon recalls that when his prediction of two years ago was published, he was charged with 'defective opportunities of information' or 'invincible ignorance.' Considering where he had been and what he had been doing for five years, he felt like replying: 'If I don't tell you the truth about this Old Catholic humbug, don't call it defective information. Call it square lying.'"

THE Tribune speaks thus of "John Morley's Challenge": "John Morley, whose pen seems to be the busiest in all England nowadays, has thrown down the gauntlet to the clergy in the last number of The Contemporary. He charges the priests with so debilitating the minds of men and women by promises and dreams that many a generation must come and go before Europe can throw off the yoke of superstition. But he promises them that they shall be generations of strenuous battle. 'The growth of bright ideals and a nobler purpose,' he says, 'will go on, leaving ever and ever further behind them your dwarfed finality and leaden, moveless stereotype. We shall pass you on your flank; your fiercest darts will only spend themselves upon air. We will not attack you as Voltaire did; we will not exterminate you; we shall explain you. History will place each dogma in its class, above or below a hundred competing dogmas, exactly as the naturalist classifies his species. From being a conviction it will sink to a curiosity; from being the guide to millions of human lives, it will dwindle down to a chapter in a book. As history explains your dogma, so science will dry it up; the conception of law will silently make the conception of the daily miracle of your altars seem impossible; the mental climate will gradually deprive your symbols of their nourishment, and men will leave your system, not because they have confuted it, but because, like witchcraft or astrology, it has ceased to interest them.' This is certainly a sweeping challenge."

THE EMINENT would-be assassins, Nobbling, Moncael, and Passanante, seem to have stimulated others to tread in the same path. The editor of the Piccolo, a liberal journal published in Naples, has received an anonymous letter from which is translated the following edifying paragraph: "Dare no longer to censure men who entertain really liberal sentiments. Bear in mind that if in our 'Sect,' as you are pleased to denominate us, there exist men capable of stabbing a sovereign, there are also men quite as capable of putting an end to the life of a wretch like you. The cruelty which will be practiced on the unhappy man whose dagger failed will but register a new victim in the Republican ranks. The death of Passanante will be recorded in the book where your sentence is already written." With this, compare the following extract from L'Avant-garde, organe collectiviste et anarchiste, a paper published at Chaux-de-Fonds, whose circulation in Germany is prohibited: "I must also say now that Olivia (the real name of the Spanish assassin) has not received any socialist education, but is simply a revolutionist by nature and instinct. The assassination of kings is really not the way to union. Our plan is to destroy institutions which are tyrannical and despotic, and, so long as these institutions exist, we have not fulfilled our task. Therefore war to institutions for the peace of the people; this has always been our motto. But there are men whose lives are consecrated to the upholding of these institutions, and we must get them out of the way in order to accomplish our work. I do not make this rule for all sovereigns, as the task would be considered by some of our people as too great. We should, for instance, make an exception of Alfonso XII. of Spain. He is at this moment the key-stone of the political arch of his country, on account of his having no heir. After his death, Spain will become a mass of revolution."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. B. P. HOLLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUBENMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI S. WEINSTEIN.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. REDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE BEAVER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 REV. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLIER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCGONICKLE.....Franklin, Pa.
 HON. F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON.....Tenny, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....331 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALE, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULD, Greenville.
 Florida.....D. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Milledgeville.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHELS, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN PARKS WORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Louisiana.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maine.....S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Maryland.....R. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
 Massachusetts.....KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
 Michigan.....F. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Minnesota.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Missouri.....W. E. OUELLE, Lincoln.
 Montana.....V. G. BARNETT, White Rock.
 Nebraska.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 Nevada.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Pausan.
 New Jersey.....C. D. H. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 New York.....G. D. H. MILLS, Warren.
 North Carolina.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Ohio.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Oregon.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 Pennsylvania.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Rhode Island.....DR. E. H. PRIGER, Cheltenham.
 South Carolina.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Tennessee.....L. L. HAUGHTON, North Bannington.
 Texas.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 Virginia.....DR. A. M. DREW, Washington.
 West Virginia.....ROBERT C. SPEAKER, Milwaukee.
 Wisconsin.....D. F. WILCOX, Tunkton.
 Wyoming.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 District of Columbia.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessy; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

N. B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Fellow, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

FIRST FLUNKY: "Well, I hear your young gov'nor's made a match with Miss Deronda?" Second Flunky: "Yass, he's gone and done it!" First Flunky: "Come now, what's the figure? Any idea?" Second Flunky: "Wall, taking everything into account, I calculate his place'll be wuth about eight hundred a month."—Punch's Almanack.

Socialism in Germany and the United States.*

BY PROF. HENRY FAWCETT.

At the present time I think it will be admitted that no economic questions assume greater importance than the tenacity with which the principles of protection are clung to in many of even the most progressive countries, and the sudden and unexpected development of socialism, especially in Germany, and among that section of the working-classes who form what is now known as the Labor Party in the United States. The former subject I brought forward last year, for I then attempted, while considering the leading arguments on which the protectionists of America, the colonies, and of various continental countries base their opposition to free trade, to explain the causes which have retarded the more general acceptance of the principles of unrestricted commerce during the period which has elapsed since their adoption by England. I have been induced to select modern socialism as the subject of my present course of lectures, not only because of the extreme importance of the question, but because there is, I believe, a closer connection than may at first sight appear between the maintenance of a system of protection and the development of socialistic ideas. It at once becomes evident from a consideration of the aims and proposals of the socialists of the present day that the most marked characteristic of modern socialism is belief in the State. Between the socialism of former days and the socialism of the present time, there is this distinction: the schemes of the earlier socialists were voluntary organizations, and, however much individual liberty had to be sacrificed by those who joined a socialistic community, no attempt was made to coerce any one to join it. The socialists, however, of the present day propose to use the power of the State to fashion the entire community to a prescribed economic model. Modern socialism, therefore, possesses an importance which is incalculably greater than can be attributed to any of the various communistic schemes which have been carried out simply by individual effort. It has been often remarked that success has not unfrequently its first origin in failure; and I think it can be shown that some of the economic movements of the present day, by which great results have been produced, and from which still greater results are anticipated, undoubtedly had their beginnings in the unsuccessful attempts which have from time to time been made to put into practice various communistic experiments. In the abortive efforts of our countryman, Robert Owen, to introduce communistic principles into social life, were laid, I believe, the first foundations of that cooperative movement which has in recent years assumed such a remarkable development, and the extension of which may be regarded as one of the greatest improvements that can be introduced into modern industrial economy. So long as the efforts of socialists were restricted to the formation of voluntary organizations, there was no reason to regard their proposals with apprehension; on the contrary, such men as Owen and his coadjutors were the pioneers of many useful social reforms. For instance, at his factory at New Lanark, the first systematic effort was made to secure the education of factory-children, and to protect them against overwork. He was also, in part, the originator of the first infant school, which was established in London in 1819. Modern socialism, however, assumes an entirely different aspect. There has now been conferred upon the working-classes in many countries a predominance of political power; and no one who watches events which are now happening can doubt that, if socialism should continue to advance with as much rapidity as it has lately shown in Germany and the United States, the day is not distant when the socialists will be able to control the legislation of those countries. The prospect is one that may justly excite serious apprehension, and therefore it becomes of the first importance to inquire what is the attitude which should be assumed toward a movement that may become formidable at any moment.

It will not be difficult to show that no policy can be more short-sighted or more unwise than to endeavor to repress socialism by imposing legislative penalties on those who advocate its principles. All experience proves that the movement will not be thus suppressed, but, on the contrary, will, in all probability, be made to assume a more dangerous development. For centuries in our own country a succession of statutes were passed, with the object of preventing combinations among the working-classes, and the chief result of this legislation was to intensify all the worst evils which could result from such combinations; for workmen were thus driven to form themselves into secret societies. It is scarcely possible to make a graver mistake than to allow our judgment of a great social movement to be determined by some circumstance which may be accidentally connected with it. The recent deplorable attempt which was made on the Emperor of Germany's life seems to have caused many of the leading statesmen of that country to be panic-stricken with alarm about socialism, and they appear to have eagerly rushed to the conclusion that between socialism and political assassination there is a close and necessary connection. Socialists have been described by Prince Bismarck as "bandits," who must be extirpated as if they were outcasts of society. Nothing can be more unfair or more unreasonable than to associate the socialists of Germany and other countries with the crimes of a few fanatics. Religion is not to be discarded because of the fearful deeds of cruelty which have been done by zealots, who thought they were performing a holy work if they tortured men into the acceptance of what they regarded as the true faith. The principles of socialism have not suddenly sprung into existence. They may now be assuming a new form, and new methods of carrying them out may now be proposed; but from the earliest times the principles of socialism in various forms have been advocated by some of the wisest and best of men. The social life of the early Christians was organized on communistic principles. "All that believed were together, and had all things common, and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need." Throughout the "Republic" of Plato and the "Utopia" of Sir Thomas More, proposals are developed, with the utmost elaboration of detail, for organizing society on a communistic basis. In fact, in every age and in every country, socialism has been more or less actively developed; for whenever there is a marked difference in the condition of different classes, whenever the great wealth of the few can be contrasted with the deep poverty of the many, sympathy is sure to be aroused, and a feeling spreads that some means should be adopted to secure a more equal distribution of wealth. With the object of remedying this inequality in the distribution of wealth, various schemes have been from time to time propounded, which, however much they differ, have all been based on what may be regarded as the fundamental principle of socialism,—that men should not be permitted to appropriate to their sole use all that they are able to acquire, but that a portion of what they possess should be devoted to the relief of the necessitous.

In order to show the futility of attempting to repress socialism by legislative enactments, it may be mentioned that in countries where the rights of private property are most jealously defended, institutions are maintained which are based on socialistic principles. I shall have occasion presently to point out that the particular form of socialism which is now obtaining such development in Germany and the United States has hitherto scarcely taken root at all in England; and yet for more than two centuries, by the authority of the State, an institution has been maintained in England which is based on socialistic principles. The Poor-Law of Elizabeth confers upon every man a legal claim to relief. The funds required to provide this relief are obtained by enforcing a contribution from the general community. Ail, in fact, who have anything to spare are compelled, whether they wish it or not, to subscribe to a common fund which is distributed among those who need to be relieved. Although I shall endeavor to show that the socialistic programme which is now put forward would, if it were carried out, be destructive of the best interests of society, yet any particular scheme is not to be condemned by simply saying it is socialistic, for if socialism were to be regarded as a noxious weed to be extirpated wherever found, the English Poor-Law system would have to be abolished, because it infringes on the institution of private property by declaring that all that a man may acquire shall not be appropriated by him for his own use, but a portion of it shall be devoted to relieve the wants of the poor. I have thought it important to consider the subject from this point of view, because nothing can be more unwise than to attempt to check socialism by indiscriminate abuse, and by treating the subject as if every socialist must have some sinister object to obtain, and as if every proposed reform which involves a socialistic principle must for that reason be denounced.

Although I believe it can be shown that the gravest mischief would result from carrying out most of the various schemes which constitute the programme of modern socialism, yet nothing can be more idle than to suppose that a movement which is daily gathering to its support an increasing number of sincere and devoted adherents can be checked by general denunciation. If the movement is to be in any way arrested, it will be above all things necessary, in discussing the subject, to free ourselves from prejudice. I will, therefore, endeavor so to approach the subject that no socialist shall be able to say that I have done any injustice either to the cause he advocates or to the motives which prompt his action.

After having carefully examined the proposals of the leading German socialists, and after having read the proceedings of the various socialistic congresses which have been held in recent years, I think it will be admitted that the following is a full and fair statement of the programme of modern socialism:—

1. That there should be no private property, and that no one should be permitted to acquire property by inheritance. That all should be compelled to labor, no one having a right to live without labor.

2. The nationalization of the land, and of the other instruments of production; or, in other words, the State should own all the land, capital, machinery,—in fact, everything which constitutes the industrial plant of a country, in order that every industry may be carried on by the State.

These proposals to prohibit inheritance, to abolish private property, and to make the State the owner of all the capital and the administrator of the entire industry of the country, are put forward as representing socialism in its ultimate and highest development. The socialists themselves admit that, as there is no immediate prospect of obtaining their objects in their complete form, it will be desirable to put forward proposals which involve a less fundamental change; and the following may consequently be regarded as the objects to be first striven for. These objects are regarded as not only desirable in themselves, but are looked upon as facilitating the complete realization of the socialistic ideal:—

1. The establishment of cooperative agricultural and manufacturing associations supported by the State.
 2. Universal, compulsory, and free education.

* An introductory lecture delivered at Cambridge, October, 1878.

3. A progressive income-tax, and the abolition of indirect taxation.

4. The limitation by the State of the length of the day's work.

5. The sanitary inspection of mines, factories, and workmen's dwellings.

6. The State should find work for the unemployed by constructing public works, the necessary funds being supplied by an unlimited issue of paper money.

To these various proposals a different amount of importance is attributed by socialists in different countries. Thus, the Continental socialists chiefly rely upon obtaining loans of capital from the State in order to establish cooperative undertakings. In the United States, where the people are more deeply infected by currency fallacies, much prominence is given by the socialists, who are there known as the Labor Party, to the great advantages which will be secured by making capital easily accessible to the poor through the unlimited issue of paper money. It will, however, be observed that each of these proposals involves the obtaining, in some form or other, of State assistance; and it has been already remarked that this reliance upon the State is to be regarded as the leading characteristic of modern socialism. In the first proposal it is contemplated that cooperative institutions should be maintained by capital advanced by the State. Education is to be made universal, but the State is to pay for it. The accumulation of wealth is to be discouraged by the State, for if all taxation is to be abolished except a progressive income-tax, the more prudent a man is, or, in other words, the more he saves, the more heavily he is to be fined. Then, again, it is not to be left to each individual to determine how long he shall work. All freedom of action is to be surrendered, for the length of the day's work is to be rigidly prescribed by the State. Next, the system of State inspection is to be indefinitely extended. It is no longer to be confined to factories and workshops, but a State official is to be admitted into every home. Lastly, it is proposed that the funds which the State will require for all the manifold functions which it is to perform shall be provided by an unlimited issue of paper money.

Before proceeding to examine each of these proposals in detail, with the view of showing some of the consequences which they would produce, I think it will be well to consider how it has come to pass that socialism, which appears to be almost dormant in England at the present time, is assuming such a marked development in Germany and the United States. I believe it is as unreasonable to suppose that a body moves through some inexplicable impulse and not because some force has set it in motion, as it is to conclude that there can be some great social movement suddenly called into activity without any cause, as if it were a mere freak of Nature. It is not by mere chance that socialistic principles are now assuming increasing vitality. It will not, I think, be difficult to show that both in Germany and in the United States the soil has been carefully prepared for the growth of socialistic ideas. In Germany bureaucratic principles have obtained their greatest development. The German people, in their efforts for political unity, naturally desired to make the central government, which was to unite them, strong; the same tendency was increased by the system of universal compulsory military service, which was enforced upon them; these causes have operated powerfully to make the German people believe that the State is omnipotent, and should be omnipresent. When this absolute dependence on the State has been thoroughly instilled into a nation, it is inevitable that the opinion will rapidly spread that, if there is anything required to be done, it is only necessary to resort to the State to have it done. If there is widespread poverty, the State can relieve it. If there is a dearth of employment, the State can find work for those who need it. If wealth is too unequally distributed, the State can adjust the inequality. In one of the debates on socialism which have recently taken place in the German Parliament, great surprise and disappointment were expressed by Prince Bismarck that socialism should be most rife in Germany, the country where the State had taken most care of the working-classes, and had done most for them. A husbandman who sows tares ought not to expect to reap wheat, and it is not unnatural that, among a people who have been accustomed to be helped by the State, dependence on the State should be a more prominent characteristic than self-reliance.

In attempting to explain how it has come to pass that socialism is received with so much favor by many of the workmen in the United States, I think it may be shown that the maintenance of the system of protection, which extends over a great part of the entire industry of that country, by habituating the people to State interference, has made them ready recipients of socialistic ideas. When discussing the question of free trade and protection, I had occasion more than once to point out that the mischief which is done to a country by protection is very inadequately measured by the loss which is caused by unnecessarily increasing the cost of the various products which are protected. People who are perpetually told that the degree of prosperity which an industry enjoys depends upon the amount of protection which it receives from the State are really nurtured in the belief that the State can remedy all that is unsatisfactory in their own condition.

From the remarks that have just been made, I think it will be seen that many of those who regard the spread of socialism with so much alarm have been unconsciously the chief promoters of the movement. That excessive dependence on the State, which, as we have shown, is the most prominent characteristic of modern socialism, will inevitably exist in the greatest activity in those countries where the State has been permitted most largely to interfere with the social and industrial life of the community.

As already pointed out, upon the German people perhaps more than any other have been imposed the trammels of a system of centralization and bureaucracy; and in that country, as well as in the United States, industrial independence has been sacrificed to a wide-spread system of protection, and the lesson has been persistently taught that industrial prosperity is mainly to be secured by tariff regulations and custom-house restrictions. Each fresh extension of the principles of centralization or of industrial protection may be regarded as directly promoting the growth of socialistic ideas. A people who from their earliest childhood are accustomed to believe that State management is better than individual effort will not unnaturally think that, if they can place themselves in a position to control the State, they will then possess a power which will enable them to redress every grievance from which they are suffering, and to remedy everything which they may regard as unsatisfactory in their condition.

It must, I think, be admitted by any one who will give a dispassionate consideration to the subject, that however mischievous and impracticable the socialistic schemes which are now put forward would prove to be, yet they are undoubtedly intended to remedy certain acknowledged defects which exist in the industrial economy of even the most prosperous countries. No one, for instance, can fail to deplore the increasing separation between employers and employed, and the widening gulf between the very wealthy and the very poor. In former times there was not so complete a line of demarcation between capital and labor. As machinery has been more extensively introduced, and as the scale on which production has been carried on has been increased, a larger amount of capital and labor is needed for each separate industrial undertaking, and thus has arisen what may be regarded as a most prominent feature in the industrial economy of the present day,—the aggregation of masses of workmen who, possessing none of the capital that is required for the support of the industry in which they are engaged, labor simply for hire, and between whom and their employers there is often scarcely a closer personal relation than that which exists between the buyer and seller of a commodity. No one, I imagine, can suppose that such a state of things is desirable in itself, or that we shall be always content to see such a complete separation of industrial interests that the capital and labor which are required for the production of wealth should continue to be supplied by two distinct classes. It can scarcely be necessary to remark that the happiest results to a community would be produced, if the capital which is required to maintain labor were more generally supplied by the laborers themselves; for workmen would then be able to secure the entire fruits of their toil, and the present wide-spread conflict between capital and labor would cease.

The socialists consider that all such defects as those which have just been described in the industrial economy of a community are directly due either to an inadequate or to an improper use of the power of the State; they consequently propose that if workmen require capital, it should be supplied to them by the State. No expression is more frequently employed by socialists than the "tyranny of capital." They constantly speak of capital as if it were infected with some evil principle, which, if not kept rigorously under State control, will oppress and impoverish the working-classes. Those who are acquainted with the most simple principles of political economy will not require to be told that to speak of the "tyranny of capital" is not more unreasonable than to regard Nature as a despot, because it has been decreed that wealth cannot be acquired without labor, and that there cannot be a harvest to gather unless the land has been tilled and the seed has been sown. This previous tilling and sowing represent the service which capital renders to the production of wealth. If those who labor can render this service themselves, if the ploughman owns the plough and the seed, and if he has a sufficient stock of food laid by on which he can live till the next harvest, he becomes his own capitalist. If, however, those who till the land do not possess the implements with which it is tilled; if they have to obtain from others the seed which has to be sown; if they have not the means to support themselves while they are laboring, then they will be obliged to call in the aid of others. The assistance which they thus need represents the service which is rendered by capital, and the price which is paid for this service constitutes the profit of capital. The greatest care should be taken to remove any obstacle which may impede the acquisition by the working-classes of the capital which their industry needs. That such an acquisition is possible has been abundantly shown by the remarkable growth of building societies and of cooperative associations, where great industrial undertakings have been carried out by capital which is solely the property of the working-classes. Germany, however, perhaps affords the most striking example of the extent to which capital can be acquired by the working-classes without State assistance. The cooperative credit-banks, which were established by Herr Schulze-Delitzsch in that country, afford a means to the working-classes of borrowing capital in the open market on their own security. Each member of one of these banks is jointly and severally responsible for the debts of all. The security thus afforded is sufficiently good to enable them to borrow on favorable terms. There are nine hundred and sixty-one of these credit-banks, and their importance may be estimated by the fact that they now have more than two hundred thousand members, and that the money annually advanced is often more than £10,000,000 sterling.* It is a remarkable illustration of the mischief which may be done by such legislation as the German Anti-Socialist Bill that, as originally introduced, the bill would have struck a fatal blow at these cooperative societies; although the anti-socialist character of the cooperative credit-banks is so pronounced that they have always been opposed by the socialists, and their founder was most violently attacked by so prominent a socialistic leader as Lassalle.*

* See Eleventh Report of the Trades' Union Commissioners, vol. II. Appendix, pp. 165-178.

In describing the progress of such institutions as these, I think facts can be appealed to which will indisputably prove that there is no surer way of retarding the acquisition by workmen of the capital which will enable them to carry on industry on their own account than to instill in them the first lesson which it is the manifest purpose of socialism to teach,—that capital, which is the result of saving, need not be secured by the self-sacrifice saving involves, but that it can be supplied by the State, which is spoken of as if it were a fountain of wealth which, without human effort, is kept perennially supplied by the bounty of Nature. Capital which is advanced by the State is just the same as capital which is owned by private individuals. It cannot be procured like water rained down from heaven; some one must have labored to produce it.

From the close connection which exists between socialism in its present phase of development and reliance on State intervention, I think it will be at once seen how the spread of socialism is often unconsciously promoted by those who least desire to give any encouragement to its principles. Although, as previously remarked, England is, at the present moment, scarcely affected by that socialistic movement which is exciting so much apprehension on the Continent, yet it may not be impossible to happen that agencies may be brought into operation which will cause socialism at some future time to be as readily accepted in England as it now is in Germany. Each fresh encroachment that the State is permitted to make on individual liberty prepares a community more willingly to accept the principles of modern socialism, by teaching them to rely less upon themselves and more upon the State. It becomes, therefore, of the first importance that each fresh proposal to extend the limits of State interference should be most jealously watched. There is undoubtedly, at the present time, in our own country, a somewhat marked tendency to favor State intervention. As this feeling has, I believe, in a great degree been caused by a reaction against the extreme doctrines of laissez faire which were held by the earlier economists, it becomes the more important to avoid all general denunciations of State interference. In some cases the State may be properly called upon to protect those who have no power to protect themselves. A child, for instance, is not a free agent. If he is overworked, he has no power to ward off the injury that may be done to him; but if the State is asked to impose a legal limit upon the length of the day's work, not simply for children, but for adults, such a demand, when made by the workmen themselves, is a voluntary surrender of freedom of action, and there cannot be such a surrender without a disastrous weakening of the feeling of self-reliance.

The trade-unions of our own country are sometimes spoken of with alarm and distrust; but it should be remembered that the chief reason why the socialism which is spreading with such rapidity in Germany scarcely finds a foothold in England is, that the German workman looks to the State to do that for him which the English workman hopes to obtain through the influence of his trade union. Socialism cannot take root in England so long as this faith in voluntary organization continues. It is a most significant and encouraging fact that during the continuance of the present period of industrial depression, not a whisper of a demand for State help has been heard in this country. In many cases, refusing to work for the wages offered to them, workmen have resorted to strikes; but in no single instance have they called upon the State to fix the rate of wages. Large numbers of English operatives believe that the present depression is due to over-production, and they consequently propose to work short time. No proposals, however, are brought forward suggesting that this limitation of production should be enforced by the State. When it is seen into what dubious paths the workmen of other countries are led, when they are accustomed to rely upon the State rather than upon their own efforts, it becomes of the first importance that nothing should be done to encourage the workmen of our own country to resort to State help.

If socialism should ever spread among the English people, it seems likely that the movement will receive encouragement from above rather than from below. Whenever a proposal is brought forward in England to extend the functions of the State, it is generally either primarily suggested or chiefly promoted, not by the workmen, but by those who suppose that they are acting in the interest of the workmen. Those who are anxious to promote some reform, not unfrequently call in the aid of the State without adequately considering the collateral consequences which may result from such an appeal to State assistance. Thus many who are prompted by the most sincere desire to extend and improve popular education have proposed that instruction should be provided gratuitously by the State. But even if it were possible thus to improve and extend education, before the right was conferred on an entire community to demand gratuitous instruction for their children the consequences which might result from permitting a primary obligation, which each individual owes to his children, to be transferred from himself to the State ought to be most carefully considered. Even the slightest assault upon the principle of individual responsibility may exert a most disastrous influence. Self-reliance, which is the chief antidote to socialism, may thus be weakened. And no one can say that what is happening in Germany may not, under the same conditions, occur in England. If the English people are encouraged to depend less upon themselves and more upon the State, centralization and bureaucracy may involve the country in a net-work of State regulations; individual liberty may decline, and, as it declines, socialistic demands for State interference and State help will advance with sure and steady steps.—Fortnightly Review.

* Herr Schulze-Delitzsch, der ökonomische Julian, oder Kapital und Arbeit. Berlin: 1864. By Ferdinand Lassalle.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE BOROUGH OF NORTHAMPTON.

In once more seeking your suffrages, I am encouraged by the fact that at each Parliamentary election since 1868 I have had an increased number of your votes recorded in my favor, and I am further encouraged by the repeated and unanimous declarations of great public meetings in your borough endorsing and approving my candidature. Although my political views are known to most of you, it may not be out of place that I should again state the main points to which I should consider myself pledged in the event of your electing me as one of your representatives at the forthcoming general election:—

1. A change in our land laws, involving the abolition of the law and practice of primogeniture and entail; the rendering transfer of land cheap and easy; the compulsory cultivation of such uncultivated lands, not devoted to public purposes, as are susceptible of profitable cultivation; the giving to the actual cultivator greater security for improvements made upon the soil; the revaluation of lands for the more equitable imposition of the land-tax; the levying of the land tax by such a graduated scale as shall make its pressure heaviest on excessively large holdings.

2. Such resistance to our present scandalously extravagant national expenditure that its total may be annually reduced, and such a change in the system of levying the national taxes that the burden may fall less onerously on those who can least afford to pay.

3. Separation of State from Church.

4. Reform in the House of Lords, by depriving all peers who do not usually attend Parliament of the right to sit and vote; by depriving all sons and heirs of peers of the privilege now exercised of succeeding to the right to sit and vote in Parliament, by limiting all future creations to life peerages, such life peers to be elected.

I should give my earnest support to Mr. G. O. Trevelyan's measure for the Extension of the Suffrage in Counties, and to Sir Charles Dilke's proposal for Redistribution of Seats. I should also advocate Shorter Duration of Parliaments, and Woman Suffrage.

I should specially oppose all national expenditure which Parliament had not previously authorized and approved. Regarding the two Houses of Parliament as the supreme authority in this country, and the Sovereign as the Chief Magistrate of the realm—subject always to Parliament—I should endeavor to check every attempt at government or executive action not founded on previous Parliamentary sanction.

Believing that it would be better to wisely and humanely govern the territories already subject to British authority than to seek to augment their extent, I should offer the most earnest resistance to every scheme of annexation, whether under pretext of scientific frontier or otherwise.

There have been many harsh things said of me by my political antagonists in your borough during the past ten years, because in my speculative opinions I differ from many of you, and because I have always frankly avowed those opinions. Pardon my reminding you that two hundred and forty years ago your late lamented and deservedly respected member would have been at least as coarsely assailed by the same men had he and they then lived. In the Parliament House my duties will be political. That Parliament should have any right to control the formulas of any church is, I believe, a misfortune alike for Parliament and for church. That it should control and support one church only is most certainly unjust to all others. I ask only for free Church in free State. I would have all protected by law in their right to worship who deem worship duty, and would only ask that there shall be neither penalty nor disability for those who do not belong to any church.

I shall fight the coming election as I have always fought, with the confidence that if you elect me I may, in the House of Commons, be able to do some work worthy the trust you will place in my hands.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

—National Reformer, Dec. 22.

THE CONCORD LYCEUM.

THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY—AN ADDRESS BY JUDGE HOAR
—THE ORIGIN AND GROWTH OF THE INSTITUTION.

The fiftieth anniversary of the Concord Lyceum was celebrated last evening in the hall at Concord. Among the leading townsmen present were the Hon. E. R. Hoar, Ralph Waldo Emerson, the Rev. Messrs. Reynolds and Grout, Judge Brooks, George Hayward, Frank B. Sanborn, John S. Keyes, General S. B. Chamberlain, and others.

Judge Hoar presided, and on taking the chair remarked: Fifty years ago to-night the citizens of Concord had a meeting of honored citizens, which resulted in the formation of the Concord Lyceum, consisting of eighty-seven members, and whose fiftieth anniversary we meet this night to celebrate. As one of those original members, you must excuse me from addressing you to-night. The institution began with lectures and debates, and has been steadily maintained to the present time. From the first our meetings have been characterized by strict impartiality, allowing the advocates of all shades of opinion to be listened to. Among its lecturers he mentioned Horace Greeley, George Thompson, Agassiz, Wendell Phillips, and others. The speaker then alluded to the death of George Farron, Edward Bliss, and Charles Chauncy Emerson, and others. Of a list of lectures before him, Thoreau delivered nineteen, Dr. Jarvis seventeen, Dr. Ripley twelve, and Ralph Waldo Emerson ninety-eight. He paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Emerson, and spoke of the good-fortune of the town and of the Lyceum in having the residence of so distinguished a man among them. Mr. Hoar closed his remarks with many pleasant reminiscences of the past.

The principal address of the evening was delivered by Mr. C. H. Walcott, and was entitled "The Origin and Growth of the Concord Lyceum." He spoke of the people of Concord as having met at stated intervals to commemorate the good deeds of their ancestors; they believed in such anniversaries as quickening the patriotic and social feelings, and as surviving the generation in which it is born. The earliest town lyceums in the State were formed in 1830, in Worcester County; four years later there were seventy-eight, sixteen of which were in Middlesex County. They owed their organization mainly to Mr. Josiah Holbrook, who went about advocating this means of educating the public. The first meeting of the Concord Lyceum was called December 3, 1828, at which the Hon. John Keyes was chosen chairman and Samuel Shattuck secretary. A constitution was adopted January 7, 1829, and the venerable Dr. Ripley was elected president. The founders of the Lyceum were the leaders in religious thought, politics, and town affairs. One, a leader of the bar, is still mentioned familiarly with Webster and Choate, and is known in the history of the nation all the agent chosen by Massachusetts to defend the rights of her colored citizens in a hostile State. Mr. Walcott spoke of Dr. Ripley as the father of the Lyceum. He attributed the interest in lyceums in the early days to the absence of the railroad and telegraph. Of seventeen lyceums in 1830, only two have preserved their autonomy, and only one association of the kind in the State can boast of greater age, and its fiftieth anniversary was celebrated in Salem only a short time ago. The original signers of the constitution numbered fifty-seven, of whom six only are now living, among them the Hon. E. R. Hoar. A debating society, started some seven years before the Lyceum, was merged in it in 1829. The first lecture before the Lyceum was delivered in 1830, by the Rev. Bernard Whitman, of Waltham, since which time lectures have been furnished every winter without exception. As early as 1833, after much discussion, it was decided by Dr. Bartlett, then president, that the Anti-Slavery Society ought not to be encouraged. Again, in 1835, a decision was rendered by the Rev. H. B. Goodwin, acting as president, that the immediate abolition of slavery was inexpedient, and he was sustained by the audience. In 1842 the announcement that Wendell Phillips was to lecture on slavery brought forth the following:—

Resolved, That as this Lyceum is established for social and mutual improvement, the introduction of the vexed and disorganizing question of abolition should be kept out of it.

The motion was laid on the table, and Mr. Phillips lectured. When specie payment was suspended early in the rebellion, the Concord Lyceum issued $1450 in scrip, which passed freely in all the business transactions of the town. The literary history of Concord has grown up within the last half century, and in that time nearly all the distinguished men of the town have attained their eminence. During this time the Lyceum has been doing its elevating and civilizing work, and helping to make Concord a pleasant and profitable place to live in.

After Mr. Walcott's address Judge Hoar proposed this motion: "That we continue the Lyceum for another fifty years." It was received by the audience with laughter, and passed unanimously. After this the meeting was adjourned.—Boston Advertiser, Jan. 8.

A LUNCH FOR A PENNY.

HOW THE POOR OF WASHINGTON LIVE—FEEDING FOUR HUNDRED PEOPLE TWICE A DAY, AND ALL FOR TWO CENTS APICE.

There is an institution in Washington that is worth imitating in other cities; for I take it that in these hard times there are very many poor people in every city who cannot get work and are without food. I refer to what is known as the penny lunch. Washington is a city which naturally has more than its share of poor people, for they come here from all parts of the country in a vain search for government positions; and it is, in addition, the centre of the indigent negro population of many adjacent States. About a year ago, at a time when there was unusual suffering here among the poorer classes, and all manner of suggestions were being made as to what should be done to relieve the prevailing poverty and want, a lady named Mrs. Roberts started what is now known here by everybody as the "penny lunch." She was at that time, or had been, a clerk in the Interior department, and was a regular contributor to one of the Sunday paper. She conceived the idea of supplying hungry people with a lunch for a penny, and from a very small beginning she has made the lunch a success, and increased its advantages until now it is a permanent institution, and one of the most sensible and practical charities in the country. Mrs. Roberts was aided in the undertaking by some friends who appreciated her energy, and knew the kindness of her heart. She began by soliciting, personally, small contributions from the business men,—a bag of flour here, a bushel of beans there, a barrel of meal of one person, a load of coal of another, a hundred loaves of bread of another, corned beef of another, fresh meat of another, pork of another, a load of wood of another, and so on through the city. She refused nothing, but patiently kept at work. In due time she had money enough to rent for a month two small rooms in a back street. She borrowed a stove, begged a few plates, bowls, cups and saucers, spoons, knives and forks, and other necessary implements. She had printed a number of small tickets, reading: "One Cent. Good for One Lunch. No. 1215 E Street." Those tickets she popularized by selling them in packages of fifty and one hundred to ladies and gentlemen, who in turn gave them to beggars and destitute persons in the streets.

Mrs. Roberts started very modestly, giving her entire time to the enterprise, and working with surprising zeal and patience. At first she gave a plate of soup and a piece of bread for a penny, and before she knew it she could not supply the wants of those who called. Many laboring men with large families and no work came regularly and sent their wives and children with their pennies to get a "square meal." It became the popular thing. W. W. Corcoran, and many of the other rich and aristocratic people, visited Mrs. Roberts and ate her soup. It was pronounced excellent, and there were many money contributions as a result. Of course, the expenses of such an establishment as Mrs. Roberts' could not be paid by charging only a penny for a lunch; but the contributions from the people were so small and spread over so wide a surface that the expense was not felt by anybody. One man promised to give fifty loaves of bread a week during the winter; another promised to give two dozen soup-bones per week; another promised one dollar a week; and a large number of subscribers were obtained at fifty cents and twenty-five cents a week. The number of people fed by Mrs. Roberts last winter I cannot pretend to give; but the total is enormous. She now feeds about four hundred people twice a day. Her quarters are necessarily cramped, and only about twenty can be accommodated at once. From a lunch in the middle of the day she has enlarged her plan, and now furnishes breakfast and dinner. For breakfast, her bill of fare is mush and molasses, coffee and corn bread. For dinner, soup, corn bread, and coffee. Occasionally, if contributions are unusually liberal, she will give boiled beans and a little pork, or some potatoes. The most rigid economy is practised, and every scrap of food is made available. She pays her cook eight dollars a month, and with the assistance of two or three colored boys, who work for their board, she gets on pretty well. Of course the boarders are not as particular as some might be under other circumstances. Each day at eight o'clock in the morning and three in the afternoon, the crowd gathers in front of the building. Details of policemen keep the hungry ones in order, and a line stretches far along the street,—men, women, and children. I saw this crowd to-day. There were as good faces in it as you would see on Chestnut Street or anywhere else. There were both men and women who were decently attired, and who were evidently gentlemen and ladies. Hunger is a great leveller.—Philadelphia Times.

MACHINERY.

The never-ending invention of mechanical and other contrivances for minimizing manual labor leads to the supposition that, by and by, the latter will be dispensed with altogether, and that human existence will become a state of sinecureism. If this consummation were ever to be obtained, however, it is pretty certain that life would become unendurable, and that mankind would soon cease to exist altogether. We have no apprehensions, says an English writer in the Foreman, Engineer, and Draughtsman, as to the arrival of either of the contingencies in question. Machinery will ever be the handmaid of humanity, but never its destroyer; and every real improvement made therein, being only a new application of the forces of Nature, must be advantageous to the human family. No machine of any kind can possibly create power, and no combination of wheels, pinions, levers, belts, or cranks, however ingeniously arranged, will raise a single foot pound of power, or even one ounce. Suppose a watch be taken by way of illustration. In order to set it in action the spring must be bent and contracted by means of a key, and this imparts power from the muscles of the fingers. When the spring has given off the muscular force put into it, the wheels and hands of the time-keeper come to a stand-still. Again, in winding up an eight-day clock you lift a weight of, say, six pounds, through four feet. In doing so, you perform twenty-four foot pounds of muscular power. These twenty-four foot pounds will serve the clock eight days, and unless more power be applied the machinery will stop. The same principle applies to mechanical contrivances of every kind, whether impelled by steam or by sentient bone and muscle. In fact all work is derived from sources of Nature, which in turn have derived their present existence and form from the workings of Nature, or, to be more explicit and exact, from the heat of the sun, which has developed and is developing all the natural laws by which we are surrounded. There is no fear, then, of our getting beyond Nature, nor of machinery of any kind ever adding one iota to the stock of power, latent or active, in Nature's arcana. We may modify and adapt, but we can neither create nor destroy, and may rest assured, therefore, that all discoveries in science and in mechanism will tend eventually to the good of mankind and the glory of the Creator of all things.—Scientific American.

A COLORED child had a fall from a second-story window the other day, and his mother, in relating the occurrence at a grocery, said: "Dere dat chile was a-coming down feet fust, wid every chance of bein' killed, when de Lawd he turned him over, de chile struck on his head, and dere wasn't so much as a button flew off."

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism, such as the organization of new societies, reports of liberal lectures and meetings, or criticisms of free-thought and Free Religion—would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Communism is rapidly dying out in France.

Fifty-six Congregational clergymen died last year.

Dean Stanley contemplates another visit to America.

The population of Boston in 1824 was fifty-eight thousand.

This is the fiftieth year of Catholic Emancipation in Ireland.

Another ocean cable is to be laid from France to New York.

Heywood's imprisonment largely increased the sale of his book.

One-fourth only of the population of London are church-going.

There is talk at the Vatican of calling a new oecumenical council.

The first attempt to establish a paper in Boston was made in 1690.

Bayard Taylor's Goethe's collection of rare volumes will shortly be sold.

The Synod in Germany has granted permission to the priests to marry.

St. Louis has commenced again the old system of licensing the social evil.

M. Renan is described as a very sociable man, but not often seen in society.

The Independent asks editorially, "Can the Church be trusted?" We give it up.

In the University of Göttingen, is preserved a Bible written on palm leaves.

There is danger of a split in the Presbyterian Church on premillennarianism.

There are no tombs or monuments with escutcheons earlier than the eleventh century.

Damascus—one of the oldest cities in the world—has two hundred thousand inhabitants.

Only one-third of the marriages in Berlin last year were solemnized by any religious service.

The Mohammedans wash the feet, and the arms from the elbows down. This is ablution.

A ship lately sailed for Africa with one missionary and eight thousand gallons of rum on board.

There was no oration at the funeral of Caleb Cushing; merely prayer and reading from the Bible.

South Carolina has increased the number of her schools four hundred and thirty-nine the past year.

The papers say the tide of business has commenced to rise in the West and is working this way. Hurry up.

Forty thousand inhabitants of India who were heathen twelve months ago are now credited as Christians.

The Golden Rule as a weekly has been discontinued, and will be issued by Rev. Mr. Murray as a monthly magazine.

Among the noted dead of 1878 we find the names of Samuel Bowles, W. C. Bryant, Catherine Beecher, and Bayard Taylor.

It is said that in drawing-rooms and at dinner-tables Caleb Cushing has been without a rival since Charles Sumner's death.

A Christmas letter written by Charlotte Brontë to her sister Emily has been found in a scrap-book at an old book-stand in England.

The National Reformer says the Napier Athenaeum, Dunedin, has been opened to the public on Sundays with the most favorable results.

There were about one hundred thousand cases of yellow fever in the South the past year, twenty thousand cases of which proved fatal.

J. B. Fuller is the inventor of an electric lamp which he claims possesses the illuminating power of two thousand four hundred candles.

Pope Pius IX. excommunicated Victor Emanuel; Pope Leo XIII. authorizes commemorative services in honor of his death. Even Rome moves.

The Unitarian Year Book for 1879 claims three hundred and fifty-eight denominational churches or societies, ninety-nine of which are without pastors.

Last week the Christian Church prayed for the conversion of the world to the Christian faith; but there is plenty of room in most of our churches yet.

It is stated that near-sightedness is exclusively an attendant of civilization, never being found among savages, and rarely among the peasantry of any country.

Rev. Mr. Pentecost has opened his revival business in Providence. Some six hundred persons in Fall River purchased the salvation he offers while he was there.

It is said that a person can write but one good song. Then we may not expect another song from Henry C. Work, the author of "Grandfather's Clock."

The protection of liberty requires the maintenance in full vigor of the many methods of free speech, free press, and free suffrage.—President Hayes's Message.

Anna Dickinson quits the stage for the present and resumes lecturing. Beecher tells his congregation that he will give up lecturing hereafter and stick to the pulpit.

Professor David Swing, of Chicago, is described as looking haggard and overworked. A large hall to cost $150,000 is to be built for his use during the coming year.

There are in France 1,000,000 Protestants, 5,000,000 Ultramontanists, while the remainder of the population, about five-sixths of the whole, have no religious belief.

There are nearly two hundred well-authenticated portraits of Mary, Queen of Scots. A collection of these portraits will soon be issued by Mr. William Patterson, of Edinburgh.

Edwin P. Whipple in writing of Choate and Webster says that "in one particular Choate excelled Webster,—that of constant high-bred courtesy to men and women of all ranks."

The rental of the pews in Plymouth Church for the last twenty-five years has amounted to almost $1,000,000. This year the premiums above the fixed rental amount to $27,978.

Woman suffrage is a success in Wyoming, where it has been weighed in the balance for eight years and never been found wanting. What is good for Wyoming is good for Massachusetts.

Inventions never cease. Look at the wonders of 1878! The magnetic writer; the carbon telephone; the phonograph; the megaphone; the phonometer; the electric light; and the microphone.

The first female clerks employed in the National Treasury were appointed by Secretary Chase in 1862. Now there are more than thirteen hundred women employed in the department at Washington.

Dr. Schliemann continues to make discoveries of relics and memorials of ancient Ilion. He has recently unearthed some very valuable articles which go to make good the gaps in ancient history.

The Public Library of Chicago has sixty thousand volumes, all of which have been collected since 1871. The circulation exceeds that of any other public library in the country except the one in Boston.

There are thirty-one Trinitarian Congregational churches in Boston, thirty Unitarian Congregational, twenty-eight Roman Catholic, twenty-seven Methodist, twenty-four Baptist, and ten Universalist.

At a parlor gathering of Liberals and Orthodox at Joseph Cook's, Mr. Alcott said, in discussing Channing: "If Unitarians had held up the doctrine where Channing left it, we should be better off to-day."

A Western paper says, "The silly twaddle put forth by Bob Ingersoll in his rehearsal of nonsense gathered from old infidel lecturers is thin enough to disgust every human being possessing an ounce of brains."

Talmage has commenced on Washington. He says: "I have watched that city while Congress was in session and when it was away, and the morals of the city are fifty per cent. better when Congress is away."

It is reported that a naturalized German-American has been forbidden to deliver a lecture in Berlin on the flourishing condition of our Western States, on the ground that his representations would tend to encourage Germans to emigrate.

The socialists in this country are called upon by the National Executive Committee of the socialist-labor party to hold mass meetings on the 18th of January, for the purpose of denouncing the conduct of Germany in its war on socialism.

Professor Henry Fawcett, in a lecture at the University of Cambridge, England, expressed the conviction that repressive measures are powerless to stay the progress of socialism. On the contrary, they would stimulate its development.

All that we are is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts, it is made up of our thoughts. If a man speaks or acts with an evil thought, pain follows him as the wheel follows the foot of him who draws the cart.—Buddha.

Girard College is, perhaps, the finest and most complete charity in the world. There are to-day within the walls of this institution over eight hundred scholars, all of them children of the poor. This is the best investment we know of in America.

Tennyson has a high wall built about his house to keep curious people away. These lion-hunters take their dinners with them and stand outside the wall by the hour waiting to get a sight of the great poet. A path lies about the walls trodden hard as adamant. Most of these curious people are Americans.

Concord celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its lyceum on Monday evening, January 7. Hon. E. Rockwood Hoar presided. He said only three of the original fifty-seven members of the organization were living. The President paid a tribute to Mr. Emerson, who was present, and spoke of the fact of his having delivered ninety-eight lectures before the lyceum during the past fifty years.

Germany is at war with socialism. Up to December 1 no less than one hundred and fifty-three clubs or societies have been closed, and forty periodicals and one hundred and thirty-five pamphlets placed upon the prohibited list. Besides this, the police gave notice to about fifty of the prominent socialists to leave Berlin and its neighborhood. Among these were two members of the imperial parliament.

The Kewick Guardian states that "The experiment is about to be tried of opening the reading-room of the Kewick Library on Sunday afternoons, from half-past one to half past five, free to all. The newspapers only will be removed from the table, and it will not be permitted to any to take out or exchange books on that day. The above arrangement went into effect the first Sunday of January, 1879.

Another miracle: an Oregon priest found a woman with one of her arms almost paralyzed, and her whole body continually subject to nervous spasms. He gave her a relic and a photograph of Pius IX., and told her to pray for nine days, in honor of the dead Pope, for her recovery. He found her at the end of the appointed time of prayer "fully restored, to health and speech." Who will tell the next one?

The First Liberal League of Lynn held its regular monthly meeting on Tuesday evening, January 7. The Secretary reported the addition of two members since the last meeting. The evening was spent in a general discussion of the principles and necessities of the Liberal League. Dr. W. D. Carlen was selected to prepare a paper on Church Taxation to be read at the next meeting of the League, which was fixed for February 4.

Mr. Lewes was one of the founders of that very clever, but most unsuccessful weekly, the Leader, of which he was the literary editor from its commencement in 1849 till July, 1854. Eleven years later he helped to usher into the world the Fortnightly Review, assuming the editorship and retaining it until he was succeeded by Mr. John Morley. The last article, which was printed under his name appeared in the June number of the Fortnightly, entitled "The Dread and Dislike of Science." It is said to be filled with passages highly characteristic of the author.

Garibaldi writes a letter to his constituents in Rome, telling them what he thinks should be done by the government for the good of Italy. He would send home at once all the young soldiers of the peasantry to sow grain, in order that Italy may no longer have to pay the foreigner the tribute of many millions to supply the bread she lacks. The burden of taxation he would replace by "one tax for all, paid by the rich in proportion to their property." To the priests, "for their own good and that of the community," he would give "a useful occupation, and take them from an employment which obliges them to sell lies to poor people." He would advise the three millions of Italians to "leave the spade and the hammer and teach all who pretend not to know it that this land is ours."

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING JANUARY 11.

L. O. Bane, $1; W. J. Ferris, $1; J. Chappellsmith, $6.20; John C. Barnett, $3.25; Sarah F. Earle, $4.20; Theophilus Brown, $10; S. Corner, $3; W. Fink, $6.40; W. H. Allen, $1.25; Hon. J. H. Williams, $6.40; D. H. Bond, $3.20; L. F. Gardner, $3.20; Cash, $8.27; S. B. Hunting, $4.20; D. F. Henderson, $1; B. F. Chapman, $6.40; H. D. Sisson, $5; E. S. Aldrich, $5; C. B. Hoffman, $8.45; Samuel Warbase, $26.40; T. C. Randolph, $3.20; Mrs. S. E. Milliken, $3.20; Mrs. J. A. J. Perkins, $3.20; Dr. C. H. Horch, $3.20; Sophia B. Carter, $3.20; Miss Matilda Goddard, $3.20; Samuel D. Bardwell, $3.20; J. P. Quincy, $3.20; Frederick Beck, $4.70; Mrs. A. B. Kempton, $3.20; Gardner Murphy, $13.20; S. E. Urblac, $3.20; Capt. T. P. Howes, $1.50; G. F. Putnam's Sons, $4.08; C. H. Webb, $3; Smith Wright, $3.20; Frank B. Ootton, $10; C. Cone, $3.20; Thomas Rauney, $1.60; Sarah F. Earle, $1.20; E. B. Stone, $10; C. M. Foster, 10 cents; G. W. McKenzie, $3; Clayton F. Word, $3.20; J. O. Kearns, $1.50; Isiah West, $6.40; Hon. W. Milligan, $4.40; Edwin Alden, $1.25; William Inott, $1.60; W. H. Morgan, $9.20; G. K. Withington, $2.75; P. C. Howland, $3.20; Rev. M. Schleesinger, $3.20; U. D. Gambrell, $3.20; J. F. Foster, $1; John F. Locke, $9.80; S. C. Eastman, $6.40; S. G. Morgan, $6.40; Fernando Desmar, $3.25; F. W. Currier, $1.20; H. N. Winlow, $3; Dr. N. S. Townshend, $3.20; Dr. J. T. Dickens, $3.20; J. O. Grierison, $3.20; Mrs. M. J. Barker, $3.20; Jackson Bros., $3.20; E. L. Sentz, $3.25; Mrs. E. D. Lucas, $3.20; John Wilson, $3.20; Noyes, Snow & Co., $2.70; James Humphrey, $3.20; Wm. J. Potter, $70; Harry Wheeler, $3.20; William Phillips, $4.70; Philip Klunger, $3; C. A. W. Oosting, $9.60; Chas. T. How, $30; Mrs. I. Thompson, $13.20; Rev. James Boyd, $7.38; J. B. Holroyde, $4.86; Charles Storrs, $5; Mrs. M. Gould, $1.50; New England News Co., $6.81; Geo. D. Hencke, $2.25.

The Index.

BOSTON, JAN. 16, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 221 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 36 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Art icles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELLEN WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

THE EDITOR of the Investigator sends us the following notice, with a request to insert it in this week's issue of THE INDEX—a request with which we cheerfully comply:—

Paine Celebration!—January 29!

This will take place in the Paine Memorial Building, and prove an occasion of much interest.

IMPORTANT MEETING!—The evening previous, the 28th, there will be a meeting for the purpose of forming a Joint Stock Company to preserve the Paine Memorial for the Liberal cause. As this is a very important meeting, it is desirable to have a general and prompt attendance of all in the city and vicinity who are disposed to assist, practically, in carrying out the object in view. Also any assistance that may be furnished by letter from friends in distant places will be very gratefully received. COMMITTEE.

URANINE is the most recently discovered, and perhaps the most remarkable, of all the coal tar or aniline group of coloring substances, now so extensively used for the adornment of the finest fabrics. Uranine is said by chemists to be the most highly fluorescent body known to science. Its coloring power is astonishing; a single grain will impart a marked color to nearly five hundred gallons of water. A most interesting experiment, which anybody may try, consists in sprinkling a few atoms of uranine upon the surface of water in a glass tumbler. Each atom immediately sends down through the water what appears to be a bright green rootlet; and the tumbler soon looks as if it were crowded full of beautiful plants. The rootlets now begin to enlarge, spread, and combine, until we have a mass of soft green-colored liquid. Viewed by transmitted light, the color changes to a bright golden or amber hue; while a combination of green and gold will be realized, according to the position in which the glass is held. For day or evening experiment nothing can be prettier than these trials of uranine, which are especially entertaining for the young folks. We are indebted for samples of uranine to the editors of the Scientific American, who are sending out specimens, free of charge, to all their readers.

A LETTER FROM MR. WASSON.

The subjoined communication from Mr. Wasson will command the interested attention of a great many readers:—

MR. ABBOT:

My Dear Sir,—I have attended carefully to your strictures upon my chapter of "Rights," as reported in the Advertiser. You courteously offer me space in your columns for an answer. Thanking you, I herewith submit some notes, hastily jotted down.

1. My statement that a right is what the general law of right requires in a certain relation "lacks scientific precision," you think; and for two reasons. First, I assume "a general law of right." In your opinion, the existence of any such law should, first of all, have been proved. But I am not constructing a theory of morals de novo; I am only seeking in the concrete fact, civil society, the ethical principles proper to it. In a chapter of a work so designed, one may take it for granted that something is known about ethics. I took it for granted only that there is a human sense of right, which, as applicable, and actually applied, to a large number of particulars, may be called general. But the sense of right is the sense of a peculiar sort of law, a law of conduct, which we call moral law. Moral law being applicable, like the sense of it, to a great number of particulars may, as applying to all, be spoken of as general. It is general relatively to any special application of it. My statement, then, put into other words, was this: A right is a special determination of moral law, or of ethical obligation. As such, it may be reasoned from the premises of ethics, taken in connection with some complex of conditions, physical, constitutional, and social, one or all. Upon the whole matter I wrote four sentences, including rights in ethics as preliminary to an inquiry immediately following, concerning the precise relation of rights specifically to ethics in general. What "begging of the question" was there in this? I begged none, for I raised none. What deduction of "concrete realities" from "abstract being" was there? There could be none, for there was no attempt at deduction of any sort. There was simply a subsumption of rights under the more general fact, ethical obligation, or moral law. And if it was dogmatic merely to state this inclusion without arguing it,—supposing that it would be obvious enough when merely stated,—still this could be no case of "deductive dogmatism," since, as just said, no deduction of any sort was attempted.

But you may contend that, without exemplifying, I suggested and justified such a mode of thought in saying that every real right "may be reasoned from ethical principles." Not from these alone, but at the same time by an inductive process, from a complex of conditions. Perhaps "ethical principles" was not the best expression; but let us look at the matter. In saying, "This animal is a horse," you assume the species, horse, as a species known. If called upon to sustain your statement, you would do so by showing that the animal has the known characteristics of that species. So in asserting a right, you assume the generic fact, moral right, as a fact known. If called upon to sustain your statement, how would you set about doing so? Would you not proceed in much the same way as before? You would show that, all the conditions and circumstances taken into the account, that particular right was implied in a more general idea of right common to yourself and the person you address. At least, I should not know how to proceed otherwise. If any one will tell me how to prove the reality of a particular right without assuming a fact of moral right not confined to that one particular,—without drawing at all upon any idea of right,—I shall have "a new wrinkle."

You seem to speak—or do I misapprehend you?—as if all reasoning, not to be "out of date," must be in the way of generalization. But there are two ways of reasoning, neither of which is, or ever will be, out of date. In the one case, you have in view certain particular phenomena, and inquire what general law, as yet unknown, they signify; in the other case, you have in view a general law, already known, and inquire whether this or that particular effect is referable to it. By the former process, Newton discovered the law of gravitation, or rather verified; for, strictly speaking, he did not discover it. Afterwards, the law being known, it was ascertained that the tides of the sea are a particular effect of it. The latter process is not one of mere deduction; of this and of mere induction as well, there is little use. You have the law in mind, and you try it on to see if it fits. Now, in ascertaining a right, what do you do? You do not generalize; a particular right is not a general law, it is a particular moral fact comprehended in the scope of moral law, as generally taken. The idea of moral right, moral law, is assumed in asking the question, Is there such a right? You have the idea of moral right, and you try it on. Does it fit the particular case? You say there is such a particular right. Are you quite unable to make it fit? You do not see that there is such a particular right. This is the sort of reasoning I suggested as suited to that particular kind of inquiry.

But secondly, you think it wrong to say that a right is what is ethically required "in a certain [human] relation." For "the right is the relation itself," you say. Let us see. Take the relation of parent and child. The appropriate rights and duties are indeed the moral relation. That is well discerned on your part. But there is also a physical relation of parent and child. And the rights and duties are what is ethically required in such a physical relation of human beings. One case for all.

2. You agree with me that there is an inseparable connection of rights and duties, but do not find it in one and the same person. I meant, however, that there is such connection in the same person; and so far Dr. Clarke apprehended me correctly. For example, there could not be the rights of a parent without the duties, nor the duties without the rights. The rights and duties of a citizen go together, and are inseparable. I think it must be so in all cases; but to go into the philosophy of the matter would lead me much too far.

3. You say that "Nature" is the mother of rights, not "the moral spirit," as I had said. By "Nature" you mean, I suppose, the order and constitution of the Universe. But this "Nature" is the mother of rats, too, as well as rights. To refer the latter only to "Nature," or the system of the Universe, is to go a good way off, and speak as indefinitely as possible. Where, I ask, and by what, in the immeasurable system of the world, are rights and duties affirmed? In and by the nature of moral beings only. From the moral nature of man they are born into his consciousness, and this nature is the immediate mother of them. Could there be rights and duties for man if there were no moral nature of man? Now, to refer rights to this nature, and so to include them in the sphere of ethics, is to speak much more definitely than one would in referring them only to Nature generally, that is to the system of the Universe. But it is still to speak quite indefinite enough, and is only the merest first step toward a precise understanding of the matter.

4. "All men," you say, "have equal duties precisely in the same sense in which they have equal rights." True; it was said in my chapter. But the duties of all are not equal in all respects; neither are their rights.

5. "The general right which includes every other is the right of every one to be let alone, and not to be governed at all until he interferes violently or fraudulently with his neighbor." You oppose this startling statement to mine, that the inclusive right is that of all men to a justly governed state of all. My dear sir, this is pretty bad! Where do you find that right? Are we here in America, fifty millions of us, "endowed by the Creator" with a right not to be governed at all until we commit crime? Mr. Tucker thinks so, and he is a good, brave young man, to whom my heart cleaved when I talked with him; and it is a thousand pities that he is off on such a tangent. But you! Well, surprises never end. But no, you do not think so! Against yourself, I make bold to say it; for you do not profess to find your "right," as stated, in the real world, that is,—the social world of man. For you presently infer the necessity of a governed state of society from the "co-existence of multitudinous moral individualities in juxtaposition." Where this "co-existence" obtains, you do not pretend that your right holds. Now, it obtains everywhere. It is as extensive as civilization, and as old as man. As old as man I say deliberately, meaning the moral being, man. For you cannot at all get your "moral individualities" without it. By virtue of the very constitution of human nature, there can be no "moral individuality," but through the effect of social relation. Why must I say it to you, a Darwinian? You hold, do you not, that the moral nature of man arrives only as an effect of his social relations, instincts, and affections? He becomes a moral being only in virtue of having for long, long periods been socially situated and moved. And here, in advance of all social "co-existence," you are getting a moral individuality fully fitted out with rights, the inclusive sense of which is a right of each to be let alone! For that co-existence, you say, is "not an abstract first principle." No; but it is a concrete first fact. And out of it, according to the theory of Darwin, if I understand it, comes the moral nature man, and with it all enunciation of rights and duties. And in the teeth of this, you set up an "abstract first principle" of your own, much too abstract for me, —the right of every one not to be governed at all until he commits a crime.

The old theorists imagined a primitive "state of nature," state of pure individualism, and conceived of rights appropriate to it. A chapter lies in my desk wherein I reviewed their doctrine, and found that the rights of their "state of nature," taken together, signify just what you assert, a right of every one to be let alone, and not to be governed at all. So I wrote it down a twelve-month ago. Having got every man entrenched in his let-alone right, those theorists conceived of all as coming out of their entrenchments and "entering into society." And then they bridged over the chasm between the right of all not to be governed, and the necessity of all to be governed, as best they could. Their bridge was an imaginary universal contract. Your process, my dear sir, seems to me much the same, as your "abstract first principle" is the same. There is this difference, though: that, whereas they got the right and duty of society out of an imaginary contract, you infer it from the natural fact of "co-existence," etc. That is an improvement. On the other hand, their contract, would one imagine it, actually forms a sort of moral bridge from the one state to the other. I find no bridge in your plan. You set up a "right," and then suffer a "necessity" to take it away; but of any reconciliation between the right and the necessity which subverts it I hear nothing.

For myself, I begin with the concrete fact, Man in Society. By man is meant a moral, or morally qualified, being; the concrete fact includes a moral nature. There could be no such man without social relation and its effect. The conception of moral personality quite apart from this is a mere brain-spun cobweb. All the parts of my "concrete fact" belong together; society implies man, man could not be such without society. It is only as socially fructified that man, a moral being, is rationally conceivable. The case is not one of mere "juxtaposition"; I do not like your word overmuch. It is a case of active commerce, of the interweaving and interaction of interests that could not otherwise exist; of social, sympathetic, intellectual and moral connection and correlation, communion, of the awakening and occupation of powers through relation, and so on. Look at yourself. For years you have been laboring to alter the state of opinion and morals in America. Your very soul is in it, as any one may see. In other words, a social interest is largely what engages, impels, and inspires you. "Juxtaposition" goes but a very little way toward describing your relation to your countrymen. Now, in one form or another, a social interest engages all men who are really men and not mere animals, —even to Denis Kearney; and the very making of man is in it. Well, I contemplate this "concrete fact" in all the stages of its development, following in the track of archaeological and historical investigation; but especially study it here in America, where chiefly it is before my eyes, without neglecting its contemporaneous forms in other countries; and having duly considered it, I endeavor to distinguish and bring out clearly the principles that really give it health, wholesomeness, and power to live and grow. It is slow work and I am a slow worker, and expect only a partial success at the best; but something may at least be done toward correcting that shallow or vicious opinion which mischievously meddles with the course of vital development and tends to pervert it.

In that concrete fact I find always a limited right not to be governed; that is, a sphere of personal freedom. It is always limited, always correlate with the right and duty of every community to make a governed state of itself as a whole and for every one of its members. But the right of the community to govern is a limited one also; and it is much my object to find for both of the two correlatives, personal liberty and the governed State, an ethical ground and limit at once. Meantime, the right to freedom is itself a right to the governed state, for there could be no real freedom without this. And so all the best authorities on your side have at one time or another confessed. "On your side," I say, but you do not really belong there.

You say well that, if there be a right of all to a governed state, "we shall not wisely suppress the question: Who is to do the governing?" I echo that with all my heart. But, again, we shall do well not to answer it heedlessly, without a care to get hold of the matter by the proper handle. We shall do well not to take the current caucus yawp for an oracle; not to take that answer for the true one which it best pleases all those to hear who least care for any great interest, and are least capable of caring for any. Who is to do the governing? "Everybody, hit or miss!" is the ready answer of all who do not think seriously. Some who do think join them; but all the not-thinking class are loud for indiscriminate rule. A disposition to take up your question, and to pursue it in the gravest, bravest, most studious spirit of science, would be a cheering sign.

6. I did not deny the "natural right" of suffrage, for I agree with you in suppressing the distinction between "natural" rights and—unnatural ones, should I say? In my chapter three principal classes of rights were distinguished, two of which are specially conditioned; and the right of suffrage was found in one of the latter. The result was that the right of suffrage will be universal when the conditions to it are so. It is not obvious that they are universal at present. I undertook, however, no polemic against universal suffrage, and here undertake none against you, but bring these notes to an end with the feeling that we are neither so far apart as you had supposed, nor so near together as I could wish.

Yours very truly, D. A. WASSON.
WEST MEDFORD, JAN. 1, 1879.

ETHICS AS THE SCIENCE OF SOCIETY.

The foregoing letter by one of New England's foremost ethical thinkers is entitled to the most respectful and thoughtful consideration, and has certainly received our own. In adding some further reflections on the same subject, we desire to make special acknowledgment of the extreme kindness and courtesy of Mr. Wasson's tone throughout: a circumstance all the more pleasing because we construe it as an assurance that our frank criticisms gave no offence, as indeed we hoped to give none.

As we suspected might be the case, the report from which we quoted in our former article [THE INDEX, December 26] was too incomplete to give an adequate conception of Mr. Wasson's paper. Without any reference to our former remarks, however, we find some points of interest in the present letter which should not be overlooked. In the hope of bringing out some ethical truths which seem to us very important, we shall confine what we now say to these main points.

1. The opening paragraph of the letter presents Mr. Wasson's view of that which is usually denominated the moral sense. "The sense of right," he says, "is the sense of a peculiar sort of law, a law of conduct, which we call moral law. Moral law, being applicable, like the sense of it, to a great number of particulars, may, as applying to all, be spoken of as general." That is, the human mind is originally conscious of moral obligation in the abstract, as a "general law" of conduct, and becomes conscious of moral obligation in particular cases only by applying this "general law" to them; the "more general fact, ethical obligation, or moral law," is first known, and afterwards the specific case of moral obligation is "subsumed" under it; the original perception, or intuition, or "sense," is of the universal moral law, and not of the particular moral relation in each case as it is presented in experience. We do not think we misunderstand the doctrine stated in this paragraph; if we do not, Mr. Wasson holds that the universal is known before the particular, which can only be done a priori, or independent of experience.

Our own view is different. How any general or universal law can be known by itself, anterior to or independent of particular experiences, is to us quite inconceivable. But even if it can be thus known, we still do not see how it can possess any objective validity at all. That is to say, if the moral law is known prior to experience by an internal "sense of right," and is not learned by actually coming into contact (so to speak) with moral relations existing outside of us, we do not see how this merely internal law can be imposed on outside facts at all, or be shown to possess any real authority over society. All forms of the a priori philosophy have been historically wrecked in the attempt to pass from the subjective to the objective. Certainly we cannot see how a merely subjective and therefore strictly individual law, not gathered from the general experience of the race, can ever be shown to be binding on the race as such. If such a moral law is challenged by any one, how can its authority be vindicated or maintained? This is no idle question; for to-day all social morality is challenged in the abused name of liberty, and can be permanently sustained so far only as its authority rests on the solid ground of science. It is in no controversial spirit that we point out what appears to us a defective ethical basis; our wish is simply to indicate the chief moral want of our times,—that is, a thoroughly scientific ethical system which shall be proof against the frantic follies of individualism run mad, and establish a better social order on the impregnable foundation of the scientific method.

Briefly put, our opinion is that moral obligation is originally discerned in particular moral relations, and only derivatively in their general law; and that their objective existence and obligation can alone give objective validity, generality, or authority to moral law in the abstract. Whoever would know our views on this subject fully is referred to our lecture on "Darwin's Theory of Conscience," in THE INDEX of March 12, 1874. But it may be said here that the original perception of moral necessity (i.e., absolute obligation), like that of mathematical necessity, is an impression made upon the cognitive sensibility by a particular moral relation known a posteriori, not by a general moral law known a priori. This we hold to be a truth of vast import in ethical science. For instance, William borrows a book from Henry; by this transaction, the two are brought into a particular moral relation expressed by the proposition—"William ought [owes] to return the book to Henry." The moral obligation arises from the very nature of the case; it is perceived to be a relation necessarily involved in the facts; if it is regarded as a special case subsumed under a previously known law, the law thus previously known is itself the result of repeated experiences of similar relations in the past. Just as a theorem in geometry must be seen to be demonstrated in a particular case, before it can be accepted as necessarily true in all similar cases, so the existence of moral obligation in a particular case must be perceived, before it can be held necessarily true in all cases similar to it. It would be a begging of the question to assume the law before the fact which proves it. Moral truth is exactly like mathematical truth in this respect, and indeed like all truth which has the characteristic mark of necessity; the necessity must be apparent in the first instance, in the particular case, or it will never be apparent at all. This we hold to be extremely important to the establishment of the fact of moral obligation as a natural necessity rather than a mere preponderance of expediencies—the one great principle without which the very idea of ethics as a science totally vanishes. Our view plants ethics on the impregnable foundation of experience—an intellectual experience precisely analogous to physical experience. When fully taken in all its bearings, we suspect from other parts of his letter that Mr. Wasson may not dissent from this view, at least substantially.

2. We omit to make correction of some misunderstandings of our real position on Mr. Wasson's part, in order to express our glad acceptance of certain fundamental truths which it delights us to see him lay down so clearly. When he says: "By virtue of the very constitution of human nature, there can be no 'moral individuality' but through the effect of social relation,"—"For myself, I begin with the concrete fact, Man in Society" [i.e., the individual in association with other individuals], etc., etc.,—we hail his statement as one of the most advanced and profoundly true that has ever come under our notice; and the lecture above referred to shows that we have long held a similar opinion. We cheerfully abandon the ill-chosen word "juxtaposition," which he criticises justly; we meant all he describes so well, in the way of mutual action and reaction in the social state. It will be an enormous advance in moral science, when the old triple division of "duties to oneself, duties to one's neighbor, and duties to God," is finally dismissed as antiquated, and when the new conception of all moral relations as necessarily social relations takes its place. Mr. Wasson is the only ethical writer by whom we have as yet seen this wonderfully fruitful truth clearly foreshadowed. The fact that he seems to emphasize it so highly makes us hope and anticipate the noblest things of the book which he is at present engaged in writing, and of which the paper he read to the Chestnut Street Club was a chapter. Probably there will be numerous divergences between his views and ours, especially in some points of practical application—the suffrage question, for example; but if his forthcoming treatise is to take the ground of the essentially social character of all rights and duties without exception, all minor differences will be swallowed up in our hearty agreement with this great, fundamental principle. And we are glad to hope that he and we are nearer together in our moral philosophy than he even now supposes.

. ABOUT "DISINGENUOUSNESS."

In THE INDEX of Oct. 17, 1878, I exposed, under the head of "LIFE INSURANCE CHEATING," the now notorious "New Departure" in business of the largest Life Insurance Company in the world. Not a word, fact, or figure of that article has thus far been successfully controverted, to my knowledge.

Governor Robinson, a trustee of that company, in his recent message to the Legislature of New York, recommends the abolition of its Insurance Department, because, he says, "Its whole history shows that the community would have fared much better without it than with it." He also says, "I am informed that within the last seven years thirty life insurance companies have failed, involving a loss to citizens of this State of $36,927,000. This shows how little protection the department gives."

Previous to the commencement of these failures, the Governor thinks the department "did comparatively little harm and no good." Whether this is true or not, there is a potent cause, to which the Governor makes no allusion, why it has done much harm and no good since. About ten years ago, the President, with the connivance of other officers of Governor Robinson's own company, began the corruption of the Insurance Department by bribing George W. Miller, the Superintendent. In about two or three years, he was deposed from his office for having received bribes from insurance companies to the amount of $47,000. At the head of the list of those who gave the bribes was F. S. Winston, President of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, of which Governor Robinson was then, as he still is, a trustee, with a check of $2500! How far the department has been corruptible or corrupted since Miller, Governor Robinson must know as well as anybody. If Rumor lies in regard to the matter, he would have done well to correct her lies in his message.

At all events, one fact Governor Robinson, as a trustee of the Mutual Life, must know better than most men; viz., that whatever the policy-holders of any company may have lost by its failure, the policy-holders of the Mutual Life who have been during the last seven years obliged to relinquish their policies are a far larger number of men and have been defrauded of a far larger sum, by the injustice of the company in not performing its promise to pay an equitable cash surrender value. To remedy this evil, he recommends nothing but to exempt the company from any legal supervision whatever. More than that, as trustee of the company, he must be held responsible for the attempt of the officers to evade, by inserting in every application for a policy a waiver of the benefit of any such legislation, a law already existing in California, and likely to be passed in other States, to prevent such injustice in future. This is the way in which all privileged corporations are always trying to override the rights of individuals. As an individual man, Lucius Robinson is doubtless incapable of any such "disingenuousness"; but as a trustee of the largest life insurance company in the world, with $85,000,000 in the control of officers perfectly autocratic by the possession of probably ten thousand perpetual proxies, and utterly disingenuous, as has been abundantly proved, even his being Governor of the Empire State does not prevent him from being the chattel of the corporation.

Now who is this Mr. Winston, who is at the bottom of all this disingenuousness? He is said to be a member, in fact a pillar, of Rev. Dr. John Hall's church in New York,—one of the most evangelical and wealthy churches of that great city. I am not going to attribute his disingenuousness to the evangelism of that church or to Scripture texts on the subject, such as the fifth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, verses four and five, or the twenty-first chapter of the Apocalypse, verse eight. All I have to say is, that if a million-dollar church is so inefficient in securing ingenuousness in its prominent members, it has no reason to ask exemption from taxation on the ground of its moral utility, nor have the sacred Scriptures any preëminent fitness as a moral textbook in our common schools. If the Church or the Scriptures have any power to produce ingenuous, frank, and fair dealing, in Mr. Winston they have a subject worthy of their fullest force; for perhaps no man alive has the destiny of more human families intrusted to him. Personally and individually, I have not the slightest animosity against Mr. Winston, nor do I think he has against me. But his animosity against what he calls the Boston Savings-Bank Surrender plan, advocated by me, is not only bitter but basely disingenuous, as I shall proceed to show. That plan grows logically and of a mathematical necessity out of a principle first practically adopted in 1863 by the Mutual Life itself, in making its dividends of surplus, called the "Contribution System." This system, instead of assuming that the assets of the company are a common fund, of which no member has a right to claim any determinate share beyond the fulfillment of his contract, assumes that each member owns, subject to the terms of the contract, the exact reserve which has arisen from his past payments, and consequently that any excess of interest over four per cent. on his reserve belongs to him. In other words, by the "Contribution System" each member receives in dividend, according to the contribution of his own policy to create the general surplus.

The "Boston Savings-Bank Surrender plan" only attaches this corollary to the Contribution System; to wit, that when a member retires he has a right to carry with him the reserve on his policy, less a certain charge, which is to be determined, not by the amount of his said reserve at all, but by the present value of what his policy might be expected to pay in future towards death claims if he were to remain. This is conceded to be correct by every life insurance expert on the face of the earth, so far as I know, including Prof. Bartlett, of the Mutual Life, himself. Yet because its adoption would greatly reduce the profits to be got out of the business by life insurance managers and agents, Mr. Winston has fought it for ten years by every species of disingenuousness and a free use of policy-holders' money.

For example, he and McCurdy the Vice-President, or some simpleton in their behalf, inspired the silly article underneath, and beyond any doubt paid out of the Mutual Life's money one hundred and fifty dollars or more for its insertion in the reading columns of the New York Daily Times of Dec. 18, 1878. Without reading it entire, the reader cannot comprehend the situation and what follows:—

Close of the Insurance Controversy—Elizur Wright.

[From the Hudson River Chronicle.]

After what may be fairly claimed as five years' deliberate notice to the minor companies, the Mutual has effectually entered upon its plan of a reduction in the annual rates and price of life insurance. The discussion of the former proposal five years since was permitted to close, by an adjournment of the controversy with other companies, and a postponement of the actual reduction of rates, until the present. The fact that Henry B. Hyde, of the Equitable, the most earnest antagonist of this policy, left for Europe upon this present announcement of the proposed reduction, indicates the tacit, probably unavoidable, assent of all the other great companies to the experiment of the Mutual. We are glad to find, on careful inquiry, that the result is a great public success, and that, besides the big harvest which the Mutual is already scooping in as with a (McCormick-McCurdy) reaper, a general revival in life insurance is progressing to an extent which engages all the energies of every sound company.

So the protracted fight for the reduction of rates is at an end. To those inside the great financial circles that rule the land, the intensity of the strife has presented one of the fiercest fights in the arena of public affairs. In the old Roman arena, when the gladiators were vanquished, the fatal sign, "Pollice verso," was given for their execution. In the insurance lists, the champions of the assets reverse the signal, and, in our vernacular, the word is, "Simon says thumbs up!"

We say this in full view of the puerile effort to galvanize the dead carcass of Elizur Wright's Massachusetts surrender-value policy of extermination into an opposition in Boston; of the legal opinion of Ropes, Gray & Loring even, and the other grimy greasers of the Hub, who want to stop the wheels of progress until their provincial interest is specially anointed. The surrender-value wisdom of Elizur, incorporated in the Massachusetts laws, is driving life insurance business out of that State, as also out of so many others of the States ruled by the blackmailers. Hence the growling in Boston is perfectly natural. The Boston Herald and its mercenary copyists will make very few shekels out of Elizur. As they will see by consulting the Bible Dictionaries, "Elizur" was the sole captain of the outcast tribe of Reuben, the Arab Jews. "No judge, no prophet, no hero of the tribe of Reuben, is handed down to us," says the record. "Reuben relinquished the faith of Jehovah. They were scattered and lost in the desert." The only thing recorded about their Captain, Elizur, is his putting up a couple of hundred shekels of silver upon the dedication of the altar of Moses, and hanging around on "the south side of the Tabernacle of the Congregation" for a surrender-value. The ancient was a true prototype of the modern Elizur with his patent plan for dispersing assets.

This Boston captain of the life insurance infidels, Elizur Wright, published a column of abuse of Mr. Winston. Affecting the sarcastic, cynical satire of a Diogenes, he only finds himself pilloried as a scoffer—another Therapistes, one who abuses princes,—in the reply of Mr. Winston. The "Boston Savings-Bank Surrender plan" was set up in New York under the respectable and sober indigenous name of the "Knickerbocker Company," with Elizur Wright as the "Boston consulting actuary," after his expulsion from some pension on the Mutual Life staff.

Well, the "Knickerbocker Company" barely exists, by the grace of the Superintendent of Insurance. It stands, like Lot's wife with her head turned, stationary as the pillar of salt, but salt that will not save her. The whilom President of the Company, Stanton, has only escaped the State Prison delegation of Chase, Lambert & Co. by a hasty flight from his dilapidated trust. Elizur's savings bank scheme, on his own ground under Massachusetts law, reached no better end than that of the tribe of Reuben.

To this I sent for insertion in the Times a reply, not so much to vindicate myself as the plan. It was returned to me by the next mail with the following note:—

THE "TIMES" OFFICE, NEW YORK,
Dec. 27, 1878.

Dear Sir,—I am instructed to return to you the accompanying communication, and to say that as the Hudson River Chronicle article was published as an advertisement any reply to it can only be published in a similar way. Yours respectfully,

EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

Elizur Wright, Esq.

To this note I replied as follows:—

BOSTON, Dec. 28, 1878.

EDWARD A. BRADFORD, Esq., New York:

Dear Sir,—If want of pay is the only reason why the article you obligingly returned to me this morning could not be inserted in the Times, will you be so kind as to inform me what it will cost me to have it inserted as conspicuously as that to which it is a reply, and much oblige yours truly,

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

This note was returned to me with the following endorsement:—

"Can be inserted as reading matter on fifth page,—with quotation attached as if from some other paper,—at the rate of $1.00 per line agate measurement." N. Y. TIMES, per E. T. ALLEN.

Dec. 29, 1878.

As I fight this battle only with my own money, and had discovered what the enemy's shot had cost it, I did not conclude to pay the Times for returning my shot a sum which, if it had had the enterprise, independence, and patriotism it has obtained credit for, it would have paid me.

But I wrote immediately to Winston, suggesting a small hole for him to creep out at, in order to tempt him into a reply.

BOSTON, Jan. 2, 1879.

F. S. WINSTON, Esq., Pres. Mut. Life Ins. Co., N. Y.
Dear Sir,—An article appeared in the New York Daily Times of the 18th ult., which contained the following sentence:—

"The 'Boston Savings-Bank Surrender plan' was set up in New York under the respectable and sober indigenous name of the 'Knickerbocker Company,' with Elizur Wright as the Boston consulting actuary, after his expulsion from some pension on the Mutual Life staff."

The statement I have underscored, if generally believed, would seriously injure my standing in public estimation. It seems quite improbable that the Times adopted or gave currency to it by the mere will and judgment of its own editorial scissors. As you are the person who most certainly must know whether it is true or not, if you do not disclaim authorizing its publication in the Times, I shall expect you either publicly to prove its truth, or certify to me in answer to this that it is untrue.

Yours truly,

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

For once Winston gave up his sublime policy of silence, and replied characteristically and evasively, as follows:—

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK,
140 to 146 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1879.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Esq., Boston, Mass.:

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of yesterday, the executive officers of this company did not procure pay for or approve the article you allude to, and knew nothing of its intended publication until they saw it in print. Respectfully yours,

F. S. WINSTON, Pres.

Now everybody, almost, knows that such dignified "executive officers" do not do their dirty work with their own fingers. They employ close-mouthed agents. When I showed Winston's letter to the editors of the Times they broke into a guffaw at the comicality of the situation. The principal editor, without my asking it, said the Times would correct the injurious statement, which it did, after a sort, in its issue of the 10th inst.

Winston knows very well that I never had either pension or position on the Mutual Life staff to be expelled from, and he knows equally well that the Mutual Life's money paid the Times for that silly article. If he really does not know it, his ignorance is sufficient reason why he should step down. Paying fourteen dollars an inch for eleven inches of scurrility and falsehood is not quite the thing for the venerable head of a great corporation in the nineteenth century, whether that corporation is financial or ecclesiastical. If some way is not soon found to prevent such corporations from entrapping and cheating the ignorant and unwary, it will be because the souls of our living legislators are rotter than the bodies of our dead ones.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Jan. 12, 1879.

Communications.

LIBERAL CHRISTIANS VERSUS BIGOTTED LIBERALS.

I have before directed attention to the rapidity with which modern religious thought was becoming liberalized. When so great a personage as the Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford dares to publicly abandon the ancient line of battle of the Church, counselling students of theology to intrench themselves by study of the historical method of scriptural interpretation, to the utter exclusion of time-honored precedents, and when from his lofty position the utterance of such advice falling upon the public ear creates no sensation save of approbation, the event is pregnant with a meaning which liberals will do well to ponder.

Surely no word of any language, no abstraction ever conceived of by man, is so capable of enlisting the noblest feelings of the soul as the one word "Liberty." Grand as were the achievements of Alexander and Napoleon, how insignificant they appear when compared with deeds of infinitely less magnitude, but in which the inspiration was love of liberty. John Hampden dying for English freedom; Emmet yielding his young life a willing sacrifice upon his country's altar; the generous Warren staining with his life-blood the field of Bunker Hill, are only instances among the scores which history chronicles, and which stir the hot blood of youth and the feeble pulse of age.

But between liberty and license there is a great gulf fixed; and while it argues a high moral spirit for a nation to be aroused in defence of the former, a general desire to enjoy the dead sea fruits of the latter can only pervade society when it is tottering to its ruin. When a people in their search after strange Gods abandon purity, they have entered upon a path which can have but one termination. To the unbiased observer, a section of the liberal army appears to have left the chaste goddess to her own devices, while they are concerning themselves chiefly in the task of arousing popular sentiment in favor of that base and nauseous growth, free love. Where great principles are at stake it is possible to array great bodies of men in their defence; thus Cromwell gathered the hosts that overwhelmed the ancient monarchy of England; thus Voltaire, hated with a depth of bitterness that perhaps fell to the lot of no other man of his age, counted among his coworkers in his great battle with the torturers of humanity the very men who felt the greatest enmity against him. It is for lofty ideals alone that men welcome martyrdom; to fancy an advocate of free love in that character seems a strong paradox.

To the lasting honor of Christianity be it said, it has upheld the privacy and sacredness of home. In spite of all its false doctrines, its poverty of argument, its persecutions and crimes, it has withstood the attacks of criticism through all these ages. It was not because of the purity of Christian marriage ties that Voltaire hurled his resistless shafts at the Church. It was not because of Christian morality that Hume took up arms against her. Thomas Paine made war upon the Bible but not upon the family. It is because of the high standard of morality that Christianity has inculcated, because it has been the guardian of the household, protecting it from the libertine, because it has saved fathers and mothers to their children, that Christianity, vulnerable in so many points, has so long sustained itself. When the growing spirit of the age asserted itself in the formation of anti-theological societies, it was the hope of liberals that all the worthy features of Christianity might be retained while its worthless appendages only were dropped. But, alas! no sooner had liberalism obtained for itself an acknowledged place in society, no sooner had its leaders begun to win popular respect, than a split occurred in its ranks occasioned by the last question in the world which ought to have vexed its counsels. The truth is, there are large numbers of people who imagine that in giving up their Bibles and casting aloof from the churches they have entirely fulfilled their moral destinies. They have been impelled to scepticism more by a desire of freedom from all restraint than by a conscientious search after truth. Of such it may safely be said the churches are well rid, at the same time that liberals have received a most undesirable accession. Having abandoned faith, these recruits are—to borrow a well-worn pulpit simile—very much in the position of a craft at sea without a rudder. Without settled convictions of any kind they are ready to run wildly after any new doctrine that may be promulgated; they feel all the bitterness of renegades for the religion they once professed, bringing reproach upon the liberal name by their violent denunciations of everything held sacred by the religious portion of the community, and not unfrequently fittingly end an aimless life by being gathered back into their original fold through the labors of some local Moody.

People of this type are liberal in no sense of the term; indeed, nothing can be more illiberal than the course they pursue with reference to those who differ from their transient moods of belief. They are fertile only in mischief, but it must be confessed they are adepts at that. Liberty affords them little satisfaction, license being what they crave.

Now while Christianity in the persons of Dean Stanley, Dr. Ince, Dr. Winchell, and other eminent men, is doing such service in the cause of advancement and real liberty, forgetting dogmatism in its zeal for popular good, the avowed disciples of reform are degraded in their own eyes and in the estimation of the world by a mob of camp-followers who masquerade beneath a title they disgrace. The one hopeful sign in the horizon of liberalism lies in the fact that a rupture between these ill-wedded and uncongenial factions has already occurred. It was inevitable; and those well-meaning persons who are seeking to reunite them are doing a work which in the event of its success would blast the future of the movement.

The hope of the world lies in rational religion. The future of the so-called Orthodox church depends upon its ability to conform to the changed state of popular feeling; and recent events go far toward proving that some of the most eminent Churchmen perceive this and are striving to lead where otherwise they would be compelled to follow. They present toward scientific investigation a respectful, almost an expectant, attitude, and treat scientific results with marked attention. In many of the great questions which receive the support of liberals, these modern Christians are able and zealous coworkers. Political reform, popular education, social elevation of the masses, all these subjects, dear to the liberal heart, have the unhesitating support of men who are acknowledged leaders in the Church. Let liberals then take heed lest these later comers in their own peculiar field excel them in achievements for the good of humanity. It would indicate wisdom, if amicable relations with liberal Christians were cultivated, as upon themes of mutual interest they already stand upon the same ground. In maintaining such relations no necessity for compromising principles would exist, while there would assuredly be some advantage to be derived from intercourse and cooperation with men of standing, ability, ripe scholarship, and catholic views.

Upon minor points there will of necessity be great variety in the views of mankind upon religious subjects. Questions which have vexed the brain ever since it assumed the functions of thought will not be laid by any system of philosophy. While one evolutionist may see in his theory proof that all forms of existence were derived from matter working through unchangeable laws without external supervision, another, while accepting this theory of creation, sees through and above all the hand of God, framing universal laws and keeping the grand machinery of the spheres in harmony.

Perhaps the weight of reason is with the atheist; but the suffering heart of humanity cries out for God.

There are depths of emotional feeling in some lives which it were wholly vain for persons of different temperament to attempt to understand. The idea of divinity assuming human form, suffering human sorrows, dying the most ignominious of deaths, and withal bringing from on high the message of eternal brotherhood with poor mortality, appeals with irresistible force to such minds. Why should we quarrel with their conclusions? Better, far better, than such a course would be the policy which, leaving in the background such dissenting points, should seek to blend all sects in one harmonious whole upon questions which appeal forcibly to all right-minded men.

CHARLES E. PERKINS.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Dec. 28, 1878.

SILVER AND GOLD.

It is unfortunately true, as your correspondent says in No. 467, that "the silver question will be upon us again soon with increased virulence"—unfortunate because it seems to be so difficult to persuade our people to look at the facts, and so easy to speculate on the basis of assumption and imagination.

At the present day there still are a few theorists who maintain the doctrine of bi-metalism, but in fact "all the European nations tend toward a gold standard as a necessary progress. Holland, Austria, and Spain join England, Germany, and the Scandinavian States; and finally what is called the Latin Union itself, without having repudiated the double standard in principle, has nevertheless repudiated it in fact, since for two years past no silver is coined in the most important of these States; namely, France"; and although in this country we have nominally had two standards, yet practically we have had but one, and can have but one.

A double standard for money is a practical absurdity and impossibility as great as a double standard of weight or measure.

The cheaper standard will always drive out and supplant the other, and bi-metalism with a 412½ grains silver dollar means that dollar for the single standard.

That silver has largely declined in gold value in the markets of the world, the two principal being London and New York, is undeniable. That the market price in the open markets of the world is the only means we have of determining practically whether any article has risen or fallen in price is also undeniable. And it is impossible to avoid referring price to some definite standard; and to be of use that standard must be the one which the principal commercial nations and the best thinkers and experts have agreed to be the nearest attainable approximation to invariability. That standard is gold; and it does seem as if we might learn by the experience of other nations and not attempt, as Victor Bonnet says, to go "back to the most superannuated practices."

It is doubtless true that a silver dollar of 412½ grains at its market value will, at the present time, buy more of many articles than it would have done five or ten years ago, and the reason is very plain: that the cost of producing nearly every article has decreased without any disturbing increase of demand.

But a silver dollar will not buy (except as subsidiary coin, or in limited quantities) as much as a gold dollar will, for the reason that the cost of producing silver has decreased also, while the cost and market price of gold have remained more nearly stable.

Gold, as a matter of fact, is less affected by variations in supply and demand than any other merchandise, owing to the universal desire to possess it for use and ornament, and to the limited extent of its production; and it is this peculiarity which fits it for use as the standard money of the world.

But gold is not wanted at the present day in civilized countries to any great extent for common currency, and least of all in this country. The more perfect and honest the banking system is, the less amount of gold is required to run it. The main use of gold is to pay balances, to act as that particular universally-desired merchandise which will be, and legally must be, accepted in settlement of accounts, for legal-tender in short, and as a regulator of the issue and test of the soundness of bank-bills.

Our currency must, and will be, mainly paper; the only important question is, What sort of paper shall it be? It ought to be as good as the standard money of the world, and as abundant as the legitimate wants of trade. How much the commerce of the country requires cannot be decided by counting noses, nor be determined by act of Congress. It can only be known by a comparison of the views of those who have capital to lend and those who desire to borrow.

Banking ought to be free to all who will comply with certain conditions necessary to ensure that the bills issued shall always be what they profess to be,—good as gold.

The present law makes it certain that no man, however little he may be acquainted with business men and their ways, can ever lose by a bill proving worthless.

Whether that result can be had in any better way I don't undertake to say. Doubtless improvements may be made in present laws, in the way of making them more equitable and universally available.

The less government interferes with the business of banking, beyond securing the bill-holder, the better. We, the people, have a natural right to do our own banking business provided we do it honestly, but we cannot by act of Congress confer any value on gold, silver, or paper which it does not possess by and under the laws of trade, which no government enacts and none can repeal. To attempt to make silver or paper pass for more than its real value is to try to cheat somebody; and the nation which does it will itself be the worst sufferer.

F. S. C.

ANOTHER VOICE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I was unable to attend the Liberal League Convention at Syracuse, and addressed you a letter there which you may not have received. I sympathized heartily with the position taken in the admirable address of Judge Hurlbut, and in the action of those delegates who united with you in forming the new Liberal League of America. I do not know whether there is any way for transferring a "charter membership" from one League to the other, but desire, at all events, to be counted with those who favor "amendment" rather than "repeal." I am no lawyer, and am perhaps therefore disqualified from expressing an opinion as to the constitutionality of a proper and effective law against the traffic in obscene literature, and the employment of the United States mails as carriers of the vile trash. If necessary, let there be an amendment of the Constitution which will authorize such a law. On presenting a package at the Brooklyn post-office a few days since, I was questioned as to whether it contained glass or candy. Surely, if a discrimination can be made against such commodities, how much greater is the justice and necessity of protecting our mail service from the disgraceful office of propagating vice and obscenity!

I cannot think that many of our liberal friends can be aware of the enormity and true nature of the traffic in this vile literature, else they would rally by your side, that the influence of liberal religion might be set wholly toward its extinction. A traffic so abominable and corrupting has no rights which decent men are bound to respect.

To what end do we all live and labor, and especially we of the liberal faith, if it be not the elevation of character? Unless this is the outcome of free religion, the movement will wither and die under the moral obloquy of mankind, which it will receive as surely as it will deserve it. I joined the Liberal League hoping it would drop all side issues, and unite all who were heartily in favor of the complete secularization of the State. To that end I shall always be glad to devote whatever influence I possess; but I desire to be unequivocally "counted out" of any organization which lends even a tacit sanction to that modern revival of an ancient barbarism popularly known as "free love." Practiced, with its twin-system, communism, by mankind in the earliest periods of human development, it is an offspring of preceding generations of man's brute ancestry. Its revival in this age is a humiliating evidence that we have not yet outgrown some of the worst tendencies of our Simian progenitors.

Yours for a higher evolution,

LEWIS G. JAMES.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1879.

A FATHER who had passed innumerable sleepless nights has immortalized himself by discovering a method of keeping babies quiet. The process is described as follows: "As soon as 'pet' awakes, set it up, propped by a pillow, if it cannot sit alone, and smear its fingers with treacle; then put half-a-dozen feathers into its hands, and it will sit and pick the feathers from one hand to the other until it drops asleep. As soon as it wakes again, repeat the operation; and in place of the fret and cry of former nights, there will be silence and quiet repose."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 50 insertions, 6c per line.	For 51 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
13	25	26	51
14	26	27	52
15	27	28	53
16	28	29	54
17	29	30	55
18	30	31	56
19	31	32	57
20	32	33	58
21	33	34	59
22	34	35	60
23	35	36	61
24	36	37	62
25	37	38	63
26	38	39	64
27	39	40	65
28	40	41	66
29	41	42	67
30	42	43	68
31	43	44	69
32	44	45	70
33	45	46	71
34	46	47	72
35	47	48	73
36	48	49	74
37	49	50	75
38	50	51	76
39	51	52	77
40	52	53	78
41	53	54	79
42	54	55	80
43	55	56	81
44	56	57	82
45	57	58	83
46	58	59	84
47	59	60	85
48	60	61	86
49	61	62	87
50	62	63	88
51	63	64	89
52	64	65	90
53	65	66	91
54	66	67	92
55	67	68	93
56	68	69	94
57	69	70	95
58	70	71	96
59	71	72	97
60	72	73	98
61	73	74	99
62	74	75	100

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEPHENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
G. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street Boston

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Leaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the Idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets. 1 vol. 1.50	ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols. 3.00	ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50	ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Orthodoxy. 2 vols. 2.00	AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine. 2 vols. 2.00	BACON'S Essays. 1.25	BAGEHOT on the English Constitution. 2.25	BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy. 1.75	BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50	BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations. 3.00	BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems. 2.50	BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols. 6.00	BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls. 1.00	BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury. 2.25	BROOKS (CHARLES T.). The World-Friend. 2.25	BROOKS (CHARLES T.). The Tall Student. 1.75	BUEHNER'S Force and Matter. 2.25	BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols. 6.00	CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol. 1.90	CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions. 3.00	CERVANTES' Don Quixote. 1.50	CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing. 1.50	CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses. 2.00	CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. 1.00	CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience. 1.00	CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions. Common-Sense in Religion. 2.00	CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education. 1.25	CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World. 1.75	COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old. Of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays. 2.00	CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage. 1.75	CORRELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol. 2.00	CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aim and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Manton, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans. 3.00	DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Position to Education, Employment, and Citizenship. 2.
--	---	--------------------------------------	--	---	----------------------	---	--	---	--------------------------------------	---	---	---	--	---	---	----------------------------------	---	--	--	------------------------------	--	---	--	---	---	--	--	---	---	---	---	---

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies". 1.50	DARWIN'S Origin of Species. 2.00	The Descent of Man. 2 vols. 4.00	Journal of Researches. 2.00	Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals. 2.50	The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated. 6.00	DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences. 2.25	DICKENS' Child's History of England. 1.50	DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study. 2.00	ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each. 1.00	Compriasing: Adam Bede. 1.00	Momola. 1.00	The Mill on the Floss. 1.00	Silias Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. 1.00	The Name. Library Edition. 2 vols. 1.50	Middlemarch. 2 vols. 1.50	Wit and Wisdom of. 1.25	The Spanish Gypsy. 1.50	EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series. 1.50	Essays. Second Series. 1.50	Miscellaneous. 1.50	Representative Men. 1.50	English Traits. 1.50	Conduct of Life. 1.50	Poems. With Portrait. 1.50	May-day and Other Pieces. 1.50	Essays. Blue and Gold. 1.25	Poems. Blue and Gold. 1.25	Prose Works. 3 vols. 1.50	Society and Solitude. 1.50	EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger. 1.50	The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols. 5.00	FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion. 2.00	FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 1.00	FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. 2.00	Cosmic Philosophy. 6.00	FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity. 1.50	Child's Book of Religion. 1.00	Life of Theodore Parker. 3.00	FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols. 9.00	GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences. 2.00	GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol. 5.00	Elective Affinities. 1.25	Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols. 1.50	Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Helen Frothingham. 1.00	GRAY'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life. 2.00	Literary and Social Judgments. 2.00	Creed of Christendom. 7.50	GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait. 5.00	HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France. 1.25	Thoughts about Art. 1.25	The Unknown River. 1.25	The Intellectual Life. 1.25	Chapters on Animals. 1.25	HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. 1.50	Child World. Part First. 1.50	HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1.50	1. Metaphysical Lectures. 1.50	2. Logical Lectures. 1.50	HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol. 1.50	Twice-Told Tales. 1.50	Mosses from an Old Manse. 1.50	The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. 1.50	The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. 1.50	The Marble Faun. 1.50	The English Note-Books. 1.50	The American Note-Books. 1.50	The French and Italian Note-Books. 1.50	Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton. 1.50	HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers. 1.50	Malbone. An Oldport Romance. 1.50	Army Life in a Black Regiment. 1.50	Atlantic Essays. 1.50	Oldport Days. 1.50	HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey. 2.00	Suburban Sketches. 2.00	Venetian Life. 2.00	Italian Journeys. 2.00	A Chance Acquaintance. 1.50	HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three". 1.75	HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits. 10.50	HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life. 1.50	HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses. 1.25	Bits of Travel. 1.50	HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature. 1.25	On the Origin of Species. 1.00	More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism. 1.00	A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals. 2.50	Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews. 1.75	INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems. 2.25	The Monitions of the Unseen. 1.50	Songs of Seven. 2.50	INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelings. 1.75	Studies for Stories. 1.25	Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series. 1.25	A Sister's Bye-Hours. 1.25	Mosses the Fairy: A Story. 1.25	INGERBOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures. 2.00	INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall. 1.50	No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.
--	----------------------------------	----------------------------------	-----------------------------	---	---	--	---	--	---	------------------------------	--------------	-----------------------------	---	---	---------------------------	-------------------------	-------------------------	--	-----------------------------	---------------------	--------------------------	----------------------	-----------------------	----------------------------	--------------------------------	-----------------------------	----------------------------	---------------------------	----------------------------	---	---	---	---	--	-------------------------	--	--------------------------------	-------------------------------	---	--	---	---------------------------	---	--	--------------------------------------	-------------------------------------	----------------------------	---	--	--------------------------	-------------------------	-----------------------------	---------------------------	---	-------------------------------	---------------------------	--------------------------------	---------------------------	--	------------------------	--------------------------------	--	---	-----------------------	------------------------------	-------------------------------	---	---	---	-----------------------------------	-------------------------------------	-----------------------	--------------------	---	-------------------------	---------------------	------------------------	-----------------------------	---	--	--------------------------------------	-----------------------------------	----------------------	--------------------------------------	--------------------------------	---	---	---	------------------------------	-----------------------------------	----------------------	--	---------------------------	--	----------------------------	---------------------------------	--	---	--

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith. 1.75	IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain. 1.50	V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq. 1.50	VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr. 2.00	VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine. 1.50	VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 1.75	IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D. 1.50	JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. 1.50	JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India. 5.00	JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian. 2.50	JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions, by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols. 12.50	KEEH (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous. 2.50	LEAHY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols. 4.00	History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols. 6.00	LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. 4.00	Confucius and Chinese Classics. 2.00	LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham. 1.50	LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. 3.00	Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols. 4.00	Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed. 2.00	LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life. 1.50	LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews. 1.00	LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols. 4.00	Prose Works. Portrait. 4.00	LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols. 4.00	The Biglow Papers. First Series. 1.50	The Biglow Papers. Second Series. 1.50	Among my Books. 2.00	My Study Windows. 2.00	LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children. 75	LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times. 5.00	LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols. 5.00	MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter. 1.50	MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife. 3.00	Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1830 to 1845. 2.00	Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann. 1.25	MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol. 1.50	MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind. 75	MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire. 1.50	Conversion of the Northern Nations. 1.50	MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each. 2.25	The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each. 2.25	The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition. 2.50	The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol. 1.50	Representative Government. 1.50	Autobiography. 2.25	Memorial Volume. His Life and Works. 1.00	Three Essays on Religion. 2.50	MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. 1.50	Songs of the Sun Lands. 1.50	MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species. 1.75	MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire. 2.00	Bousquet, 2 vols. 5.00	MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories. 1.50	MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series. 2.50	The Same. Second Series. 2.50	Clips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume. 2.50	Lectures on the Science of Religion. 2.50	NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle. 1.50	A Mokee from Kentucky. 1.50	NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy. 4.50	Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy. 1.75	Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. 4.25	PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion. 1.50	Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols. 4.50	Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols. 4.50	Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. 1.25	Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. G. B. Frothingham. 1.50	The two Christmas Celebrations. A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story. 40	PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite. 1.00	PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar. 1.50	The Trolly Book. 1.50	Men, Women, and Ghosts. 1.50	Hedged in. 1.50	The Silent Partner. 1.50	What to Wear? 1.00	PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition. 2.00
---------------------------------------	---	--	---	--	---	--	---	--	---	--	--	--	---	---	--------------------------------------	--	--	---	---	---	--	--	-----------------------------	--------------------------------------	---------------------------------------	--	----------------------	------------------------	--	--	---	---	---	--	--	---	--	---	--	--	--	--	--	---------------------------------	---------------------	---	--------------------------------	--	------------------------------	---	-------------------------------------	------------------------	---	---	-------------------------------	---	---	--	-----------------------------	--	--	---------------------------------------	--	---	--	---	---	---	--	---	-----------------------	------------------------------	-----------------	--------------------------	--------------------	--

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. 1.50	Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena. 1.75	Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Essays on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 34 Woodcuts. 4.50	The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Harmony, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc. 1.50	The Expense of Heaven. 1.50	ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante. 1.50	SORRELLIEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies. 4.00	SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. 40	2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe. 40	3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With 10 Plates. 40	4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth. 40	SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 24 vols. 11.25	SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition. 2.00	SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help. 1.50	SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. 1.25	First Principles. 2.50	Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. 1.50	Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers. 1.50	Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the first of them Developed. 1.25	The Principles of Biology. 2 vols. 4.50	The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol. 4.00	Philosophy of Style. 1.00	Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition. 2.50	Sociology. 1.50	Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each. 4.00	Life, Correspondence and Ethics. 2.00	Universal Progress. 1.50	STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny. 1.50	Uncle Tom's Cabin. 40	STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New. 2.00	New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols. 12.00	TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols. 7.50	The Ulster-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske. 2.50	TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems. 1.75	THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 8 volumes. Per vol. 1.25	Vanity Fair. 1.00	The Newcomes. 1.00	Adventures of Philip. 1.00	Pendennis. 1.00	The Virginians. 1.00	Edmond, and Lovell the Widower. 1.00	Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.50	This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1.50	1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces. 1.50	THAXTER'S (MRS. ORLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals. 1.50	THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods. 2.00	Excursions in Field and Forest. Forthwith. 1.50	The Maine Woods. 1.50	Cape Cod. 1.50	Letters. 1.50	A Yankee in Canada. 1.50	A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers. 1.50	TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind. 2.00	Primitive Culture. 2 vols. 5.00	TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer. 1.00	Fragments of Science for Unscientific People. 1.50	Light and Electricity. 1.25	Hours of Exercise in the Alps. 1.00	Heat as a Mode of Motion. 1.00	On Sound. 1.00	Recent Water. 1.00	Forms of Water. 1.00	Lectures on Light. 1.00	Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall. 1.00	Lessons in Electricity. 1.00	Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast. 1.00	TITTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures. 1.50	Modern Painters and their Paintings. 1.50	VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Ring and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each. 1.50	Vols III, IV, and VI, each. 1.75	WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden. 1.50	Banquetings. 1.50	Back-Log Studies. 2.00	WEISS (JOHN). American Religions. 1.50	Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols. 5.00	WHIFFLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life. 1.50	Essays and Reviews. 1.50	Character and Characteristic Men. 1.50	The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth. Success and its Conditions. 1.50	Washington and the Revolution. 1.50	WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life. 1.50	We Girls: A Home Story. 1.50	Real Folk. 1.50	The Other Girls. 1.50	Parables. A volume of Poems. 1.50	WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols. 4.00	Child Life. 2.00
---	--	--	---	-----------------------------	---	--	--	-----------------------------------	--	---	---	--	-----------------------------------	--	------------------------	---	---	--	---	---	---------------------------	---	-----------------	---	---------------------------------------	--------------------------	---	-----------------------	---	--	--	---	---------------------------------	---	-------------------	--------------------	----------------------------	-----------------	----------------------	--------------------------------------	--	---	---	--	---	---	-----------------------	----------------	---------------	--------------------------	--	--	---------------------------------	---	--	-----------------------------	-------------------------------------	--------------------------------	----------------	--------------------	----------------------	-------------------------	--	------------------------------	---	---	---	--	----------------------------------	---	-------------------	------------------------	--	---------------------------------------	---	--------------------------	--	--	-------------------------------------	---	------------------------------	-----------------	-----------------------	-----------------------------------	--	------------------

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address Taura & Co., Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS. Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES. MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

By James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x3 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Boden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. B. Grex, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Mr. James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by accounts of the highest authority.

Prominent attention will also be given to those various sciences which help to a better understanding of the nature of man, to the bearing of science upon the questions of society and government, to scientific education, and to the conflicts which spring from the progressive nature of scientific knowledge.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the most important of the day. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred E. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. T. Tallemache, Prof. Clifford, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn, and numerous others.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BEFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878. ... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ... E. C. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, E. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. M. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Keenom, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Kaappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 223 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz-James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 281 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION; with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 554 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 223 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School. The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to KATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES. Same style. Price $1.25. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 160. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.50.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JAN. 23, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 474.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THE NEW POPE is as prolific of Encyclicals as his predecessor. In his latest, he inveighs against Socialism and Communism as vigorously as His Lectureship. But he forgets to curse the Free Religious Association.

ACCORDING to the American Exchange, all that is necessary for honest legislation is "honest legislators." That may be true; but what the country needs is legislation that is wise as well as honest. We believe in the gospel of conscience plus brain.

PRESIDENT HAYES' pardon of E. H. Heywood receives more light from this sentence in his late message to Congress than from all His Lectureship's labored and embarrassed conjectures: "The protection of liberty requires the maintenance in full vigor of the manly methods of free speech, free press, and free suffrage."

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican of January 10 contained the following: "If Mr. Heywood undertakes the rôle of a martyr, he had better not overdo it, for people can read Cupid's Yokes and judge for themselves. If the Liberal League want the United States mail free for obscene matter in the name of liberty of conscience, so much the worse for the Liberal League. The conscience itself has something to say."

THIS STATEMENT is made by the New York Evening Post: "Dr. Büchner, a personal friend of the late Princess Alice of Hesse, says that the latter expressed a presentiment, some days before she was taken sick, that she would die on the approaching anniversary of her father's death, and that she contemplated death with the utmost fortitude and resignation. Only a few weeks ago the Princess was sitting by the dying bed of Dr. Büchner's wife, to whom she was devotedly attached."

THE SUPREME COURT of the United States has decided that Congress possesses a constitutional right to prohibit polygamy in the Territories, and may do so without interfering with the "free exercise of religion." This decision is in complete accordance with common sense, equity, and rational liberty. Says the New York Evening Post: "Reynolds, plaintiff in error, was tried in the Third Judicial Court of Utah for bigamy and found guilty, and the Supreme Court of the Territory, upon appeal, affirmed the judgment. The case came to the United States Supreme Court upon a writ of error, the plaintiff pleading the unconstitutionality of the law prohibiting bigamous marriages, the justification of religious belief, and various legal technicalities. The United States Supreme Court, in a long and carefully prepared opinion delivered by Chief-Justice Waite, holds that polygamy is not under the protection of the clause of the federal Constitution which prohibits interference with religious belief; that the plea of religious conviction is not a valid defence; that Congress did not step outside the limits of its constitutional powers in passing laws for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, and that the judgment of the Supreme Court of that Territory must be affirmed. Justice Field dissented as far as related to the admissibility of certain evidence introduced in the lower court, but upon the main question, the constitutionality of the act of Congress prohibiting polygamous marriages, there was perfect unanimity."

PRESIDENT ELIOT, of Harvard College, in his just published Annual Report to the Board of Overseers, has a very remarkable passage in which he recognizes explicitly that "the modern world respects only the scientific method" even in religious questions. There is reason for difference of opinion whether the Harvard Divinity School, to which he refers, is so constituted as to realize fully the splendid ideal which President Eliot sketches with so free a hand. But none the less do we rejoice to see such a magnificent statement as this emanating from the head of the institution which, both in point of age and influence, stands easily first among American universities: "The fact that most members of the clerical profession are committed to a particular creed or form of church organization in early youth, or even in boyhood, long before they have attained knowledge and maturity enough to make an intelligent choice of creed or church, diminishes to an incalculable degree the influence of the profession in the modern world; for the modern world respects only the scientific method, which admits of no settled convictions except those which rest upon thorough previous investigation. By the side of the numerous theological schools which are avowedly devoted to the interests of the several denominations, and which are recruited in large part by the offer of the bounties of Education Societies to boys in academies and young men in colleges, let at least one University school of theology be suitably supported, where young men may study theology and the kindred subjects with the same freedom of spirit with which they study law in a Law School, or medicine in a Medical School, and with as little intention or opportunity of committing themselves prematurely to any particular set of opinions or practices." The dearest wish of our heart respecting our Alma Mater will be gratified, when the Harvard Divinity School shall be unequivocally and avowedly planted on the foundation so nobly described by President Eliot.

THE DIPHTHERIA attacked six members of the grand-ducal family of Hesse-Darmstadt, but no other of the sixty members of the household, no nurse, no physician, was attacked. The British Medical Journal infers that "all the cases were produced by direct infection, doubtless by kisses." The Scientific American adds: "As every physician knows, it is no uncommon thing for adults to have diphtheria so mildly that it is mistaken for an ordinary sore throat resulting from cold; yet such a person can easily infect a child, and the child become a centre of malignant infection. In view of the fatal prevalence of diphtheria, therefore, the kissing of a child upon the mouth by a person with a sore throat is hazardous, if not criminal; and scarcely less so is the practice of allowing children to kiss their silling playmates. It would be wise to exercise great caution in this matter, if not to discontinue the practice of kissing upon the mouth altogether." Mr. John S. Wiles, a surgeon of Thorncombe, Dorset, writes to the London Times that after two cases of malignant diphtheria out of some nine or ten he had been called to attend had proved fatal, the mother of a sick child showed him an extract from an American paper concerning a practitioner who used sulphur to cure the disease. Accordingly he used milk of sulphur for infants and flowers of sulphur for older children and adults, brought to a creamy consistence with glycerine; dose—a teaspoonful or more, according to age, three or four times a day, swallowed slowly, and application of the same to the nostrils with a sponge. Result: he did not lose a case there or elsewhere, and he succeeded in saving life when the affection had almost blocked the throat. A correspondent of the New York Tribune writes: "I keep a glass can of sulphur-water, made by shaking a table-spoonful of sulphur with a pint of water till the sulphur settles to the bottom of the can, constantly on hand, and at the first complaint on the part of any member of the family of sore throat I wrap the throat with flannel, and give a teaspoonful of the sulphur-water several times a day. I have used this remedy for more than a year with success, and have had no severe cases of sore throat in my family since I began its use, though previous to that time they were of frequent occurrence in cold and damp weather. The diet should be simple and nutritious; milk, eggs, beef, chicken broth, and the like."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 HARRI B. WELSH.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Storace, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 HARRI ISAAC WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ WILGNER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGEROLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MOOREHEAD.....Franklin, Pa.
 CLARENCE F. W. EVANS.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tombury, N. Y.
 MISS KATHIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Pa.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 HENRI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HANLEN.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HANLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. S. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ANDREWS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BRAL, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULD, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Lewis.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARMER, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Richmond.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BERTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWYER, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHUMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COFFLAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. S. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNTON, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLEN, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICH, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisburg.
 Vermont.....E. L. HADAMTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Teton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILL.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

Suffrage a Birthright.

BY HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.

Every man naturally surveys the field of politics from his own point of observation, and reaches his conclusions by the help of his own methods of thought. In the light of this fact we estimate the value of his opinions. Indeed, we not only take into the account his mental horizon and the peculiarities of his intellectual machinery, but the "climate" of his mind. This largely results from temperament, and is frequently cooled by advancing years, failing health, or an untoward personal experience. Some degree of moral enthusiasm is absolutely necessary to soundness of political judgment. The mind must abide in the latitude of truth, if it would grasp it. Respect for humanity is the condition precedent of all social progress, just as contempt for humanity is the mainspring of every form of inequality and oppression. The pioneers of abolitionism no more doubted the ultimate triumph of their cause than they doubted the government of the world by a Providence; while preachers, and scholars, and men of culture and refinement generally, turned away from their enterprise with cold indifference, if not positive contempt. It was the moral enthusiasm of Jefferson and his political associates which inspired their unflinching faith in the capacity of man for self-government, and prevented a timid and unbelieving statesmanship from strangling the young republic before its birth.

These observations have been suggested by a remarkable article in a late issue of the North American Review on "The Failure of Universal Suffrage," written by an eminent American historian and scholar. Mr. Parkman tells us that the worst things about our democracy are the courtiers and plunderers who use it for base ends, but that if all these were exterminated the people would soon find others to take their place. Universal suffrage, he says, has brought upon the country "an ignorant proletariat and a half-taught plutocracy," and the better classes between these extremes "have little power over these barbarians of civilization." With an occasional fling at the doctrine of "inalienable rights," he complains that we are not only trying to abolish the factitious inequality which exists among men, but the real inequality touching character, ability, and culture. "The history of the progress of mankind," he says, "is the history of its leading minds. The masses, left to themselves, are hardly capable of progress, except material progress, and even that imperfectly. Through the long course of history, a few men, to be counted by scores or by tens, have planted in the world the germs of a growth whose beneficent vitality has extended itself to all succeeding ages; and any one of these men outweighs in value to mankind myriads of nobles, citizens, and peasants who have fought or toiled in their generation and then rotted into oblivion." And he adds: "The highest man may comprehend the lowest, but the lowest can no more comprehend the highest than if he belonged to another order of beings." He speaks of American democracy as tending to "a barren average and a weary uniformity," instead of "recognizing the inherent differences between man and man," and giving "the preponderance of power to character and intelligence." He thinks "the success of an experiment of indiscriminate suffrage hangs on the question whether the better part of the community is able to outweigh the worse"; and this, he declares, can only happen in rare cases and under peculiar social conditions, while the difficulty increases with the increase of numbers, wealth, and luxury. It is further "aggravated by the fact that intellectual development and high civilization are not favorable to fecundity, so that the unintelligent classes, except when in actual destitution, multiply faster than those above them," thus tending to increase the power of ignorance, "or rather the power of the knaves, who are always at hand to use it." He says, "A debased and irresponsible suffrage is the source of our troubles; and asks, 'Is the nation in the way of keeping its lofty promise, realizing its sublime possibilities, advancing the best interests of humanity, and helping to ennoble and not vulgarize the world? Who dares answer that it is?'"

Mr. Parkman's picture is relieved by a few gleams of light, but his article, as a whole, very eloquently voices the gospel of political despair. It is the well-tuned key-note of a wide-spread and growing distrust of our democratic institutions. It is the echo of opinions and feelings which have become the fashion of the times. Nothing is now more current than the remark that we have too much liberty. Too many people, we are told, have the ballot, which has been made a fetish, and that our free institutions will certainly end in disaster if we continue to "fling the suffrage to the mob," instead of restricting it to the educated classes.

The issue thus presented is a very grave one, and no man is fit to confront it who is disposed to take counsel of his fears. The old leaders of federalism failed through political despondency. As Dr. Channing once said, they were guided too much by the wisdom of experience and too little by the wisdom of hope. They lived too entirely in the past, and were too constantly chilled and deadened by its failures. They did not seem to remember that the world has been moved by men of faith, and that there are grand epochs and new departures in the progress of civilized communities which call for leaders willing to do and to dare for the race, and able to breathe into the people their spirit of courage and hope. In the struggle for independence our fathers based their justification upon the natural rights of man; and they did so with the fervor of men whose political faith was their religion. After the conflict was ended, Congress, in a memorable address to the colonies which was drafted by Madison, declared that it had ever been the boast and pride of America that the rights for which she contended were the rights of human nature, and that by the blessing of the Author of these rights they had prevailed against all opposition, and become the basis of thirteen independent States. What does Mr. Parkman mean by sneering at those rights? More than a quarter of a century ago the truths of the Declaration of Independence were often contemptuously referred to by conservative politicians as "glittering generalities"; but after the nation has given them a new birth in the throes of a great civil war and a second baptism of fire and blood, the kindred language of Mr. Parkman seems surprising. If he believes the principles of civil government are utterly wanting in any rational or scientific basis, we can understand him. If he thinks man is a mere machine and the plaything of arbitrary power, and that the whole theory of American democracy is a farce, he can at least claim the virtue of consistency. But if anything has been settled by the progress of political ideas in modern times and the practice of self-government in the United States, it is that man is a responsible personality, whose will is to be consulted in the organization and exercise of political power. Of course we are not speaking of "the subjects of King John of Abyssinia or those of the Khan of Kelat," but the people of the United States, politically dominated by that Anglican stock which Mr. Gladstone so aptly refers to as "a kind of universal church in politics," and so justly glorifies for its genius in the work of government. It is doubtless true that a number of the signers of the great Declaration were unbelievers in its self-evident truths; but these truths none the less became the bed-rock of our democracy, and thenceforward made it logically inevitable that they were to be practically accepted in their complete length and breadth. It is likewise true that our fathers did not at once keep step to the logic of their avowed principles. Nothing could have been more inconsistent with their theory of natural rights than their practice of African slavery; but the fact is historically certain that they contemplated its early extinction, and only intended to yield it a transient sufferance, with a view to its abolition by peaceable and prudent methods. They sincerely deplored the ugly anomaly, and their unmistakable purpose was the establishment of a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people," in strict conformity to the grand primal truths which they had proclaimed to the world, and to be carried on through the instrumentality of the ballot.

In a government thus launched, who should be intrusted with political power? In theory it was easy to answer; but in practice it was necessary to deal with actual facts, and to wait a little upon the fuller development of the democratic idea. At the beginning of the government, if we are not mistaken, all the colonies imposed a property qualification for the suffrage. This gradually disappeared, and it is now a well-settled principle of American democracy that no such qualification should exist. It is generally agreed that it makes no difference whether the voter is worth one hundred dollars or one hundred thousand, since we have accepted Dr. Franklin's idea that "the poor man has an equal right, but greater need of the ballot, than the rich man." Nothing could have been wiser than the adoption of this principle; for if we had allowed the rejected heresy to be engrafted upon our system of government, the right of property to rule would have been recognized, and the corruption of voters and bribery of officials would have been legitimated. In disowning this qualification humanity has been placed before property, thus repudiating the European principle that the chief end of government is the protection of what a man owns, and not of the man himself.

With equal wisdom the kindred principle has been settled that the right to vote shall not depend upon the nativity of the voter, the race to which he belongs, the color of his skin, or his religious faith. The foreigner, upon a brief probation, is allowed an equal right with the native to share in the government; and to have denied him this right would have been a mean and odious discrimination, since he is no more to be blamed for having been born abroad than the native is to be praised for his accidental birth among us. So all the races of the civilized world who have sought their welfare in our grand political asylum have been welcomed to the hospitality of equal rights. The color of the skin, likewise, is no longer a bar to the suffrage. For ourselves, we believe the work of Southern reconstruction was hasty and ill-considered, and that instead of suddenly endowing with the franchise the more ignorant and brutalized colored people of the South and her masses of "white trash," we should have given them a probationary training under some form of territorial government. But this was not done, and the immediate enfranchisement of the negro was the only remaining alternative which it was possible to adopt consistently with the rights of humanity and the obligations of the nation. At all events the work has been done, and no party proposes, or is likely to propose, the disfranchisement of the black millions who are now learning to play their part in American politics, and whose loyalty to our flag in the nation's great peril was never found wanting. In like manner, we have no religious qualification for the ballot, and for the obvious reason that we have no established church. The government of the United States has no religion. It is not ir-religious, but non-religious. Theists, Atheists, Jews, Christians, Mohammedans, and Pagans are equal before the Constitution and at the ballot-box. During the Black Friday of Know-Nothingism, twenty odd years ago, an attempt was made to institute a religious test of citizanship, but it failed so signally that it will scarcely be repeated.

Still another cardinal principle of Democracy has been settled; namely, that no literary qualification for the ballot should be exacted. This may be regarded as the common law of our politics. Some years ago Massachusetts adopted a reading and writing qualification, and we believe she still nominally retains it; but her example has not been contagious. According to the last census we have in the United States over one million six hundred thousand males over twenty-one years old, who can neither read the Constitution nor write their names. They freely share with the educated classes in the exercise of political power. We give them the ballot for a number of excellent reasons. In the first place, the theory is accepted that the ballot itself is a school-master, and consequently that one of the means of fitting men to use it is to put it into their hands. Americans very generally accept the familiar saying of Archbishop Whately, that "to wait before you bestow liberty or political rights till the recipients are fit to employ them aright, is to resolve not to go into the water till you can swim." They agree with Lord Macaulay, that "if men are to wait till they become wise and good in slavery, they may indeed wait forever." In the second place, they believe it is far less difficult to manage a great mass of unenlightened men by giving them a share in the government, a stake in its success, and an incentive to rise, than by imposing upon them its burdens while withholding their political rights, and thus tempting them to become domestic enemies by making them aliens in heart. Not by levelling the educated classes downward, but the ignorant masses upward, can the government be made strong. In the third place, they regard the denial of the ballot to our illiterate citizens as class legislation, and believe all class rule is vicious. It would intrust political power exclusively to those who are best able to take care of themselves without it, while the ignorant, who would especially need the means of self-defence against a privileged class, would be helpless. Privilege always takes care of itself, and always stands in the path of the unprivileged. Finally, it is believed that universal suffrage is one of the surest plans of securing a higher level of intelligence for the whole people. One of the chief arguments in favor of the extension of the ballot is that it promotes the extension of education, as Richard Cobden declared, and as it has done in England, if not in our own country.

These are the decided convictions of the great body of the American people, and we believe nothing is more certain than that they will abide by them. They do not disparage education. Their interest in the subject is constantly and increasingly manifested. Even the policy of compulsory education seems to be rapidly growing into general favor. Their purpose is more and more evident to make universal enlightenment, as far as possible, go hand in hand with universal suffrage. They understand that the ultimate tendency of knowledge in any State or community is good, and that through its diffusion lies the way to freedom and a higher civilization; but they regard as both unwise and impracticable the policy of requiring any specific educational test of fitness for the suffrage in the United States.

In doing so, we believe they have builded better than they knew. Time is vindicating them, and the best thought of the age sustains them. Herbert Spencer asks such questions as these: What connection is there between the ability to read, or the knowledge that certain marks on paper stand for certain sounds, and a higher sense of duty? How can a knowledge of penmanship increase the desire to do right? How can a knowledge of the multiplication-table, or quickness in adding or dividing, restrain the desire to trample on the rights of others? How can accuracy in spelling or parsing make the sentiment of justice stronger? He insists that the attempt to teach moral or social duties by the ordinary training of our schools is an absurdity as great as would be that of trying to teach geometry by the study of Latin, or drawing by the study of music; for the simple reason that culture of the intellect, which is all that is attempted in our schools and colleges, is not operative upon conduct. He does not regard intellect as a power, but an instrument,—not a thing which itself moves and works, but a thing which is moved and worked by forces behind it. Having no conscience, its training will neither teach a man his duty to his country or his neighbor.

If the soundness of these views is disputed it can readily be established by the statistics of crime, which, as a rule, is not checked by education. It is proved by facts of almost daily occurrence, as reported by the newspapers. Who are the most conspicuous rascals and accomplished villains of our time? It cannot be successfully denied that very many of them are educated men. We find them among fraudulent bankrupts, embezzlers of public money, bank cashiers, the concoctors of thieving corporations, the receivers and givers of bribes among the so-called higher classes, governors of States, members of Congress, cabinet ministers, and eminent clergymen! The rebel leaders of the South were educated men and "Christian statesmen," who ransacked history for precedents for their nefarious crusade against the rights of man; while nearly the entire literary class in England has been on the side of power against the people. In the progress of political and economic science in that country in modern times the men least fitted for the work of government and most obstinately opposed to all great reforms have been the graduates of universities. History tells us that Greece, in her decay, was crowded with rhetoricians and sophists, while the citizens were slaves; and that Rome, in her transition from a nation to an empire, was characterized by a wide intellectual culture. It would be easy to multiply facts in the further confirmation of Mr. Spencer's views, and justifying his statement that whatever moral benefit can be effected by education must be effected by an education which is emotional rather than perceptive,—that is to say, an education of the heart. This will best guide men in the duties of citizenship, as well as in all other duties. "Talent," says Emerson, "uniformly slinks with character." "In work," says one of our first political writers, "rather than in a certain literary or scientific acquisition, is the evidence of the capacity for political power; the life of the workman, the fulfillment of human relationships in the family and community, the endeavor of men in the realities of life, is a deeper education." The man who loves his home and is true in the relations of family and neighborhood is entitled to the ballot, whether technically educated or not. "Whoever," in the language of Milton, "has but sucked in this principle, that he was not born for his prince, but for God and his country," has as sacred a right to share in its government as the best-educated man in it; and we would quite as willingly commit the public welfare to the keeping of such men as to those whose education is so graphically described by Carlyle as "working into the mental food of our children a yeast of frothy vocabularies, and littering the roots of their brains with etymological compost, words and not things, theoretical and not practical training."

Indeed, Mr. Parkman himself does not rely upon any educational qualification for the ballot. He only insists upon "recognizing the inherent differences between man and man," and giving "the preponderance of power to character and intelligence." But this idea is equally preposterous. A government of the wisest and best is confessedly unattainable through any hereditary or autocratic methods; and it is equally so under a democracy, save as wisdom and virtue find expression in the endeavor of the whole people. By what rule should we distinguish the wise and good from the ignorant and vicious? Granting that "character and intelligence" should govern, we ask, What defined measure of these qualifications should be exacted, so that voters and non-voters might be intelligently classified? How could the sheep and the goats be distinguished? No human wisdom could possibly determine. Infants, idiots, lunatics, and those who have forfeited their rights by crime, are deprived of the ballot, because they are wanting in that power of choosing which is the very essence of popular government; but these well-defined exceptions are perfectly consistent with the rule which bases the right of suffrage upon personality. The attempt to go beyond them, and arbitrarily to restrict the governing power to an aristocracy of "character and intelligence," would be as repugnant to the principles of democracy as it would be superlatively absurd and impracticable.

Such is our American system of government, as seen in the light of its creed and illustrated in its practice. It is founded on the equal natural rights of men, and its functions are performed by agents freely chosen by the people, who thus become their own rulers. This right of choice is not based upon property, or nativity, or race, or religion, or color, or a defined educational qualification, or any other mere accident of humanity, but upon humanity itself. With the starting-point of our fathers, it was not to be expected that events would be ordered otherwise. That a government basing its authority on the doctrine of inalienable rights, and professing to derive its powers from the consent of the governed, would continue to impose a property qualification upon the voter, was a manifest political absurdity. That a people embarking in the first grand scheme of free representative government, and largely composed themselves of foreigners and fugitives from European despotisms, would refuse their hospitality to emigrants and exiles from other lands on account of their nativity or religion, was morally if not logically impossible. That such a government would long continue to deal with the negro as a chattel and a beast, and his race as an outcast from civilization and law, was not to be believed by any man who had the capacity to think. That the wisdom of refusing to prescribe any literary test of fitness for the suffrage has been vindicated by facts, we think we have abundantly shown. Only one great shame to our government remains to be swept away by the inevitable logic of democracy; namely, the denial of the ballot to one-half the citizens of the Republic on account of their sex. An aristocracy founded upon such a discrimination is quite as hateful and indefensible as an aristocracy founded upon property, or color, or race. "The position that taxation and representation are inseparable," said Samuel Adams, "is founded on the immutable laws of Nature." An intelligent human being, yielding allegiance to the government, answerable to it in person and property for disobedience, and yet denied any voice in its administration, is a slave; and it can make no sort of difference whether such person is man or woman. Just as long as this wholesale disfranchisement shall continue, the Republic will be "half slave and half free." It will be "a house divided against itself," and as such it cannot stand. The complete and final evolution of the principle of democracy will place the ballot in the hands of every citizen of the United States, irrespective of sex, with the unavoidable exceptions already mentioned, by which the voter is incapacitated for exercising the right of choice. Our government will thus at last be in perfect accord with the Declaration of Independence, and we believe it will then be made evident that the moral element in our politics which is now so sadly wanting has been supplied by universal suffrage.—International Review, January, 1879.

(TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

IT IS THE nature of the human disposition to hate him whom you have injured.—Tacitus.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN WYOMING.

OFFICE WOMAN'S JOURNAL,
4 Park St., Boston, Dec. 23, 1878.

MR. EDITOR:

Dear Sir,—As an act of justice to a cause which has been unjustly assailed, and as a matter of interest to your readers, please publish the following important testimony from Wyoming, and oblige,
Yours truly,
LUCY STONE.

Wyoming Speaks for Herself.

The Cheyenne (Wyoming) Daily Leader, in its most conspicuous editorial of November 22, positively contradicts the false reports recently circulated in Eastern papers concerning woman suffrage in that Territory, and bears explicit testimony to its beneficent effects. We print the article entire.

A FALSE PROPHECY.

Capt. Winsor on Woman Suffrage in Wyoming.

A friend of the Leader sends to this office a clipping from a St. Louis paper, which copied the following article from the Indianapolis Journal:—

WOMEN IN WYOMING.

The Test of Woman Suffrage in Wyoming Pronounced a Failure.

"A representative of the Journal yesterday encountered Capt. S. H. Winsor, of this city, who lived several years in Wyoming, and asked for some information concerning the operation of woman suffrage in that Territory. Capt. Winsor is an educated and observant gentleman. He was receiver of the public land-office at Cheyenne, and was a resident of the Territory when the woman-suffrage law took effect, and for several years afterward. The substance of his views is as follows:—

"I regard woman suffrage in Wyoming as an utter failure, and I think it is so regarded by the best men and women of the Territory. So far as can be discovered it has accomplished no good results, while it has certainly worked badly in many respects. For about two years after the law was passed, nearly all the women in the Territory used to vote, my wife among the rest. But after this experience the better class became disgusted with the operation of the law, and quit voting.

"As an instance of the demoralizing influence of politics on women, I remember seeing a lady, the wife of a candidate for office, standing at the counter of a beer-saloon, drinking beer with a parcel of colored men. I could mention her name, but will not. She was from Ohio, was well-educated, and entirely respectable; but she was so intensely interested in her husband's success that she resorted to this means of getting votes for him. I saw this same lady and a school-teacher of Cheyenne in their bugles driving colored men and women, and even known harlots, to and from the polls. In such ways as this I regard the operation of the law as demoralizing to the women. There may be others who differ with me, but I simply give my views of several years' experience of the law. I may add that my wife, who enjoyed the elective franchise during the period of our residence in Wyoming, entirely accords with these views."

Capt. Winsor's reputation for truth and veracity would make a denial of this story superfluous, if we had only to consider its effects upon the people of this Territory. We are moved, however, to reply to his statement at length, for the reason that similar stories have been repeatedly published abroad, and believed by many intelligent readers who had no other sources of information on this subject.

Capt. Winsor, formerly a resident of this Territory and a government official, is supposed to know whereof he speaks; but we will prove how utterly false are his assertions, and how untenable are his conclusions. We will prove this from the published reports of high government officers, and from the facts as they are found at the present day.

The law conferring upon women the right of suffrage was enacted in 1869, at a time when the people of Wyoming were almost unanimously opposed to it. The situation was accepted with good-nature and a general disposition to give the law a fair trial. At the end of two years, Gov. Campbell, in his message to the legislative assembly, expressed himself on the subject as follows:—

"There is upon your statute book 'an act granting to the women of Wyoming Territory the right of suffrage and to hold office,' which has now been in force two years. Under its liberal provisions women have voted in the Territory, served on juries, and held office. It is simple justice to say that the women, entering, for the first time in the history of the country, upon these new and untried duties, have conducted themselves in every respect with as much tact, sound judgment, and good-sense as men. While it would be claiming more than the facts justify, to say that this experiment, in a limited field, has demonstrated beyond a doubt the perfect fitness of woman, at all times and under all circumstances, for taking a part in the government, it furnishes at least presumptive evidence in her favor; and she has a right to claim that, so long as none but good results are made manifest, the law should remain unrepealed."

A two years' trial, therefore, gave the ladies another chance; and while our legislators were disposed to dissent from the Governor, the law was permitted to remain on our statute-book.

Two more years passed by, and we give here Gov. Campbell's opinion of woman suffrage and its effects, after an experience of four years. The Governor says to the legislators:—

"The experiment of granting to woman a voice in the government, which was inaugurated for the first time in the history of our country by the first legislative assembly of Wyoming, has now been tried for four years. I have heretofore taken occasion to express my views in regard to the wisdom and justice of this measure, and my conviction that its adoption has been attended only by good results. Two years more of observation of the practical working of the system have only served to deepen my conviction that what we, in this Territory, have done, has been well done, and that our system of impartial suffrage is an unqualified success."

The legislative assembly, coinciding in the Governor's views, wisely refrained from tampering with our election laws, so far as concerned women, and consequently received the commendation of their constituents.

Before the end of the ensuing two years, we had another executive, Gen. J. M. Thayer, formerly a United States Senator, a gentleman experienced in public affairs, and familiar with legislative matters. In his message to the legislature, Gov. Thayer pays the following compliment to the people of Wyoming: "Woman suffrage has now been in practical operation in our Territory for six years, and has, during the time, increased in popularity and in the confidence of the people. In my judgment, its results have been beneficial, and its influence favorable to the best interests of the community. A right or privilege once granted is not easily surrendered. In this case it is difficult to perceive any good reason why it should be."

At this time woman suffrage had become one of our popular institutions, approved by all; even its most bitter enemies had been made to succumb to its beneficial effects, and the boldest politician of the male persuasion had ceased to agitate a repeal of the law.

Our present Governor, Prof. John W. Hoyt, a talented and learned gentleman; a scholar who has made the education of the masses a special study for many years; a public man of ripe experience, whose investigations into our affairs have been thorough and penetrating, has been requested to give his opinion of woman suffrage in general, and its practical effects in this Territory. His Excellency has made the following statement to the editor of the Leader: "I came to Wyoming without prejudice on this subject. After much inquiry in all sections of the Territory, and careful observation of its practical workings, I have to say that, so far, the facts are almost wholly on the side of woman suffrage. The right I never questioned. To my mind that is indeed unquestionable. More, it is sure of ultimate, if not early, recognition by every enlightened community. Arbitrary dictation of prerogatives by the physically stronger to the weaker sex is a relic of barbarism. It can have no place in a true civilization."

Here we have the opinions, officially given, of three gentlemen who consecutively occupied the high position of Governor of Wyoming Territory, and therefore had the best sources of information.

We need no higher or better authority to disprove the sensational story uttered by Mr. Winsor. We will add, however, that every reasonable man and every woman of sense, with rare exceptions, supports the position assumed by the above-named gentlemen. And how could it well be otherwise? In this Territory women have manifested for its highest interests a devotion, strong, ardent, and intelligent. They have brought to their new duties a clearness of understanding and a soundness of judgment which, considering their former exclusion from public affairs, are worthy of the greatest admiration. The conscience of women, in all things more discriminating and sensitive than that of men, their love of order and good government, have been made to contribute to our general well-being. Their sense of justice—not compromising or time-serving, but pure and exacting—has stimulated our law-makers to give us other beneficent and just legislation; as, for instance, the law giving to the widow the guardianship of her minor children; the law which permits women to acquire and possess property; another which declares that "in the employment of teachers no discrimination shall be made in the question of pay on account of sex, when the persons are equally qualified," etc., etc.

Ten years' experience has taught us that woman suffrage in Wyoming is a success. It has made us a better and a more law-abiding people; it has been an incentive to elevate us and all our pursuits and interests with which our wives, mothers, and sisters have identified themselves; it has been the means of bestowing life and health on the whole body politic. The most sanguine anticipations of the most ardent friends of woman suffrage have been realized here in Wyoming; and this should hasten the day when the refining and elevating influence of woman shall be as clearly manifested throughout the Union as it is at present in this, the youngest of Uncle Sam's dominions.—Cheyenne Daily Leader.

A Witness from Wyoming.

The following testimony from Rev. Dr. Cray, Presiding Elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Northern Colorado and Wyoming, settles the question for all candid readers:—

To all Whom it may Concern:—

The statement has been made and widely circulated, that at the late election in the Territory of Wyoming "no women voted except those of the baser sort." I, therefore, deem it but just to say, that I am well acquainted in Wyoming, having charge of the Methodist churches of that Territory, and that I know from many conversations held with women of the very highest character; from statements made to me by ministers, and by the highest officers of the Territory, and from my own personal associations with editors, lawyers, teachers, and business men, that all such statements about the women of Wyoming are utterly without foundation. The very best ladies of that Territory vote, and, as they generally vote on the right side of all questions, the lies told to their detriment originate with men of the "baser sort"; with defeated demagogues and disappointed strikers of the meanest kind of politicians, who hate the majority of the women because of their pure lives and independent ballots.

The women of Wyoming are an honor to their sex, and deserve the respect of all who wish good government.

B. F. CRAY,
Presiding Elder of Northern Colorado and Wyoming.
GOLDEN, Col., Dec. 13, 1878.

THE QUEEN'S DAUGHTER.

PARIS, Dec. 18.

The Princess Alice, of England, whose death has again plunged Queen Victoria into the gloom from which Lord Beaconsfield had induced her to emerge, was a link between French and German philosophy. The lamented Princess was the most pensive member of her family. The days and hours of her life which were not consecrated to family affections and works of mercy and kindness were spent in meditation, reading, and converse by word of mouth and letter with great thinkers, some of whom she had discovered herself. Her mind was essentially receptive. There were many points of resemblance between Princess Alice and Lady Jane Grey. No flight of philosophy was too high for her to follow; and she was wholly free from intellectual pride and the harshness that comes so often of women breaking their heads against metaphysical systems. When the Princess wanted to digest an abstruse work, she sat down to the piano or organ, and let her fingers wander over the key-board. She had the sensibilities of a musician, a skilled hand, and a cultivated ear. Her thoughts, while she played, took order, shape, and wing. She wrote to Dr. Strauss, at whose feet she sat, that at such times her soul mounted to heaven's gate like the bird she most loved to watch and contemplate. Strauss, as the world knows, devoted himself to the elucidation of the truths and legends on which the Christian Church is based. He, according to some, reduced the personality of Jesus Christ to a myth. According to others, he revealed him as a sublime emanation of the heart and soul of pagan antiquity. Greek civilization, Jewish patriotism, and Asiatic inspiration culminated in him. As a Jewish incarnation, he was the bridge which connected together the hard intellectualism and the practical common-sense of the West, and the vague dreaminess of the East, and enabled them to act and react on each other. He was the moral ideal which was set up by overriden Greece and Judea in opposition to the gross sensuality, the lust of conquest, and the Caesarism of Rome. Princess Alice took the latter view of Strauss's theological teachings. She accepted as her rule of life Plato's "It is better to suffer than to do an injury," and the Sermon on the Mount.

A French officer, who was a prisoner of war in Germany in 1870, and who resided on the same floor with me in Paris for many years, related to me some interesting conversations he had with Her Royal Highness. He was recommended to her by his mother-in-law, a Dresden lady of rank, the descendant of French Huguenots who had emigrated to Saxony. The Princess sent her chamberlain to inform him that she would be happy to receive him on a certain day and hour at the Altes Schloss of Darmstadt. This grand-ducal residence is an ancient castle, built in the time of Luther, and lies in the old part of the town, where the ground is low. It was surrounded with moats and ditches, which, since the late Grand Duke abandoned this residence to his nephew Ludwig, have been drained into ponds, with an outlet to a river flowing through the Odenwald. No more gloomy-looking schloss is there in all Germany. But the gardens are exquisitely laid out. Children were playing in them, and the interior of the edifice was adapted with charming taste to the needs of modern life. My friend was ushered with some state to the eighteenth century wing, in which the reception rooms are situated. The Princess Alice was in a drawing-room at the extreme end of the suites of apartments, through which he was conducted by a gentleman usher in court dress. A chamberlain who was awaiting him introduced him. He found the Princess standing, and at each side a little girl. She was attired in the plainest manner in brown stuff, very plainly made and devoid of trimming. The children were in similar costumes. A large black cross stood out from a deep white linen collar, which completely encircled the neck of the Princess, who looked, with her fair Madonna braids of wavy hair, and her purely oval face, and sweet, pensive cast of physiognomy, like an angel of peace amid the angry passions and miseries of war. Prince Ludwig, her husband, was in France at the head of a military division, and in the neighborhood of Tours, from which my friend came. The Princess, who knew he belonged to a monarchical family, spoke among other things of the friendship which existed between a grand duchess of Hesse-Darmstadt and Marie Antoinette. There was a collection of that queen's letters in the grand-ducal library, and among them one of peculiar interest. It was written immediately after the death of the Princess Sophie of France, third child of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, and contained some expressions betraying a presentiment of the ill which were to overtake the royal family. In this way the conversation was led by Princess Alice to grave topics, on which she decanted "with penetrating sweetness, and in a voice which fell like music on the ear." The royal lady told the French officer that she took no pride in laurels culled in war, unless in defence of homes and liberties; and she did not believe that any political or other edifice cemented in blood could endure, for that the meek were to inherit the earth. In conclusion she asked my friend if she could be of service to his family in Touraine or to himself in Germany. The private library of the Schloss was at his service. Foresters of the Grand Duke would receive orders to conduct him through the hills and dales of the Odenwald, in which he would find sites of entrancing beauty. During his stay in Grand-Ducal Hesse the French officer was invited to literary conferences which were held at the Altes Schloss. Each time the Princess Alice kindly sent for him at the end of the lecture, and in the presence of her children entered into conversation with him. She was proud to think her great-grandmother, the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg, befriended Voltaire, and discerned the excellence of his heart under a cynical exterior, and the passion for justice which animated him. It was at the request of the Princess Alice that Strauss delivered his lectures on "Voltaire, his Life, Writings, and Time," in the Theatre of Darmstadt.

The deceased English Princess, to whom an old English name was given at the baptismal font, was the Lady Bountiful of her little State. She founded orphanages and a training-school for domestic servants, which she frequently inspected herself. The lark, which she made her emblem, lived, she was prone to reflect, on the ground and obscurely. It taught that in the discharge of homely duties we find the strength, the knowledge, and the inspiration to fill the air with joyous and soul-stirring music. How the Princess Alice was the solace of her father, the Prince Consort, in his dying hours is known to the world. She by her sisterly care preserved the life of the Prince of Wales when he was stricken with typhoid fever six years ago. It was in watching by the bedside of her husband and five children when suffering from diphtheria that she caught the malady which proved fatal to her, and lost the strength which might have enabled her to resist it. The fact of her death happening on the 14th of December, the anniversary of the Prince Consort's death, cannot fail to intensify the gloom of Queen Victoria. The Russians have a superstition that in lamenting long the dead we trouble their spirits and offend Divine Providence, who, on the anniversaries of the days on which he called their spirits to him, sends some punishment to teach us the sinfulness of nursing grief to the detriment of the duties of our lot and station in life. It would be well for England's Queen, were this belief, which like all superstitions overrules a truth, impressed on her majesty by the Duchess of Edinburgh. Providence acts toward us as we do toward weeping children. When they cry overmuch, we teach them to dry their tears by giving them cause to weep.

Princess Alice visited Paris in the summer of 1877. She lodged at the Hotel du Rhin. When here she called on M. Littré. He was not in town, but she was taken by a literary friend of hers who accompanied her through his sitting-room, study, and library. Her Royal Highness was the first lady of royal house (Isabella of Spain and the Orleans and Neapolitan Bourbons excepted) to call on la Maréchale MacMahon. She used to walk about Paris leaning on the arm of her children's head-governess, a tall, gaunt, bolt-upright lady, wearing blue spectacles. With the grand-ducal children Her Royal Highness spent a summer at Trouville. Orders were given to preceptors and nursery-maids to inflict a minimum of chastisements and scoldings on their youthful charges. The reason was, the Grand Duchess, whose husband had just succeeded his uncle, had observed in her sons and daughters a spirit of animosity toward this country, which grieved her. She wanted to root it out of their breasts by rendering all their childish associations with France delightful. Truly, her short life was angelic, and her end was peace.—N. Y. Tribune.

MORMON POLYGAMY.

The Supreme Court of the United States has just rendered an important decision in regard to the law of Congress which prohibits polygamy in the territories of the United States. The law, originally enacted in 1862, provides that "every person having a husband or wife living, who marries another, whether married or single, in a territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of bigamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, and by imprisonment for a term not more than five years." The qualifications annexed to this penal statute are these: 1. That it shall not extend to "any person by reason of any former marriage, whose husband or wife is absent for five successive years, and is not known to such person to be living." 2. That it shall not extend "to any person by reason of any former marriage which has been dissolved by decree of a competent court." 3. That it shall not extend to "any person by reason of any former marriage which has been pronounced void by decree of a competent court, on the ground of nullity of the marriage contract."

The question before the Supreme Court of the United States, brought up by the appeal of one George Reynolds from the Supreme Court of the territory of Utah, was whether this law is consistent with the first amendment to the Constitution, which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Reynolds, who had been indicted and convicted in Utah on the charge of bigamy, claimed that his bigamy was in the "free exercise" of his religion, and that therefore the law of Congress under which he was tried is unconstitutional, since it interferes with such "free exercise," as guaranteed by the amendment. This point was learnedly and elaborately argued before the Court; and we believe that the case is the first instance in which the Supreme Court of the United States has had occasion to pass judgment upon the question in this specific application.

The decision of the Court, as might have been anticipated, is that polygamy is not under the protection of that clause of the Federal Constitution which prohibits interference with religious belief and the proper exercise thereof; that Congress did not exceed its constitutional power in passing laws for the suppression of polygamy in Utah; and, hence, that the judgment of the Supreme Court of that territory must be affirmed. Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the Court, entered into a long and carefully-prepared argument on the subject, designing that it should remain on the records of the Court for future reference. The great point in the argument is that "the free exercise" of religion, as guaranteed by the Constitution, is necessarily subject to such limitations in the practice or overt forms of religion as are demanded by social morality and good public order, in respect to which it is the province of every government to legislate. Congress has no power to forbid polygamous beliefs as a part of any man's religion; but, being vested with supreme legislative power in all the territories of the United States, it has ample power to forbid polygamous practice, and provide that it shall be treated as a penal offence. So the Court unanimously decides.

The law thus sustained is good as far as it goes; but the great difficulty hitherto experienced is that it is almost never carried into effect. It has been in the statute-book of the nation for more than sixteen years, and practically it has been absolutely of no force in suppressing Mormon polygamy in the territory of Utah. The Mormons, from Brigham Young down to the lowest grade, have laughed it to scorn, and defied it without the slightest attempt at disguise, and with no fear of its penal sanction. The law has been little else than a dead law; a mere form, without the substance and energy of a living statute. Grand juries have generally refused to indict polygamists, and trial juries as generally refused to convict them, even when indicted; and the reason has been that the jurors themselves were, for the most part, either polygamists in practice or such in belief. The machinery for executing the law has not been effective, owing to the prevalence of the crime which it is its purpose to prevent.

The plain duty of Congress is to supplement this statute by another law that will make it effective, and not leave it on the statute-book as a dead letter. And, now that the Supreme Court has settled the question of its constitutional power, it is to be hoped that Congress will adopt the necessary measures for enabling the courts in Utah to punish this offence. Polygamists must not be trusted with the execution of the law. We might as well trust horse-thieves to execute the law against stealing. If necessary to attain the end, polygamists should be disfranchised, on the same principle that a state-prison convict is disfranchised. It is simply outrageous that the Mormons of Utah should be permitted with impunity openly to defy a law enacted in the name of the whole people of the United States.—Independent, Jan. 18.

THOMAS SCOTT.

Over the New Year a fresh gloom has fallen. The vanishing of the Old Year has carried with it a noble heart. On December 30, at 4.10 P.M., passed away forever the pure and earnest life of Thomas Scott. Among the soldiers of freedom, few have borne the standard more gallantly; among the servants of liberty, none have been more loyal from first to last.

Of Thomas Scott's private life, this is not the place to speak; none more than he hated that the veil of privacy should be pierced by the fierce glare of journalism. While he gave his public life frankly and fully to the world, while he gladly and chivalrously faced all comment and criticism on his public work, he shrank, with the proud reticence of an English gentleman, from that coarse intrusion on the delicacies of home life which disgraces too much of our modern journalism.

How shall I, who loved and honored this dead man, speak worthily of his life? How may I—without going beyond what he would have accepted without pain—speak here of that which hundreds feel to-day?

Thomas Scott's earlier life does not concern us here. If she who has alone the right to do so should deem fit to give to the world the history of his youth and of his early manhood, few tales of fiction would vie with this life-story in thrilling interest. Mighty hunter was this man in the days of his gallant youth, and to all strange, hazardous places did he carry his brave, bright heart, undaunted by danger, untouched by fear. How he lived among Indians, how he speared the salmon, how he hunted over the prairies,—ah! how the strong, brave life starts out to-day in horrible contrast with the silent dead!

From wanderings far and wide—from many a peril by land and sea—from many a strange and rare experience—Thomas Scott came back to our English land. And he came to set his mark on his generation,—not as athlete, nor as sportsman, nor as hunter, but as thinker, as reformer, as heretic; for this strong, brave man was no kneeling Christian. With brain as keen as his muscles were strong, with intellect as cultured as his limbs were trained, this hunter, this sportsman, this athlete, with his splendid physique and his mighty frame, was a scholar whom few could equal, familiar with Greek, with Hebrew, with Arabic, versed in all Rabbinical lore and all Eastern learning. The rabbi might discuss the Talmud with Thomas Scott, and find in him his master; the student and teacher of the mysteries of Nature-worship might come to this man, and find in him an accuracy of knowledge with which few could vie; Colenso, Inman, and many another, submitted to Thomas Scott their works before they issued them to the world; and his wide reading and deep learning were ever placed at their disposal freely, without wish for word of recognition. What was, perhaps, most admirable in this many-sided man was the perfect balance of his learning. While one might trace all religions to Nature-worship, another to sun-worship, another to some different root, Thomas Scott studied all, weighed all, gave to each its place, and refused to be dragged into some wholesale approval or denial oblivious of the delicacies of criticism. Of none could it be more truly said than of him that he had mens sana in corpore sano.

But that which was THE WORK of Thomas Scott's life now claims a word of recognition. This man was rich, independent, free; looking round on the world, he—republican and freethinker—saw there was need of earnest unpaid work. He decided that such work lay ready to his hand, and he marked out the work by which he will ever be remembered. He saw superstition rampant about him, and, believing with full loyalty of faith that Truth needed no artificial armor, he devoted his keen intellect, his deep scholarship, his gallant earnestness, towards making a field wherein "Truth and Falsehood might grapple." He published tract after tract,—making the test for publication, not specialty of opinion, but sincerity of belief and power of expression,—criticizing Christianity, challenging theism, analysing the popular creed. With rare tact as well as with powerful argument he carried on his warfare, until, at last, on the first of every month, went forth on their mission, first from Ramsgate and then from Upper Norwood, little white-wrapped quivers, full of keen arrows aimed at religious superstition. In many a vicarage those neat packets were eagerly watched for, and none can tell the vast extent of the influence of the heresy thus silently spread. To his house came doubters, inquirers, opponents; all were welcomed, provided only they came with honest desire for truth. For hypocrites he had no mercy; for canters he had no pity; he broke ruthlessly through all pretence, all sham, all insincerity; for the earnest, troubled questioner he had endless patience; but for the shifty, capacious hypocrite there was short shrift.

About a year ago this propaganda carried on for twenty years was given up, owing to the increasing weakness of the man who was its sole life and heart. With deep regret, compelled by physical necessity Thomas Scott laid down his pen and ceased his work. He had not left controversial literature unenriched: putting aside the generous help given to authors, and seldom formally recognized by them, his own English Life of Jesus has never been answered by Christian pen. None have dared to grapple either with his logic or with his scholarship. In the "Scott Series" freethinkers may find pamphlets unrivalled for pungency, for keenness, for earnestness; and in the vast number issued none can find one coarse word, one ungentle thought.

But I, who owe so much to Thomas Scott, cannot close this brief, poor notice without a grateful word of thanks to this noble man, now dead. It was Thomas Scott who—then by the Rev. F. Besant's consent—published my first two heretical tracts, "On the Deity of Jesus," and on "The Gospel according to St. John," by "The Wife of a Beneficed Clergyman." It was Thomas Scott who, when I was cast out from my home for my heresy, and thrown on the world with a delicate baby in my arms, came forward—when all repudied me—to give me help. It was Thomas Scott who, when I was utterly alone, when my mother was dead, when my friends' houses were closed against me, when I sold clothes and jewelry to buy food, gave me my first paid work. It was Thomas Scott whose house was ever open to me when my need was sorest, and he never knew—this generous, noble heart—how sometimes, when I went in, weary and overdone from a long day's study in the British Museum with scarce food to struggle through the day,—he never knew how his genial "Well, little lady," in welcoming tone, cheered the then utter loneliness of my life. To no living man or woman—save one—do I owe the debt of gratitude that I owe to Thomas Scott.

But on this dead man's bier, what wreath of homage can I lay? Only this poor flower of deep gratitude can I now place upon his tomb. As I stood beside him, dead, whose face, living, had never shown to me aught but kindness, one earnest wish rose unbidden to my lips: May my life be lived as bravely and as loyally as was the life of this pure and noble man, and may my death be as deservedly peaceful as was his.

ANNIE BESANT.

—National Reformer, Jan. 5.

A PROTESTANT CONFSSIONAL.

A REMARKABLE INNOVATION INTRODUCED BY A CHRISTIAN MINISTER.

The following circular, addressed by the Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., has been sent to us with the inquiry: "Does the Protestant Church recognize the confessional?"

"MY DEAR FRIEND,—The Lord is adding so many to the fellowship of our church that it is almost impossible for your pastor to know and remember the experience of each one of you without some unusual help. For my own information and guidance, I ask you to fill up the blanks in the following list of questions. If you will be careful and faithful in doing this, I am confident that you will find it to be a help in analyzing your own experience and position. I assure you that what you may write under the eye of God our Savior will never be submitted by me to the inspection of any person. These papers, when returned, I shall hold as a sacred trust from those who have written them.

That our Gracious Lord will lead you into a fuller knowledge of his great salvation, and, day by day, into a more absolute consecration to his service, is the prayer and expectation of

Your friend and pastor,
STEPHEN H. TYNG, JR.
Church of Holy Trinity, New York City.

1. Do you know, and in any measure realize, that you were a guilty sinner, helpless for your own salvation, before you believed in Jesus? (Rom. iii., 9, 10, 23. John xv., 6.)

2. Do you believe the word of God, that Jesus Christ as your substitute bore your sins, endured your punishment, and by rising from the dead proved that he had cleared your account before God?

3. Are you trusting for salvation only to the facts of Jesus Christ's Death, Resurrection, Ascension, and Intercession? (Rom. viii., 34.)

4. Have you received Jesus Christ, now living again and present by the Holy Ghost, as your Teacher, your Savior, your Ruler forever?

5. Have you dedicated your whole self to the Lord deliberately (Joshua xxiv., 15), sincerely (II. Cor. i., 19), freely (Psalm cx., 8), and forever (Rom. viii., 35-39)?

6. Do you know that you are now God's dear child (John i., 12), and as such you will be dearly loved, wisely educated, always protected, and may enjoy great familiarity in prayer?

7. Do you know that you must have been born again (I. John v., 1) if all this is true of you? and do you hunger and thirst after the Word of God as a newborn babe (I. Peter ii., 2)?

8. How much control of your life, labor, money, and influence do you mean to give to Jesus (Rom. vi., 18. James iv., 7)?

9. Do you trust only and always to the keeping power of your Savior (Jude 24)?

10. Are you glad to confess Christ before men (Luke xii., 8)?

11. Will you instantly confess to him any failures in your life and accept his restoring grace (I. John i., 9. Psalm xxxii., 5)?

12. What special work for Jesus do you mean to engage in?

13. Tell me, as far as you are disposed, the circumstances of your conversion. What first awakened your mind? How were you persuaded to surrender yourself to Jesus? What measure of joy have you had in giving up all for Christ?—Reformer and Jewish Times.

Poetry.

SELF-DEPENDENCE.

BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Weary of myself, and sick of asking
What I am and what I ought to be,
At this vessel's prow I stand, which bears me
Forward, forward, o'er the star-lit sea.

And a look of passionate desire
O'er the sea and to the stars I send:
"Ye who from my childhood up have calmed,— Calm me; ah! compose me to the end!"

"Ah! once more," I cried, "ye stars, ye waters,
On my heart your mighty charm renew;
Still, still let me, as I gaze upon you,
Feel my soul becoming vast like you!"

From the intense, clear, star-own vault of heaven,
O'er the lit sea's unquiet way,
In the rustling night-air, came the answer,
"Wouldst thou be as these are? Live as they."

"Unafraid by the silence round them,
Undistracted by the sights they see,
These demand not that the things without them
Yield them love, amusement, sympathy.

"And with joy the stars perform their shining,
And the sea its long moon-silvered roll;
For self-poised they live, nor pine with noting
All the fever of some differing soul.

"Bounded by themselves, and unregardful
In what state God's other works may be,
In their own tasks all their powers pouring,
These attain the mighty life you see."

O air-born voice! long since, severely clear,
A cry like thine in mine own heart I hear:
"Resolve to be thyself; and know that he Who finds himself loses his misery."

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 26.

R. J. Rogers, $1; W. W. Wilson, $1.50; Doeringer & Co., $2; F. H. Guivits, $2; A. B. Swaine, $1; Kant Hoegh, $3.50; Thomas Douglas, $2.50; Hugo Andriessen, $3.50; J. B. Bonelli, $5; Sam'l L. Hill, $131.40; John Blaine, $15; John Campbell, $8; R. J. Ryan, $1.50; Alex. Cochran, $2; Thomas Brossett, $1.50; Edw. G. Humphrey, $1.50; Michael Neale, $4.70; J. B. Miller, $5; John Casson, $3; Job Angell, $1; S. B. Brillhart, $2.25; L. Markham, $3.50; Prof. F. H. Adler, $18; S. E. Urbino, $2.50; Rev. Fiske Barrett, $2.50; S. Webster, $2.50; Dr. E. Wigglesworth, $3; Rev. Charles Voysey, $4.50; D. G. Francis, $2.50; J. L. Oulter, $2.50; M. Bissell, $2.50; E. L. Scott, $2.50; W. H. Shannon, $4; Samuel Colt, $2.50; James Williams, $2; J. W. Ballings, $2.50; Frank O. Reilly, $1.50; Jas. W. Bartlett, $2.50; W. J. Farris, 25 cents; W. H. Crowell, $1.50; C. H. Lechard, $1; D. Sandman, $7; Rev. J. C. Learned, $2.50; L. B. Farrar, $2; Bertha Kostomarov, $1.50; J. R. Hawley, $2.50; George Johnson, $5; Charles Apitz, $1.50; O. A. Thurston, $2.50; Mrs. J. H. Judd, $2.50; Oah, $2.50; O. R. Collins, $2.50; B. F. Smith, $2.50; F. A. Hinkley, $2.50; Mrs. F. Wason, $2.50.

The Index.

BOSTON, JAN. 30, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 25 Monroe Street; J. T. FEET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. ORENTY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELLEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error notified by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Lebanon, Ind., Jan. 30, 31; at Indianapolis, Feb. 2; and at Irwin's Station, Pa., Feb. 4 and 5.

A MICHIGAN subscriber writes: "The public mind in this vicinity is in a condition of almost total indifference, outside of the churches, in regard to everything connected with theology. In their struggle for existence, if we furnish the means of an intelligent understanding of the menace to their rights and liberties under our government, they manifest no desire or interest to know anything about it. With this indifference, all the theological party has to do is to step into the legislature, take possession, and unite Church and State in their old bonds."

SUCH SUPERSTITIOUS stories as the following ought to moderate the conceit which the nineteenth century complacently entertains. A Freiburg paper tells a most extraordinary story of the result of a proposal to celebrate, near Geneva, the Centenary of Voltaire. A certain Monsieur X. began to raise funds, but before he secured enough was struck dead. A second gentleman took up the work, and in a few days he also was carried a corpse to the cemetery. After a time the son of the occupant of the chateau took up the work, completed the collection and ordered a bust of "the great God-insulter" from a sculptor, when he too passed away. His father, however, anxious to erect the bust as a memorial of his son as well as Voltaire, in spite of the entreaties of his friends collected the townspeople and marched in procession to the selected ground and set up the monument and made a speech, when he, also, died in the presence of his followers. Since then, says the paper, the proprietor of the chateau has died,—"the fifth finger of God!" This loss of all "five fingers" near Geneva was probably the reason why the Centenary was so successful in other localities, notably in Paris, where Victor Hugo, the chief of sinful eulogists of the "great God-insulter," escaped unscathed.

TESTS OF RIGHT AND WRONG.

It is not a little gratifying that our brief article on "Three Schools of Ethics," in THE INDEX of January 9, should have elicited so able, searching, and acute a criticism as the following:—

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

We have been considering, my wife and I, your definition of right and wrong.

1. We think it a good one; and yet it seems to us that it is but a re-statement of the utilitarian theory,—essentially the same definition given by Mr. Green, which you quote. We are unable to see that, according to your definition, it is not alone the consequences of the act which determine its character. Whether the consequences are considered in relation to a law, or in relation to a specific result of injury or benefit to the individual, it seems to be the utilitarian test all the same.

2. In your remarks concerning the two schools, you say: "The antagonism of these two schools is probably irreconcilable; certainly no philosophy has yet succeeded in reconciling them. 'Experience' and 'intuition' have never yet been made to harmonize, by any ethical system of repute, as ultimate tests of right and wrong." Yet it seems by your definition you make an attempt at such reconciliation, for you say: "This comparison involves the test of utility so far as it requires the study of consequences; it involves the test of intuition so far as it determines the intrinsic quality of conformity or non-conformity with an ascertained law." Mr. Green says a wrong action is that which will injure some one. You say it is that which violates the recognized law of moral equality. The only difference we can see is one of phraseology.

3. Your test of intuition, in the last paragraph quoted, would seem to be almost, if not quite, begging the question. As between the two schools, the question is whether or not actions have an intrinsic quality. In a comparison between a given action and an ascertained law, we cannot see that intuition has any place, unless the law has been ascertained by intuition. That it may be so ascertained, you will not be ready to admit, as it is impossible that you share a common misapprehension as to the nature of law, that it is something akin to arbitrary legislative enactment, something which precedes and controls phenomena, instead of being, as it is, the orderly expression and notation of phenomena. Law being a deduction from observed facts, not a mysterious force by which the facts are unconditionally projected, it is as far as possible removed from intuitional conception; and the final test of the right or wrong of conformity or non-conformity of conduct with law is the bearing which it may have upon the welfare or illfare of the individual.

4. You say: "By substituting a process of comparison between actions and their general law for a mere analysis of blindly conjectured consequences," etc. But consequences which are made the test of right and wrong are never based upon blind conjecture, but upon actual observation or universal experience; and indeed this law with which the comparison is made is derived from the same source,—consequences determined by universal experience.

5. Whether conduct is compared directly with results, or with a generalization from results which is called a law, it is still a consideration of consequences, with which intuition has nothing to do.

The emphasis which you give to the word COMPARISON would indicate that your idea centres there; and perhaps a few more words from you will enable us to see that you have something more comprehensive and scientific than Mr. Green's terse definition.

Respectfully yours,

J. A. J. WILCOX.

For the sake of convenience, we have numbered the paragraphs in the above letter, and will now comment upon them successively. In order to be brief, we must omit the discussion of subsidiary questions altogether, and run the risk of appearing dogmatic by stating conclusions without explaining their grounds.

1. The utilitarian theory excludes from consideration the intrinsic moral quality of actions, and considers solely their consequences as affecting human happiness; and the more strictly logical advocates of this theory would confine attention to the happiness of the actor.

The intuitional theory excludes from consideration the consequences of actions, both with regard to individual and to general happiness, and considers solely their intrinsic moral quality.

The scientific theory (we must be permitted to describe it thus, at least for the present, without entering on any argument to justify the name) considers both the intrinsic moral quality and the consequences of actions, excluding neither of the two from its just share of attention.

This seems to us a correct characterization of the three theories, presenting as it were a rough charcoal sketch of their chief features, and bringing into view just enough to show their radical difference of method.

Now Mr. Wilcox raises a question to which, indeed, no answer is contained in our previous article: namely, wherein does the consideration of consequences required by the utilitarian theory differ from that required by the scientific theory? It is a question, therefore, which really advances the discussion, and does not involve a mere re-statement of what has been already said or a correction of a mere misunderstanding. The raising of such a question is a pleasure so rare in our editorial experience that we feel decidedly grateful for it. Our answer is as follows:—

The utilitarian theory rules out, as inadmissible, the method of determining the intrinsic moral quality of an action by reference to a previously ascertained universal law; it studies the consequences of an action to determine solely whether the action, as an isolated fact, tends to increase or decrease happiness in a given case; it resolutely prohibits the introduction of "abstractions" (i.e., universal laws) into ethics, for the purpose of discovering an intrinsic moral quality which it denies to exist; it holds that happiness is a self-evident good, and that all actions which promote it are self-evidently good, and that the search for any other test than the tendency to promote happiness is worse than futile. But the scientific theory studies the consequences of an action with no other object than to determine whether the action does possess an intrinsic moral quality—the quality of congruity or incongruity with a known universal law. Both theories study consequences, as the only way to find out whether an action is good or bad. But, while the utilitarian theory at once pronounces an action good if its calculated consequences seem promotive of happiness, the scientific theory, before pronouncing it good, inquires further whether those consequences involve any violation of the law of MORAL EQUALITY, EQUITY, or JUSTICE—synonymous expressions for the same thing. The "utilitarian test" stops with the "specific result of injury or benefit to the individual"; the scientific test goes beyond this, and demands conformity with the universal law of moral equality among all the individuals concerned. This is our answer to Mr. Wilcox's first paragraph. It will be sufficiently clear, we think, that the scientific theory is not a mere "re-statement of the utilitarian theory." The key-word of the utilitarian theory is happiness, which can never be anything but individual; the key-word of the scientific theory is justice, equity, moral equality, which is necessarily universal.

2. Our recognition of the irreconcilable antagonism of the utilitarian and intuitional schools was meant only to apply to them as they have always stood, each holding a portion of truth not grasped by the other. To say that no ethical system of repute has thus far succeeded in reconciling these two antagonistic theories was only another mode of stating that ethics have never yet been put on a sound scientific basis. When, however, the one scientific method is recognized as exclusively, and applied as faithfully, in ethics as in physics, we certainly believe that the two partial theories which have hitherto divided the world's allegiance will be swallowed up in the unity of a larger moral philosophy. If we said anything which seemed inconsistent with this strong and long-cherished conviction, it was due to a strange carelessness of expression. Mr. Wilcox is entirely right in supposing that we endeavored to point out the probable road to this ultimate harmony of "experience" and "intuition." In the light of what has preceded, we think something more than a mere "difference of phraseology" is discernible between the utilitarian and scientific theories. Finding much to accept in both of the older ethical schools, we also believe that something extremely important is added by the third and younger one, and that the latter is at least paving the way for a union, if not a "reconciliation," of its predecessors, in the higher synthesis of science.

3. It would be tedious, even if desirable, to explain with much fulness in these columns in what way we conceive the act of "comparison" to include invariably an element of "intuition"—not in the popular, but in a strictly philosophical, sense. Once more we must refer to our lecture on "Darwin's Theory of Conscience" for a tolerably full explanation on this topic. Suffice it to say here that "comparison" essentially consists in the discovery of relations; that relations are neither seen, heard, tasted, touched, nor smelt, but are intellectually perceived; that these non-sensuous perceptions of relations are what we mean by "intuition"; and that the scientific school broadens the conception of "experience" so as to include them.

Now moral law is simply the generalized expression of the mutual relations which ought to subsist among sensitive and intelligent beings. The relations which it expresses are of a peculiar kind, called "moral," because they involve the peculiar intrinsic quality of obligation. This obligatoriness of relations must be SEEN to be FELT; and the kind of seeing.

which it requires, being intellectual rather than physical, is properly enough called "intuition" (from the Latin verb intueri, to behold), although by the use of a metaphor. Consequently, the act of "comparison" between a particular action and the law of moral equality (equity) involves an element of intuition; while at the same time it is the consequences of the action which must determine whether it is congruous or incongruous with the law. In this manner the scientific theory puts ethics on the broad basis of actual human experience, like the utilitarian school; it recognizes intuition as an indestructible fact of human knowledge, like the intuitionist school; but it reduces intuition to the rank of a constant element in every cognitive act, instead of claiming for it a mysterious or supernatural character.

4. We spoke of "blindly conjectured consequences," because remote consequences can never be fully foreseen in detail and must remain a matter of mere conjecture, unless the aid of previously generalized laws is invoked. Let it once be understood that the law of moral equality (i.e. equity) is as fixed and irreversible as the law of gravitation, and it will be forthwith known, even in advance of anxious scrutiny of the future, that the consequences of an inequitable (i.e. iniquitous) act must be at last disastrous to human welfare. This prediction rests simply on human experience. The reason which moves the scientific school to study the consequences of an action is the prime necessity of discovering whether the action will or will not disturb the moral equalities, or equities, of the case; just as soon as this point is decided, the residual consequences, whether known or unknown, can be safely dismissed from consideration; it is established by all the authority of human experience that an inequitable action never in the upshot promotes human welfare. What we wish to make clear is that the utilitarian theory studies the consequences of an action as mere isolated facts, without regard to the universal law which governs them, and thereby loses itself in a labyrinth of conjectures; while the scientific theory studies consequences in order to compare the given action with this universal law, and thereby qualifies itself to attain a truly scientific prevision.

5. We have already pointed out the enormous difference between (1) comparing an action with its isolated results without regard to universal law, and (2) comparing it with its results for the express purpose of determining its relation to that law. In both cases, its consequences are the object of study; in both cases intuition, as above explained, is a constant element of the study itself; but in one case we arrive only at a more or less probable guess as to the moral quality of the action concerned, while in the other we arrive at a true scientific certainty.

We hope that what we have said will render our views on this subject somewhat more plain. But if not, we shall be greatly pleased to receive further criticisms, if characterized by the same unusual thoughtfulness and point.

CHURCH AND STATE IN SWITZERLAND.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:

The enclosed extract from our local paper of to-day is of importance, showing the drift of public opinion here in conservative Geneva. I call your attention particularly to the concluding sentence of the second article, where religious bodies are forbidden in any case "to possess other landed property than their churches or temples." What would become of Trinity's freehold in Switzerland? I will try and keep you informed as to the progress of the discussion to be expected on the subject.

A. W. KELSEY.

GENEVA, Dec. 24, 1878.

The following is the draft of a law for the disestablishment of any State religion, about to be submitted to the discussion of the Grand Council of Geneva, and to public ratification. It is one of such importance, and is occupying so deeply the public attention, that we give it in extenso, but reserve any comments upon it for a future number:—

Drafts of a law for the suppression of grants to religious bodies.

The Grand Council, on the proposition of one of its members, decrees as follows:—

To be submitted to the popular vote.

Art. 1. The liberty of free worship is guaranteed. No body shall be compelled to contribute to the expenses attendant upon the exercise of any religion. Neither the State nor the communes will salary any religion.

Art. 2. Public worship of any religion may be exercised and organized in virtue of the liberty of union and the right of association. All religions must conform to the general laws, as well as to the police regulations in force, as regards their public exercise.

They may, with the consent of the Grand Council, found institutions, and accept for this purpose donations and legacies; but they will in no case be allowed to possess other landed property than their churches or temples.

Art. 3. The churches, temples, cures, and presbyteries, which are now communal properties, shall be sold or let according to the forms applicable to communal landed properties. The buildings now in use for the worship of the Protestant faith shall not be applicable to any other worship; and the same rule shall apply equally to the buildings now in use for the Roman Catholic faith, which shall not be dedicated to any other worship.

The church of Saint Pierre shall remain the inalienable property of the town of Geneva, but the State shall have the right, as heretofore, to make use of it for national ceremonies.

Art. 4. In conformity with Section 3 of the articles of this present law the salaries which, by the constitutional law of the 28th of August, 1868, were apportioned for the erection of a general hospital are suppressed. The revenue derived from the capital of the "Caisse Hypothecaire" shall be proportionally divided every year between the proprietary communes, according to their individual claims.

Art. 5. Articles 2 and 3 and Section 3 of Art. 4 of the constitutional law of 28th August, 1868, for the erection of a general hospital, are hereby cancelled, as also the constitutional laws of 19th February, 1873, and 25th March, 1854, modifying Chapters 1 and 2 of Law 10 of the Constitution.

Temporary regulation: The Council of State shall submit to the Grand Council, within a period of six months, the draft of a law determining the pensions or temporary indemnities to be granted to the ecclesiastics whose functions are abolished by the present law.

The present law shall only come into vigor on the 1st January, 1880.—Continental and Swiss Times.

"OF THE PEOPLE, BY THE PEOPLE, FOR THE PEOPLE."

The subjoined letter of Miss Stevenson is extremely valuable and interesting, and will establish beyond question the claim of Theodore Parker to the credit of originating the above-quoted celebrated phrase:—

Not long ago there appeared in the Pioneer Press a communication from Mr. Powers, of Pine Island, in which he demonstrated by reference to chapter and verse of Theodore Parker's published works, that he was the author of the celebrated phrase so generally regarded as original with Abraham Lincoln.—"Of the people, by the people, for the people." The following letter from a lady who was for many years a member of Mr. Parker's household, and the intimate companion of his studies, throws some interesting light on the growth of this wonderfully compact definition of democratic government. We are indebted for it to the Rev. W. C. Gannett, from whose private note accompanying it we take the subjoined extract:—"You may be interested in the note which I enclose from a lady who lived in Theodore Parker's house through all his Boston life, helping him, in study and in work. I remember hearing her once describe the gradual birth of his definition of democratic government as 'the government of the people, by the people, for the people,' and their conversations over it before it won that, its final shape. So I sent her Mr. Powers' letter, which appeared in the Pioneer Press of Jan. 8, and asked if she were not willing to put on record over her name—which to the many who will recognize it makes the point a fixed fact—the true story. So a good thing be said, it is of no great consequence, but it is of some interest, to know who says it first."

BOSTON, Jan. 13.

My dear Mr. Gannett,—One cannot wish to take from Abraham Lincoln's wreath of fame a single leaf; but truth was very dear to him. Since his use of Theodore Parker's definition of democratic government, the authorship of that striking phrase has often been attributed to President Lincoln; but all those who were in the habit of hearing Mr. Parker through the last decade of his preaching and lecturing know it to be his emphasized and often-recurring words through that stormy period.

The idea did not spring at once to his mind in its final perfect clearness; he had expressed it again and again with gradually lessening diffuseness before he gave the address to the Anti-Slavery Society, May 13, 1854, where it appears thus: "Of all the people, by all the people, and for all the people," as published in Additional Speeches, vol. 2, p. 25. But that was not quite pointed enough for the weapon he needed to use so often in criticizing the national action, to pierce and penetrate the mind of hearer and reader with the just idea of democracy, securing it there by much iteration; and I can distinctly recall his joyful look when he afterward read it to me in his library, condensed into this gem: "Of the people, by the people, for the people."

Not a superfluous word there. Those who listened to him week after week in Music Hall would no more doubt the authorship of this phrase than a literary reader would question that of "To be or not to be." He was a generous soul, and would not care to claim his own; Mr. Lincoln was as generous, and would not encroach on another's right; but as one who watched, in the intimacy of the study, this crystallization of an expression which has become a household word, and is destined to be permanent, I venture to do justice to both these noble men by stating these facts.

Faithfully yours,

HANNAH E. STEVENSON.

—St. Paul and Minneapolis Pioneer Press, Jan. 20, 1879.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Liberty must and shall be preserved.

The purse is mightier than the sword.

The armor of wisdom is fashioned by experience.

Nice has several English churches, and one Scotch one.

Marriage means a union of two, not a mixture of twenty.

Cleanliness, if it be not next to godliness, is a part of manliness.

Another case of betrayal of trust. This time a Demand is in it.

Tennyson says "to soil others is no way to make ourselves clean."

Is a church edifice a church of God when man has a mortgage on it?

Hartford, Conn., has a female dentist, and they say she is a good one.

Edwin Booth declares that the modern theatre is a mere shop for gain.

One hundred and twenty-eight women attend the Michigan University.

The United States does not get the advantage of any of the eclipses in 1879.

There are only seventeen thousand Catholics in the whole State of Virginia.

The mortgage indebtedness in the State of Massachusetts is over $240,000,000.

The liberals of Clinton, Mass., have organized, and are having lectures every week.

Gabrielle, the youngest daughter of Horace Greeley, is about to enter a convent.

There are ten thousand printed Hebrew books in the library of the British Museum.

There are over eight hundred Young Men's Christian Associations on this continent.

Dr. Leonard Bacon favors a union of the Presbyterian and Congregational churches.

Spurgeon will not marry a person of his congregation who is not a professor of religion.

The New York World says it was not Tyndall, but Elijah, who originated the prayer test.

There are over one hundred co-educational universities and colleges in the United States.

The late war with Turkey cost Russia over £312,000,000. War is an expensive recreation.

There are twelve theological seminaries in New England, but a great many more theologies.

Gambetta says, "The French Ministry, by choosing a policy of inaction, has signed its own doom."

The Amherst College fund in aid of young men fitting for the ministry amounts to nearly $70,000.

About one-quarter of the Unitarian churches in the United States are self-supporting, we are informed.

Felix Adler does not look for any restoration of the Jews, but predicts the extinction of Judaism.

The Baptist Church claims a membership of 2,102,034 in the United States, with 14,954 ministers.

Dramatic performances are given in Chicago theatres on Sunday evenings. They will soon follow in Boston.

If Cyrus W. Field erects that monument to Major Andre, nobody will ever erect a monument to his memory.

There will be a feast of Pentecost in Chicago this winter, as the revivalist and his singer have gone to that city.

The week of prayer did not convert January into May, nor poverty into plenty, nor make the times any better.

In the Sumatra forests a flower has been recently discovered which has an average diameter of thirty-three inches.

There is a project in this city for an elevated railway. There are a great many other ways that need to be elevated.

The nation which exempts in one what it exacts from another is not founded upon political justice, and will not stand.

Capital and business ought to pay the taxes, not labor. It is rather hard to make the fiddler pay for his own fiddling.

Rev. George H. Hepworth is troubled with a debt on his church, and declares his intention to retire if it is not soon lifted.

"To speak his thoughts is every freeman's right," is the motto recently placed over the platform at Investigator Hall in this city.

Sacred dramas, sacred fairs, sacred operas, sacred panoramas, and sacred sleighing have been enjoyed by Bostonians on Sundays this winter.

Universal suffrage is demanded in Italy by the Catholics and Liberals, and is opposed by the Conservatives, who represent the small landed proprietors.

A new monthly magazine has been started in England, called the Liberal. The title sufficiently defines the character of the magazine. May it live long and prosper.

It is stated that the Southern clergy do not dare preach a word against the white League or the Ku-Klux any more than they did against negro slavery twenty years ago.

The total number of business failures for 1878 was 10,478 with $234,000,000 liabilities. The proportion of failures is one to every sixty-four of the business houses in the country.

E. E. Hale says the tide is all with the Unitarians, the Orthodox are more liberal, and Calvinism is dead. —Boston Herald. The tide is all with Liberalism, Unitarianism is dying, and Orthodoxy is dead.

A writer on household economy in the Springfield Republican says that a woman with two daughters and a son, all over fifteen, can live and make a respectable appearance on six dollars a week.

The Chaplain of the Maine House of Representatives prayed the other day that the members might have grace to stop speaking when they got through. What is sauce for the member is sauce for the chaplain.

If a chaplain is worth five dollars a day to the State, a member of the legislature ought to be paid fifteen dollars a day. Since retrenchment is in order, let us try and get along with a little less piety in the State House.

Nature commands every man to take care of himself. The society, lam, or association that bids one man take care of another, or says that every one should be provided for by the State or nation, is teaching a false principle.

In Russian Poland, some Catholic priests were transported to the interior of Russia for inducing their parishioners to abandon the use of alcoholic liquors, in consequence of which the government revenue was diminished.

A correspondent of a New York paper writes that there are but three churches in Boston that have cosmopolitan congregations. These churches are Tremont Temple, the Church of the Holy Trinity, and the Church of the Advent.

One hundred and fifty thousand barrels of cider have been made in Western Massachusetts this fall. We shall soon have an agent appointed for the suppression of apple-trees if this thing keeps on. We nominate Dr. Miner for the position.

The Rev. Lectureship tells the truth when he says: "Whole platoons of church-members have not learned the decalogue." He might have added that many more platoons of church-members who have learned the decalogue do not care anything about it.

Rain-water during a thunder storm sometimes contains nitric acid. Snow-water contains no air, and when melted often deposits a small quantity of dust. Ice-water is difficult to digest. Sub-soil water in towns should not be used for drinking purposes.

The Unitarians claim four hundred and one ministers. The Christian Register, in speaking upon the number of societies, says: "Twenty have given no sign of life for several years." The same remark might be applied to ministers as well as societies.

Mrs. Anderson walked straight through the fourth commandment on four successive Sundays in her recent marvellous pedestrian feat, and the religious papers hope that the American people will not encourage any more performances of a like character.

In 1874 there were 116,244 persons in Georgia between the ages of ten and eighteen who could neither read nor write. To-day there are only 85,630 so ignorant. We are not informed whether death or education has reduced the number, but we hope the latter.

The new Old South Church has been obliged to withdraw the aid of a small sum a year hitherto granted to the Chambers Street Chapel, on account of its straitened circumstances. Let it obey its Master's command: "Sell what thou hast and give to the poor."

Moody does not believe in having "the organ grind out tunes on a Sunday evening to amuse the congregation and kill time," but he evidently believed in having Mr. Sankey grind out gospel songs to amuse tabernacle goers. We prefer the organ; there is no hypocrisy in that.

The "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" protests against being classed with the Salt Lake Mormons. They are not disciples of Brigham Young. They reject polygamy. They hold to the Trinity, the Atonement, and the Resurrection of the Body, but do not believe that the Bible is all of God's revelation.

Byron writing to Mr. Hodgson in September, 1811, says, "I will have nothing to do with your immortality. We are miserable enough in this life without making ourselves more so by speculating upon another." In another letter he says, "I am verging towards Spinoza. I deny nothing, but doubt everything."

The New York Graphic thinks it would be just as wise to repeal the patent laws, punish inventors as criminals, and destroy all labor-saving machinery as to shut out Chinese cheap labor. It thinks that a machine that can do the work of seventy men does more to cheapen wages than any almond-eyed Mongolian.

It takes the great to appreciate greatness. Goethe said of Shakespeare, "All the anticipations which I ever experienced respecting man and his lot, and which, unnoticed by myself, have attended me from my youth, I find fulfilled and unfolded in Shakespeare's plays." It seems as if he had solved all enigmas for us.

It is rumored that Rev. Mr. Murray will not be able to build that great free church which he was to preach in to the multitudes that are too Liberal for Orthodoxy and too Orthodox for Liberalism; and also hinted that he has given up the ministry as a profession, but will preach a sermon once a month in his magazine.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer is troubled at the spread of what he calls "infidelity" in America, but consoles himself with the reflection that Parker has no worthy successor. There are hundreds of liberal lecturers to-day where there was one in Parker's time, and any one of them is able to show the falseness in Dr. Lorimer's theology.

The Millerites have figured out another day when the world will go to pieces and the saints go up to glory. People will still go on investing in four per cent. United States bonds, just as though there were securities against such a calamity, instead of getting their ascension robes ready. The ways of the world are inscrutable.

Illinois has ten ladies who serve as county school-superintendents. The school affairs in these counties are on a prosperous basis, and what is most gratifying, though not at all astonishing, is, that not one cent of the school funds of which they have had charge has been lost through dishonesty. We need women in business as well as in politics.

A Jerusalem correspondent does not think much of the way in which the women of that country are treated. The men ride to market, the women walk; the men smoke after they get there, the women sell the goods; the men return on the donkeys, the women driving them home. A missionary of equal rights, with woman's share of them, is needed in and around Jerusalem more than the Gospel of John or the Epistle of Peter.

The Christian Union in true Christian spirit says: "Our columns are not open to discuss the question whether Christianity is or is not historically true. We assume the divine origin and nature of the Christian religion. We are always ready to answer questions, but we are not ready to afford an arena for a debate on that point. In our judgment it is no more debatable than the Copernican system in astronomy." We would like to know what the Union means by "the Christian religion."

The Detroit Echo says, "The Massachusetts Legislature has abolished its parliamentary chaplains, and members who want praying will for the future have to do the praying as well as the preying themselves." This paragraph might possibly be true ten years hence, but to-day it will have to be contradicted. Both branches of our Legislature have chaplains. The State pays about $10 a day for prayers. It does it for about the same reason, we presume, that the old man went to meeting, "to keep on the right side of God."

The New York World, in commenting upon an article in the February number of the North American Review, on Nihilism, says: "When we compare the picture of utter demoralization presented in the highest social and political circles of Russia with the self-sacrificing spirit and energy exhibited by the Russian Radicals even in their most violent acts, we are inclined to suspect that the government and the aristocracy are the true 'Nihilists' of Russia, if Nihilism means the absence of all moral, political, and social principle."

Rev. Mr. Brown, a missionary to New Britain, and his associates, lately shot about fifty cannibals because they had been eating several missionaries. The cannibals were done Brown, if the missionaries which they had eaten were not. This improved method of conversion might be introduced into other localities with benefit to the race, where intelligent, civilized beings go to be murdered and eaten through perverted notions of philanthropy and humanity. Cannibals do not want any gospel of peace. Arterial drainage would be better for them.

Charles Kohlman has published a pamphlet on "The Last Incarnation." The volume is a translation from the French of A. Constant, of Geneva. The work is founded on the New Testament story of Jesus, and is made up of nineteen legends, a prologue, and epilogue. It was written to illustrate the socialism in the teachings of the Nazarene, and the author makes out that Jesus was a socialist as the word is understood to-day. He says, "The word of the Christ is the word of liberty, of equality, of fraternity." We do not believe that the world will be advanced by clothing the ancient superstitions with new fancies, but rather by carrying out to fruition and fulfillment the modern ideas which science and civilization have developed. We have left the first century. Do not let us go back to it.

The following are from "The Husband's Commandments":—

I. I am thy husband; thou shalt have no other husband but me, whom thou didst vow to love, honor, and obey.

II. Thou shalt not look upon any other man to love or admire him; for I, thy husband, am a jealous husband, who will visit the sins of his wife upon her followers.

III. Thou shalt not back-bite thy husband, nor speak lightly of him; neither shalt thou expose his faults to thy neighbors.

V. Honor thy husband's father and mother, and let not thy thoughts wander selfishly towards their cupboards and pockets whilst so doing.

VIII. Thou shalt not rifle thy husband's pockets for money when he is asleep; neither shalt thou read any letters thou mayest find therein, for it is his business to look after his own affairs, and thy business to let him alone; ask no questions, but believe.

A bill has been introduced in the Illinois Legislature for the taxation of church property. The Chicago Times approves it on the general ground of equity, maintaining that "only from five to ten per cent. of the people of Illinois use the churches or have any interest in them, and that it is manifest injustice to the remaining ninety or ninety-five per cent. that they should be compelled to pay for that portion of the benefits of government which church property enjoys." It is a healthful sign that the secular press favors this measure of justice. It shows that there is a conscience in the press if not in the pulpit. Exempting church property from taxation is only robbing the world to enrich the Church. The liberals of Massachusetts should see that a bill is before our legislature asking to have the church property in this State taxed. This demand of liberalism ought to receive more attention at the hands of those who are suffering from unjust exemption. Liberals should demand their rights, and one is that they shall no longer be taxed to support Christian places of worship.

Communications.

IS THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE COMMITTED TO "REPEAL"?

CORTLAND, N.Y., Jan. 14, 1879.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—An impression has gone abroad that the late Liberal League Congress at Syracuse took very objectionable action in regard to the offence of circulating obscene matter through the mails, and thus forced the minority to secede and form the new League which they did. Most of the articles published in THE INDEX favoring the minority movement assume this to be the state of the case.

The writers of many of these articles, not having attended the late Congress as I judge, have been, it would seem, greatly misinformed as to the attitude the Congress assumed towards the obscenity question.

One writer, Mr. Campbell, speaks of "the unfortunate fact that about three-fifths of the freethinkers at the Syracuse Congress committed themselves to demand a total repeal of all national laws against obscenity."

However decidedly these freethinkers may have committed "themselves" Mr. Campbell, in common with all liberals, should be glad to learn that they were considerate enough not to commit the Congress to a demand for such repeal.

Mr. Campbell further says: "I feel shame that my Orthodox friends can in triumph boast that the Church has steadily maintained that free thinking leads to free living, and that the late Congress vindicates the correctness of their claims."

Now just what Mr. Campbell means by the term "free living" is what I don't know; and, since the subject of free living was not in any manner brought before the Congress, we must remain in ignorance upon this matter I fear, unless Mr. Campbell will be kind enough to explain.

I might, if useful, quote from many other correspondents of THE INDEX and other papers, evincing the same lack of correct information as to the doings of the Congress.

Without stopping now to inquire as to the sources of this misinformation which has prevailed so extensively, even creeping into the Rev. Joseph Cook's lecture, let us see what the Congress as a body really did in regard to this obscenity question.

The published record of its doings, which all may examine, shows its action to have been substantially this:—

It resolved that the publishing and circulating of obscene matter is a grave offence, and ought to be prohibited and counteracted by both legal and educational means. It further resolved that, since the Liberal League Congress was divided in opinion as to the jurisdiction of the general government over offences of this nature, an expression of opinion by the Congress upon this question should be postponed for one year, thus affording ample time for careful reflection and examination. In this, if my memory serves me, the entire body concurred. Mr. Abbot expressed himself pleased and satisfied. Now, was not this well and wisely done? And wherein is it open in any degree to the charges which have been so freely and persistently made of favoring the circulation of vile and obscene literature? Of course, nowhere.

This action having been taken, the Congress proceeded to the election of officers; and just here is where the movement favoring obscenity comes in, if indeed it comes in at all. The old officers were not reelected; but others were chosen who, it is claimed, were known to entertain the opinion that Congress has not the constitutional power to pass laws excluding from the mails any matter on account of its immoral character or tendency. The officers chosen do not all entertain this opinion; but, admitting they do, is the holding of this opinion by men and women of acknowledged purity of life and character so grave an offence as properly to subject them, and the organization which elects them to office, to the odious charges to which we have just referred? And does the election of such persons to office so contaminate and demoralize our League organization as to make it improper for good persons to remain in fellowship with it?

The claim so persistently made, that the selection of officers holding the views referred to committed the Congress to repeal, will hardly stand the test of reason, in view of the very considerate vote which had just before been taken, to postpone action upon the question of difference for one year, for the very purpose of affording opportunity for further thought and examination. The reflection of the old officers, had such been the result, under the circumstances, I think, could not have been reasonably construed as committing the Congress against repeal. Why then should any one insist that the election of officers holding the views they did committed the Congress to repeal?

Having myself favored the reflection of the old officers, and holding an opinion adverse to that of Mr. Wright upon the constitutional question, I yet fall to perceive wherein the League is in any manner compromised or dishonorably committed by the action taken at its late meeting at Syracuse.

It is generally known, I presume, that the Hon. Elizer Wright was elected president; who, notwithstanding his opinions upon the constitutional question referred to, stands entirely above reproach, and the acknowledged peer of any man who could have been selected. And I think when the fog that has been raised around the doings of the late League Congress shall have been cleared away by correct information, the public will perceive and acknowledge that the Liberal League has done itself no dishonor in simply exercising its undoubted prerogative to change its board of officers; especially when, in so doing, it places at its head so able a representative man as the Hon. Elizer Wright.

S. BREWER.

[The "impression" considered to be erroneous in the first paragraph of the above letter is strictly correct. The National Liberal League did commit itself to "repeal" at Syracuse, not by a formal resolution, but by electing a Board of Directors, unanimously in favor of "repeal" in place of a Board of Directors which stood four to one against "repeal." Action speaks louder than words; a change of administration means a thousandfold more than a mere paper declaration. The American public are far too well educated, politically, to be deceived in this matter; they possess no such Arcadian simplicity as not to understand that the majority, instead of abiding by their vote to "postpone decisive action" on this contested issue for a year, took the most decisive action possible by filling at once all the administrative offices with persons in favor of the new policy of "repeal," avowedly because they were in favor of it, as was shown by the speeches at the time. Why now put forward the claim that by this action no change of policy and position was effected? The majority simply broke faith with the minority, and took decisive action after voting not to take it. They knew what they did; the public knows what they did; they revolutionized the attitude of the League on the question at issue, and it is idle to seek now to cover up the fact.

There is no question of persons here; it is solely a question of collective policy and action. If the change of officers had been limited to such changes as should leave the Board of Directors still four to one against "repeal," there would have been no secession or protest with our consent. We yield to no man in honor, respect, and veneration for Elizer Wright; we echo every word said in his praise, and double it.

He was not present; he took no part in the action at Syracuse which the public justly condemn as hostile to the necessary safeguards of society against detestable crimes. If he had been present, we do not believe that the "true inwardness" of the proceedings could have escaped his keen and honest eye. Be that as it may, the fact remains that the National Liberal League reversed its course at Syracuse, and committed itself to "repeal" as unequivocally as the nation would commit itself to Democracy, if it should elect a Democratic administration in 1880.—ED.]

A WORD FROM THE WEST.

RUSHFORD, Minn., Jan. 10, 1879.

MY DEAR ABBOT:—

I'm somewhat reticent before THE INDEX public, chiefly because it is made up from such high thinkers that I can seldom imagine thought of mine could interest them. I write now with little hope to edify, but from a desire to be counted "one more" on your side of the late absorbing and sadly distracting question, "Repeal or Reform?"

I've read, I think, every word published in THE INDEX respecting the question, and have striven hard—my very best—to catch the clearest, straightest beams of truth radiated from white-hot points of polar contact between the powerful batteries engaged in its discussion, and to permit no refraction or obscuration of the same by any mist of personal sympathy, or by the dust and smoke of the battle.

After all, do we ever succeed in such attempts? Does even "the clear starlight of ideas" ever reach us just as it leaves the stars? Are we not perpetually and of necessity ourselves immersed in sympathetic air, and compassed round by clouds affectional that have as much to do with forming what we call the true spectrum of each ray as has the constitution of the stars themselves? . . . Talk as we may about "pure reason," it is a flame that cannot burn in vacuo. Only in love's atmosphere, where elements of thought unite, by swifter, surer, and more intense affinities than any chemistry takes note of, with elements of feeling, does that white flame burst into light. . . . Conclusions (in the moral world) born of thought divorced from feeling? Yes; the old story of immaculate conception! I do not believe it. . . . We sternly banish one dear love after another, bravely determined to live celibate lives of pure devotion to the one supreme and absolute God,—named Truth. At length we think we stand alone before our deity, and worship begins; when, lo! our prayers are but apostrophes, our hymns but love-songs all unconsciously addressed to some "my own" living still in memory more than exile. . . .

I've tried to be an honest juror in this case. I've listened respectfully to all the arguments, and tried to weigh them in scales of pure intelligence, but—am I quite unbiased? As I sit weighing the argument, three little daughters sit in the other room, and I overhear the eldest reading to her sisters, just learning to read; then as I think of those flenda in Boston (!) who only wait opportunity to insult (that is enough,—no talk about corrupting) their innocence, I'm conscious of a little breeze of sentiment arising from my heart, and giving strange buoyancy to one side of the scale! Down goes the other with such weights (of gush?) as these: Yes, keep even the old law if we cannot have better; or give us more if need be,—give us laws as harsh and processes as summary as ever tyranny devised for the suppression of the pure and good, if so the infernal trade and hell-born crew can be cut down and off. Shall liberty refuse to defend her own with these fine weapons merely because tyranny has abused or may abuse them? Shall we sit tamely down and see incarnate devils trying to desecrate our homes, and strike no blow because, forsooth, some undesigned or deluded comrade of the fiends, or even some stray friend of ours, may possibly be grazed? . . . "Even for liberty 'tis possible to pay too great a price." A truth illustrated in this:—

Whereas, No well-intentioned dog should be restrained of perfect liberty to bark: therefore,

Resolved, That every fold should have unrestricted communication with the wilderness by telephone, and that on no account should traps be set about that instrument for any wolf or jackal!

Dear friend, I'm with you, heart and mind, for once, at least.

T. H. EVERTS.

[The marks indicating certain omissions in the above communication of our friend Dr. Everts, whom we hope some day to meet in the flesh as we have often met him in spirit, are his, not ours.—ED.]

A WORD FOR MR. UNDERWOOD.

In reading some of Mr. B. F. Underwood's recent lectures, I have been again deeply impressed with the rare qualities of fairness, sincerity, and breadth of thought that characterize this distinguished liberal. There is a certain manliness in Mr. Underwood's convictions and a healthiness in his tone that won my admiration when I first read one of his hard assaults on Christianity, in the form of a little pamphlet concisely stating the conflicting doctrines of materialism and the former system of religious faith.

Mr. Underwood never descends to the low plane of attack that seems so inviting to many liberals who feel "called" to make war on Orthodoxy. His style and spirit both show him to be a royal knight in the service of truth, who scorns any weapons of assault or defence unworthy the chivalry of a noble cause. Behind all that, Mr. Underwood says there is a modest, yet brave, sincerity that gives his utterances a rare charm, and makes even his stern materialism appear sublime to one who would gladly look beyond the sunset of this life for the dawn of another being. If all the public representatives of liberalism were of Mr. Underwood's character, freethought would not be associated in the popular mind with bigotry and charlatanism, as it now too generally is. The cause of freethought never needs high-minded, sincere, generous-souled exponents so much as at present. The destiny of liberalism from this time forward will be influenced to a great extent by the character of its advocates; and it is from this conviction that I desire to speak a word in behalf of Mr. Underwood's claims as a lecturer, believing that wherever he goes he will leave behind him the proof that true manliness and broad mental culture are not incompatible with modern "scepticism." H. CLAY NEVILLE.

[Most cordially and unreservedly do we say amen to the above just tribute to Mr. Underwood. Every word of it has been fairly earned.—ED.]

SOCIALISM.

The excellent lecture on Socialism in Germany and the United States, by Prof. Henry Fawcett (INDEX, January 18), contains the true statement: "Capital which is advanced by the State is just the same as capital which is owned by private individuals. It cannot be procured like water rained down from heaven; some one must have labored to produce it." The debts by which all the States in the civilized world are burdened prove to me that the States give more than they can afford, or rather that they are still too much used for the selfish ends of officials and cunning speculators. A better and more appropriate regulation of the relations between the individual and the State is the most important aim of true socialism; and in order to accomplish it we must have perfectly equal taxation and perfect separation of Church and State, representation, better regulations of the salaries of officials, fair dealings of contractors with the State, abolition of primogeniture where it exists, and similar reforms. The law might provide that, if a capitalist leaves to his heirs over (say) $100,000, the surplus should go to the State of which the individual is a citizen, for charitable public purposes. Better education, vigorous agitation, and general coöperation will help to develop true liberalism and true socialism. When the human mind is ripe for these blessed conditions, they will be appreciated and enjoyed. CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N.H., January 18, 1879.

VOTE OF THE JACKSONVILLE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., Jan. 22, 1879.

F. E. ABBOT, Pres. N. L. L. of America, Boston, Mass.:—

Enclosed herewith, I hand you for publication a copy of resolution passed by the Jacksonville Liberal League, there being but two dissenting voices. As the resolution speaks for itself, further comment by me is unnecessary.

Yours truly, JOHN C. GRIERSON.

Resolved, By the Liberal League of Jacksonville, That we heartily approve the action of the minority at the Congress of the National Liberal League, held at Syracuse, in October last, in regard to the Postal Laws of 1873; that we consider it the only position consistent with reason and sound morality; and that we hereby sever our connection with the National Liberal League, and request a Charter from the National Liberal League of America.

JOHN C. GRIERSON, Sec'y pro tem.

OPUM is the juice of the poppy, and, as there are many varieties of the poppy, so too are there many kinds of opium; the mode of collecting the juice is, however, always the same. In Egypt, Syria, and India; the three countries which produce opium, a number of semicircular incisions are made in the capsule of the poppy, and the juice which exudes is carefully gathered. This juice, on being dried in the sun, becomes of a dark color, thickens, and forms a brown, firm paste; this is opium. Laudanum is a solution of opium in alcohol and water. Both opium and laudanum are to be regarded as a mixture of several similar but not identical substances. Since the time of Derosene (1804) and Robiquet (1817), who first isolated narcotine and morphine, chemists have very carefully investigated the different chemical compounds occurring in opium. Thus they have discovered codeine, narcotine, thebaine, papaverine, and other substances, all of them bases, i.e., bodies that unite with acids to form crystallizable salts. These bases do not all affect in the same way the organic functions. Thus, narcotine possesses very little or no soporific power; two grammes of it can be injected without perceptible effect, while a centigramme of morphine is quite sufficient to produce therapeutic and physiological results. Thebaine does not cause sleep, and in animals produces convulsions like those caused by strychnine, while morphine in the same dose produces deep comatose sleep. Another curious thing about these opium alkaloids is, that they do not act alike on man and animals, as has been demonstrated by Claude Bernard. Man is specially sensitive to the action of morphine, while thebaine is almost without effect upon his nervous system; animals, on the other hand, feel the effects of morphine only when it is given in large doses, while thebaine is for them a violent poison. So, too, with belladonna and atropine, its active principle; they are a deadly poison for man, but almost without effect on rabbits; the dose of atropine that would suffice to kill ten men would hardly be enough to kill one rabbit. The difference is not so great with respect to morphine, yet morphine specially affects man.—Charles Richet, in Popular Science Monthly.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:-

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1873.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,--Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns--better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:-

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MULLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America--that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country--is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others--all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"--together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Hartford, and John Weiss,--together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.--Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.--Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.--Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.--Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.--"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.--"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.--"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.--The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.--The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.--The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.--The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.--Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.--On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.--A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.--The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims--

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religious.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Maasson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESQUANES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (B. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	3.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe, 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	6.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	6.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance," to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.80
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES (PHYSIOLOGY OF COMMON LIFE. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERRIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Disquisitions and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	1.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swings'n Round the Circle.....	1.50
A Ekkoos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Totty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.40
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 28 vols.....	11.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.25
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.25
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Boon Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorsists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Ope Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	2.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.25
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,
BLUFFTON,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S
DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marple's. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Secpticism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 85 cents.

II. Burgess-Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 50 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. E. Gladstone, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE
Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by advocates of the highest authority.

Prominent attention will also be given to those various sciences which help to a better understanding of the nature of man, to the bearings of science upon the questions of society and government, to scientific education, and to the conflicts which spring from the progressive nature of scientific knowledge.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
RONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Trollope, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. R. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,
AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECT-
URES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamous Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. BARNES,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-
TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for $0 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. E. A. platform. $1.50.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
TORBIDIER, MASS.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLSTADT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Outfit free. Address TRUS & CO., Augusta, Maine.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 18, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1878. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—W.E. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEB. 6, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 476.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880.

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

OUR READERS will "smile audibly" at the chastisement so effectively and deservedly administered to His Lectureship by the Albany Sunday Argus and the Orange Journal, in articles which will be found copied on another page of this issue. Will nobody hunt up a cool paying-stone for little Alexander McStinger?

ALLUDING to Archbishop Purcell's recent calamities, caused by his undertaking to make a savings-bank of himself, the Nation says: "The Catholic Church in this country has thus far kept itself singularly free from money scandals, but if it means to keep up its reputation it will have to avoid the savings-bank business, and avoid also the raising of large sums by games of chance, to which it resorted so coarsely recently in the cathedral in this city."

LAST SUNDAY we lectured for Professor Adler, in New York, on "The Practical Work of Free Religion"—Dr. Adler himself being absent for the purpose of lecturing in Cincinnati. The importance of his movement in New York grows upon us, the more opportunity we have to study its character and working. The "Society for Ethical Culture," as it is named, appears to us the most promising and advanced local movement, in the direction of radical religion, with which we are acquainted; and chiefly because it is taking up with such energy, enthusiasm, and success the practical work of Free Religion. Its Workingmen's Lyceum, its Kindergarten, its devotion to all that tends to enlighten and purify and uplift society, deserve the applause of the outside world, and are rapidly winning it. Here we have Free Religion proving its faith by its works, and challenging the respect of mankind by the fruits it bears. Dr. Adler and his friends have our most unstinted sympathy and admiration in their unselfish mission; and we return home quickened and encouraged by this grand spectacle of Free Religion in powerful, successful, and most beneficent operation.

THE BOSTON Advertiser of January 28 said: "The famous expression used by Lincoln at Gettysburg, that 'government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth,' and credited by Miss Stevenson to Theodore Parker, seems to have had a still earlier authority,—no less than that of the mighty master of English speech, Daniel Webster. It was the key to his famous argument against the doctrine of State rights in his speeches on the Fugitive resolutions in 1850, and is quoted in Bartlett's Familiar Quotations as follows: 'The people's government, made for the people, made by the people, and answerable to the people.' Theodore Parker used the expression in a speech at the New England anti-slavery convention in 1850 as follows: 'A democracy, that is, a government of all the people, by all the people, for all the people.' It is not singular that essentially the same expression should have occurred to each of them in following out the same line of thought; and it is perfectly reasonable to suppose that both Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Parker used it without being conscious that Mr. Webster or any kindred spirit had anticipated them." Since the question concerns the origin of the expression simply, and not that of the idea, we do not see that Daniel Webster really anticipated Theodore Parker. Surely Parker's phrase is much finer than Webster's. Miss Stevenson is entirely correct, for all that appears above to the contrary.

IN A LATE discourse at Tremont Temple, Rev. G. C. Lorimer thus gave his opinion on the religious condition of Boston: "I propose now to talk on irreligion in Boston. Understand me, that I do not mean by irreligion immorality, and have no desire to place my foot across the border of that infectious region known as immorality. Let those ministers and writers who like to saturate their garments in the dens of immorality, and then flaunt them in the people's faces, have all right to do it. I find religion in every sect, in all creeds and denominations. But when I say irreligion, I mean departure from Christianity in thought and practice. . . . It will not do to say that Boston is irreligious in any wholesale fashion. I know Boston has passed through some very severe trials. I know that in 1880 there was one unevangelical church to three thousand inhabitants, and that now there is one to every six thousand. Also that at that time there was one Orthodox church to every four thousand people, and now there is one to every two thousand. So that if statistics are correct we have not been retrograding; we have more than held our own. There was a time when the Orthodox churches were going to pieces. Then came an influx of German theology. Theodore Parker, that great leader, represented the climax of that group of splendid men who gathered around him. Emerson, that Concord philosopher, is perhaps the only one that is left to us. Who are to follow them? Where are the young men of the Parker type? The Elijah of pure thought went up out of the earth in his chariot, and took his mantle with him. You may traverse this wide nation, and you will in no city find the doctrines of the Lord proclaimed as they are here. We have a strong position and should not waver or falter, though there are constantly recurring examples of irreligion."

PROFESSOR FELIX ADLER, at the close of his lecture on January 19, thus alluded to Joseph Cook's calumnies against the Free Religious Association (we quote the New York Herald's report): "Professor Adler, in closing, referred to the grievous misrepresentations which have been made of free religion—which, if anything at all, is a moral religion—during the past week. Every army, Professor Adler said, has its camp followers; every advance that is made is attended with some disorder whenever mankind have endeavored to reach a higher plane; some, who are weak in the attempt to leap, have fallen back and sunk below their former level. There are some men of this stamp who follow the liberal ranks, who mistake liberty for license, whom we push from us, loathing them. But a lecturer from Boston points to these as if they were representatives of liberalism, and seeks to make the Free Religious Association of the United States responsible for a class of persons whom he calls 'moral cancer-planters,' though what that means—cancer-planting—it would be well if some physiologist would explain. To enable those who are not acquainted with the Free Religious Association, which has thus been vilified, to understand its true character, it will only be necessary to mention a few of the men who are at its head. I mention in the first place Octavius B. Frothingham, a man whose noble character is above even the breath of suspicion, who has so long stood out alone, fearlessly doing the pioneer work of religious emancipation, and to whom every liberal in New York feels and acknowledges a debt of gratitude. I mention a second of our Vice-Presidents, George William Curtis, whose name is associated with all that is best and purest in politics of the land and the State, Professor Youmans, the eminent editor of the Popular Science Monthly, and lastly the revered name of Ralph Waldo Emerson, who has given to the present and the rising generation of Americans some of their wisest, truest, and holiest aspirations. It is against a society having such representatives as these that this new champion of Orthodoxy turns his poisoned sword of slander. It augurs ill for a cause that tolerates such methods of defence or attack, and assuredly they will not avail. Above all mists of misconception and all clouds of malice will rise to view, ever more bright and clear, the true aim of free religion, which is light and love, liberty and purity, in indissoluble union."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PASTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PATNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. B. F. SELWEN.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Flomce, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Miami, La.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. A. MY POST.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH VADY STANTON.....Tombury, N. J.
 MISS VALLIE HOLLY.....Lottsburg, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. E. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. ORANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALL, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCO, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALL, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GALT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galveston.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHELS, Adam.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. B. OLARK, Hillsboro.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Michigan.....E. A. SAWTALLE, Boston.
 Minnesota.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Missouri.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. OUPHLEND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Bay.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRIOR, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAVERTON, North Benning.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. FORTNE.

Finance Committee.

D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.....Chicago, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, Ill.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Fellow, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

Suffrage a Birthright.

BY HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

Mr. Parkman, however, is discussing the policy of universal male suffrage; and in criticising his opinions the way has now been opened for dealing more directly with the question whether the startling political corruption which now deforms our politics and darkens the future of our country is the result of that extension of the suffrage which has been the necessary product of American ideas. In the prosecution of our task, let us refer to some of his statements. He speaks dolefully of "the muddy tide of ignorance rolled in upon us" from beyond the sea a generation ago, with its baleful effects in cheapening the ballot, in the creation of crowded and misgoverned cities, in "bloated wealth and envious poverty," and in "a tinsel civilization above and a discontented proletariat beneath." "Two enemies, unknown before, have risen like spirits of darkness on our social and political horizon, an ignorant proletariat and a half-taught plutocracy. Between lie the classes, happily still numerous and strong, in whom rests our salvation"; but he remarks of this middle class that "as they neither flatter, lie, nor bribe, they have little power over these barbarians of civilization that form the substratum of great industrial communities."

We do not deny the existence of the evils here painted, though we think the picture too highly colored; but there is another view of the situation which Mr. Parkman states with less fulness and emphasis. The raw material of the continent needed development. The advance of our civilization and the extension of our free system of government itself called for muscle, as well as brains; and while we have smarted under the evils so vividly portrayed, we have certainly realized very great and substantial compensations. Our population has wonderfully increased, and brought with it a marvellous prosperity. The construction of our grand system of railways, with a rapidity almost miraculous, and incalculably ministering to our material well-being, has been another result. The settlement of our Western States and Territories has been powerfully stimulated, while "factories and a thousand prolific industries which heads without hands could not have awakened or sustained" have been called into life. Such results were only possible through the rude forces by which they were wrought, and whose disagreeable friction we have been obliged to endure as the price of its attendant blessings. It should be remembered, too, that our national prosperity during the past generation presupposes some measure of wholesome administration. The conduct of the government in carrying on a great civil war, its reduction of our national debt since, and the successful management of our foreign affairs, are matters worthy of honorable mention, and are incompatible with that political melancholy which so often perverts the judgment of scholarly and conservative men. As to clothing with the ballot our foreign-born citizens, whose presence among us is so distressing to Mr. Parkman, it was done for the good and sufficient reasons we have already stated; while the evils he depicts are quite as justly chargeable to native demagogism as to the essential badness of the element against which he declaims. Respecting the mischiefs resulting from the policy of an elective judiciary, we have only to say that we believe they are fully matched by those arising from the mistaken or corrupt use of the appointing power.

Mr. Parkman seems to interpret the theory of natural rights as an attempt to abolish the differences which exist among men in talent, character, and culture. "To level minds to one stature," he says, "would make them barren as well"; and he asks, "Shall we look for an ideal society in that which tends to a barren average and a weary uniformity, treats men like cattle, counts them by the head, and gives them a vote apiece, without asking whether or not they have the sense to use it?" In these utterances he repeats the blunder of the slave-holders in dealing with the ideas of the abolitionists. Nobody that we are aware of ever contended for such a theory of democracy. No man whose opinions are entitled to any respect regards it as either possible or desirable to bring men to the dead level of such an equality as he deprecates. What our fathers contended for and affirmed as a self-evident truth was the equality of men in their natural rights, leaving each perfectly free in the exercise and development of his peculiar gifts. They never dreamed that "a barren average and a weary uniformity" would result from giving them "a vote apiece," or that in counting them "by the head" they would be treated "like cattle." They believed, on the contrary, that the exercise of the right of self-government, instead of dragging them down, would lift them to a higher and higher level. Any permanent restriction of the right of suffrage, as we have shown, would have been a soleism in our politics, and a stumbling-block in the path of free representative government.

Mr. Parkman says "the history of the progress of mankind is the history of its leading minds," and that "the masses, left to themselves, are hardly capable of progress, except material progress, and even that imperfectly."

But its "leading minds," as Mr. Spencer so justly remarks, are the products of the communities in which they are born. They are the fruit of their social and race antecedents. To whatever extent Mr. Parkman may magnify their importance, or their power over the society to which they belong, to that same extent should he magnify that society for bringing them forth. If, as Mr. Spencer observes, social changes are traceable to individuals of unusual power, they are remotely traceable to the social causes which produced these individuals. Why should we honor the aristocracy of rarely endowed men, and disparage the democracy from which they spring?

"Through the long course of history," says Mr. Parkman, "a few men, to be counted by scores or by tens, have planted in the world the germs of a growth whose beneficent vitality has extended itself through all succeeding ages; and any one of these men outweighs in value to mankind myriads of nobles, citizens, and peasants, who have fought or toiled in their generation, and then rotted into oblivion." Is this true? How could a few gifted men have planted in the world the germs of a growth expanding into so beneficent a vitality, if there had been no soil in which it could take root? And why should these few men be regarded as outweighing in value the multitudes who "fought or toiled in their generation, and rotted into oblivion," but without whose kindred spirit and sympathetic cooperation nothing could have been achieved? "The highest man," Mr. Parkman says, "may comprehend the lowest, but the lowest can no more comprehend the highest than if he belonged to another order of being."

This seems to us a surprising statement. Did not the poor shepherds and fishermen of Galilee understand the words which fell from the lips of the Master? Would it have been possible to plant the seeds of reform in the world without kindred and receptive minds to welcome and nurture them? How could William the Silent have played the marvellous part among the rude people to which he belonged, which has made his name so illustrious in the annals of the race, if these people, through their kinship with their great leader, had not been able to catch something of the spirit which he flashed forth? How could Washington and his compatriots have succeeded in the grand struggle for independence, if their lofty spirit and purpose had been incommensurable to the people of the colonies?

"A single human mind," Mr. Parkman says, "may engender thoughts which the combined efforts of millions of lower intelligences cannot conceive." If this is true, how does it happen that the world has canonized its greatest men? "A single human mind may originate" a thought "which the combined effort of millions of lower intelligences" would be powerless to do; but the thought, when originated, may certainly be conceived by these millions, and appropriated as their common property. Indeed, the man of genius simply incarnates the thought of his age and country. He so invests it with body and form that the world claims it as its own, and honors him as its prophet. Like Shakespeare and Burns, he becomes the medium and interpreter of humanity by giving voice to its spirit, and thus making himself understood by "millions of lower intelligences." We have no objection to any measure of glory with which Mr. Parkman may wish to crown the great leaders of the race; but we protest against his doing this at the expense of the multitude, whose just share in the work of human progress should be recognized.

Mr. Parkman says "the success of an experiment of indiscriminate suffrage hangs on the question whether the better part of the community is able to outweigh the worse"; and this, he says, can only happen under rare and peculiar conditions. The difficulty, he thinks, is aggravated by the growth of "numbers, wealth, and luxury," and "by the fact, generally acknowledged by those most competent to judge of it, that intellectual development and high civilization are not favorable to fecundity; so that the unintelligent classes, except when in actual destitution, multiply faster than those above them," thus increasing the power of ignorance, "or rather the power of the knaves, who are always at hand to use it."

Here, again, Mr. Parkman is beguiled by what seems to us the singular tendency of his mind to look at the dismal side of the question he discusses. He has told us that "the history of the progress of mankind is the history of its leading minds"; but the fact is as undeniable as it is universally understood, that the great minds of the world have generally sprung from the lower ranks in life, where the work of "fecundity" is unchecked. Should "intellectual development and high civilization" continue to produce their alleged effects, we shall at least still be provided with leaders, whose power over their followers may as safely be assumed as disputed. Moreover, the assertion that "the power of ignorance" is increased by the declining "fecundity" of the higher classes begs the question. The unintelligent classes who are "not in a state of destitution" are quite as likely to breed a desirable progeny as the highly cultivated and civilized classes above them. Besides, the question in dispute relates to the United States, and the superior race which rules our civilization. Our government is not an Asiatic despotism like the Chinese, but quickened and invigorated by the living currents of modern progress. There is among us a natural tendency towards improved conditions, as there is in individual men; and we see no reason whatever for believing that the work of social evolution has spent its force, or that the race which now leads the world has fully accomplished its mission. The dependency of Mr. Parkman seems entirely inconsistent with the very idea of a philosophy of progress.

But let us put aside theories, and come to the test of actual facts. The question, be it remembered, is not whether a rude peasant or mechanic is capable of grasping great questions of national interest, and of manipulating the machinery of government, but whether the rank and file of our people are capable of responding to good leadership, and of generally choosing wisely between rival candidates for popular favor. "It is not necessary," says Mill, "that the many should in themselves be perfectly wise; it is sufficient if they be duly sensible of the value of superior wisdom." All that they can do, as Mr. Gladstone observes, is to choose their governors, and on select occasions bear directly on their action. Political judgments, he says, are not formed by intellectual qualifications alone, but in the moral sphere; and that, "in judging of the great questions of policy which appeal to the primal truths and laws of our nature, those classes may excel who, if they lack the opportunities, yet escape the subtle perils, of the wealthy state." In England, he says, "the popular judgment, when appealed to by the right arguments, responds to them far more freely and cordially than the judgment of what is called the higher classes"; and this is proved by undeniable facts. On the questions of cheap postage, the Irish Church, the toleration of trades-unions, the American civil war, the corn laws, the anti-slavery reform, the extension of the suffrage, and other issues which have stirred England during the last fifty years, it was the "propelling force" and "steam-power" of the masses which compelled the government to take the right side, in opposition to the wealth and culture of the kingdom. What the voter chiefly needs is common-sense and an honest purpose. His fitness for the ballot, as we have shown, is neither scientific nor literary, and the safety of trusting the masses has been as fully demonstrated in the United States as in England. In our late civil war our deliverance did not come through the wisdom of our rulers, or our great statesmen, who so often blundered through the entire struggle, but through the unconscious, unheralded rank and file, "the common people," whose integrity of character, solid sense, and well-ordered homes have given the Republic its name and place among the nations. "In each new threat of faction," says Emerson, "the ballot has been beyond expectation right and decisive. 'Tis ever an inspiration, God only knows whence; a sudden, undated perception of eternal right coming into and correcting things that were wrong; a perception that passes through thousands as readily as through one."

The fact is, the chief evils which now blacken our politics and dishearten sober and thinking men are far less the result of a debased suffrage than of a mercenary and corrupt leadership. Our army is in tolerable marching order, but too many of its captains have deserted their colors and accepted the position of suttlers and camp-followers, while we blame the rank and file for not keeping in line. One of the redeeming features of Mr. Parkman's article is the passage in which he says we must "teach the teacher." If our political leadership could be morally redeemed the whole face of our politics would be changed, and the wall of despair over the extension of the suffrage would be hushed. Every man who is at all acquainted with the history of politics knows the power of leaders to lift up and ennoble, or to drag down and degrade, communities and States. Mr. Parkman concedes this in saying that the history of the progress of mankind is the history of its leading minds. What the country now wants, above all things, is incorruptible and heroic men at the front; for in meeting the enemies of the Republic one of these can chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. If a single public rascal becomes the father of a multitude of private ones, a single brave and faithful public servant may redeem a State from misrule, and radically change the current of its life. It is not the fault of universal suffrage that offices are now sought as the chosen means of amassing wealth, and that corporations and capitalists manipulate the machinery of our politics. The restriction of the ballot would not have prevented the Credit Mobilier developments, or the election of United States Senators through bribery and corruption; nor is a debased suffrage to be made responsible for the heart-sickening facts which have been dragged to light within the past year connected with the last presidential election. The thorough reform of our civil service would sweep away nearly the whole brood of evils which have so dishonored the government at home and abroad within the last generation; and our party leaders, and not the masses, have made that service a disgusting system of political prostitution. The extension of the suffrage has had nothing to do with it. It was the pursuit of power for the sake of plunder that destroyed the French empire, and the same evil threatens our Republic with the same fate. If our one hundred thousand Federal offices are to be wrestled for by our great parties as the prize of victory, and distributed as the booty of the conqueror, the government is like a city alternately sacked and retaken, and an honest administration of its affairs becomes utterly impossible. The immediate and crying need of the hour, therefore, is the destruction, root and branch, of the whole system of spoils and plunder; and to this work we respectfully summon those who are wasting their time in lamentations over the failure of universal suffrage.

We are far from denying, however, the existence of a wide spread demoralization which has its roots in a soil beneath our politics. We have admitted this, and set it forth in many of its startling details, in a recent article on "The Pending Ordeals of Democracy," which has appeared in the pages of this Review.* The cry of alarm which Mr. Parkman has sounded is most timely; and if he had not traced the dangers which threaten us to a mistaken source, the task we have undertaken would have been unnecessary. What is the source of these dangers? A partial and very brief answer to this question is all that our space will permit us to attempt.

And first, we mention the gradual and increasing relaxation of household training. We believe the great moralities of life are not inculcated and insisted on in the family as they were a generation ago. The family is the peculiar institution of our race, and nations are prosperous and strong in the degree in which it is cherished. All that is best in our civilization and most precious in the idea of country is embodied in the home. The lessons received in the formative period of our lives are by far the most important part of our education, and their influence is manifested in after years in every phase of society and life. Government itself would be substantially superseded by the perfection of the home. The family is the foundation of the State; and just in proportion as its blessings are alighted and its sacred obligations disregarded must the superstructure itself be endangered. If we desire to make good citizens, the virtues of veracity, integrity, and sincerity must be studiously cherished in the household. We believe our jails and penitentiaries are largely populated through the decay of that wise and beneficent guardianship which is constantly demanded in childhood, and that a large share of the political vices and profligacies which now overshadow the land with their poisonous luxuriance would have been impossible if the fireside virtues had not been lamentably neglected.

In the second place, we believe the political evils of our time are due, in part, to defects in our system of education. In one of his lay sermons Professor Huxley says, in effect, that a liberal English education consists in teaching the scholar the knowledge which he least needs, and omitting to teach that which he needs most. He would have less time consumed in the study of ancient languages, and more devoted to branches of knowledge bearing directly upon the practical interests of life. Among these he mentions the science of government, the principles of political economy, and morality. Political education is certainly a matter of the first importance in a government in which the people are their own rulers; and yet the course of study in our schools and colleges furnishes no more preparation for the duties of citizenship than would be proper under a despotism. Who does not see that the demagogism of which Mr. Parkman complains would have been very greatly discounted if the elements of political economy, and particularly of financial knowledge, had been taught in our common schools? The ethics of politics, especially, should be taught; and the principles of morality should be made a regular branch of study. That the duties of life should be handed over to the Church and the home, instead of taking their rank among the indispensable studies in a sound course of education, seems to us a very curious anomaly, and to furnish some explanation of the immoralities of our politics. As we have already shown, the mere training of the intellect has no connection whatever with the discipline of the conscience. To educate the mind of a child and leave his moral nature to shift for itself has been aptly likened to the wisdom of requiring him to practice the use of a knife, fork, and spoon without giving him a particle of meat. Can we hope to cure the vices of our politics without a radical reform in our educational methods?

Again, we venture to express the opinion that the Church has been a pretty formidable factor in the work of bringing upon the country our political troubles. It seems to have sunk to the level of our politics, and to tolerate if it does not approve the general decline of political morality. As a moral power in society, it is evidently in a state of decay. The house of worship is too often a place of social entertainment for respectable people, instead of a sanctuary for pious offerings and penitential experience. The boundary-line between spiritual and temporal things, once so well-defined, is rapidly fading away. Church-membership is no longer a test of real Christian character, and is quite as likely to be regarded as a sign of worldly prudence. The creeds which were once understood to express the awful verities of spiritual life and death are now scarcely half believed, and the belief of them is not generally required as a condition of membership. The earnestness and fervor of Orthodoxy in the days of its power have departed, and a dead formalism is threatening to take their place. There is not only a lack of profound religious sincerity, but of that moral earnestness which takes hold of the affairs of this world and steadily labors for their improvement. Too much of the popular religion is commonplace and cowardly, and as a remedy for our social and political disorders is a sad failure. We believe there is as great a lack of brave and heroic leadership in the spiritual as in the political world, and that if this were not so our politics would have been better and purer. The old Abolitionists used to annoy religious people by frequently quoting the saying of Albert Barnes, that there was no power outside of the Church that could sustain slavery an hour if it were not sustained in it; and we believe, in like manner, that the political corruption which has held high carnival in our country for so many years would not have been possible, if the Church had been faithful to its high mission as a moral instructor and guide. It has, to say the least, winked at the evils it should have sternly rebuked; and when great party leaders and political magnates have insulted decency by vices and profligacies as shameless as they were well-known, it has too often given them its friendly recognition instead of branding them with its displeasure.

Finally, we trace a considerable share of our current political evils to the recreancy of the better sort of men of all political parties, and inside and out of all the churches. They have contented themselves with looking on and deploring the disorders of the times, instead of bravely grappling with them. We are assured that in the election in New York a few years ago which resulted in the overthrow of the Tammany Ring, men marched up to the polls who had not voted for forty years. Instead of going into the primaries, and showing that interest in public affairs which the situation demanded of every good citizen, they wrapped themselves in the mantle of their own political righteousness, and quietly looked after the concerns of their private affairs till a desperate necessity finally compelled them to act. Instead of confronting the mob of hungry rogues and vulgar politicians who at last captured the city, they became themselves a mob, by disowning the plain and imperative duties which the government imposed upon them as the price of its protection. We refer to this fact as a single illustration. The blessings of good government, like all other good things, can only be had by paying their price. Political duties are quite as binding on the citizen of a free State as the duty of speaking the truth or paying his honest debts. If "the scholar in politics" and the declaimer against our fearful political debauchment will place their shoulders to the wheel, and bear witness to their interest in the work of reform by doing their share of the hard and disagreeable work which may be found necessary to accomplish it, they will earn a better right to moralize about the mischiefs of a brutalized suffrage, and feel less inclined to take refuge in doing it. If we would win the victory of political purification, we must fight for it. We are absolutely shut up to this necessity. In theory, ours is a government of the people; and if it is not so in fact, it is the people's fault. Notwithstanding the evils of which we complain, nobody proposes to call in a king and institute an order of nobility. No one would think it wise to jump out of the frying-pan of our democracy, had as it is, into the fire of any form of despotic or aristocratic rule; and the duty of making the very best of our condition and opportunities is thus placed at the door of every man who would save our democratic inheritance or make sure of his own political birthright.—International Review, January, 1879.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

ÆTHETIC SENTIMENTS OF PRIMITIVE MAN.

BY WILEY BRITTON.

No. V.

Thus far we have referred only to the æsthetic sense of primitive man as shown in the appreciation of form and finish exhibited by the stone or flint weapons and implements which, for untold generations, he used to the best of his ability in adjusting his life to environing conditions. At a very early period of fashioning either bone, wood, or stone into weapons, tools, and implements, it is probable that some rude attempts were made at ornamentation. It would be strange indeed if a savage whose life was passed wholly among the woods and waters did not occasionally meet with an inanimate object, such as a stone or a stick, having such shape or bearing such marks as to suggest to his mind a resemblance to some animal with which he was familiar. Among ourselves, perhaps almost every one has had his attention called to some inanimate object in its natural state possessing such outlines or marks as to unmistakably resemble some living thing. Nature sometimes, without any assistance from man, produces very remarkable likenesses of animate and inanimate objects, such, for instance, as the lines of the agate taking the forms resembling natural objects. Now as animal-formed stones have been produced from the earliest geologic ages by the agencies of frosts, rains, running waters, glaciers, etc., and as other animal-like objects have existed as anciently as the human race, it is clear that primitive man was not required to exercise much inventive skill to give his war-club, or most primitive hunting-weapon, certain animal-like characteristics. From the earliest period at which stone or flint was utilized for cutting purposes, it is probable, if our ethnological collections of the relics of primitive man were anything like complete, they would show traces of ornamentation of such weapons and domestic implements as he used. Whether we are able to trace the genesis of ornamentation of primitive weapons and implements or not, we know that it has existed along with very early indications of their manufacture and use by the hands of primitive man. We can know very little about to what extent it was in use, for the reason that these weapons and implements, or parts of same, which have best resisted the disintegrating agencies of time have been those which we should least expect to be ornamented. For instance, we should hardly expect to find the spear or lance-heads and arrow-points chipped from flint with ornamental etchings or markings, for the reason that such work would presuppose tools of such perfection as we cannot easily believe it possible to have been made from stone or flint in primitive ages. The shafts and other parts in connection with which these weapon-points were used probably often bore ornamental markings and rude outline figures, judging from the ornamentation of these parts found in the ethnological collection of the lower human races of historical times. But with the greater specialization of individual functions and the increased differentiation of social functions, there would of course arise a greater number of instances in which stone was used for domestic and ornamental purposes. And it is upon these domestic tools and implements, and ornaments used in decorating his person, that we find the most abundant evidence displaying the taste of primitive man in ornamentation. It should also be observed that his conceptions of beauty as thus displayed generally show a marked correspondence with the rudeness or implied age of the weapon, tool, or implement ornamented. This we ought to expect to find among the relics of any race that has advanced from a palæolithic to a neolithic condition. Though the thoughts of primitive man flowed in feeble currents and were exceedingly simple as contrasted with the thoughts of civilized man, yet his sense of the beautiful appears to have been as active in proportion to his general intelligence as the æsthetic sense of men of civilized races of modern times. It is very evident, as shown by the relics in the cabinets of our ethnological museums, that the most elegant designs and most skilled workmanship in ornamental art, in primitive times as now, aroused stronger emotions of beauty than inferior designs and workmanship. Among the earliest specimens of tools, implements, and weapons ornamented with rude outlines of animals and natural objects, it rarely occurs that the figures represent the animals with such attitudes and expressions as to make them appear conscious of each other's presence or proximity, or as having any definite relations to each other and to surrounding objects and things. But suppose the figures to be made with greater truthfulness to Nature, and to represent what the animals are doing and the expressions of their feelings, as, for instance, of one frightened and fleeing from another that preys upon its species, and we cannot doubt but that the tool, implement, or weapon thus ornamented would be more attractive than if ornamented with figures of the same animals, expressionless and showing no definite relations to each other and to surrounding things. During the age of the cave-dwellers of France and other parts of Europe, figures of the long-maned, crisp-haired mammoth, reindeer, and other animals of quaternary times with which man was contemporary in Europe, were cut upon the ivory, horns, and bones of these animals with much elegance and skill, thus showing that the art of drawing among this primitive people had attained a high degree of perfection. The animals as represented on batons or on pen-lard-handles for example, by their attitudes and expressions show that they stand in definite and conscious relations to each other, thus giving life and meaning to the figures. Scenes representing combats of reindeers, and animals flying before man, found engraved upon ivory plates and upon tools, implements, and weapons of the cave-dwellers, may be mentioned as illustrations. And these scenes I think strongly indicate the skill of the artists, whose lives were perhaps devoted to this special kind of work, and a division of labor, which implies barter or exchange of industrial and art-products, and a quite complex social arrangement.

Paint-bowls or mortars and the paint found in the graves of different races of primitive man prove that colors were recognized and used by them for purposes of ornamentation and decoration. Whether or not colors were thus used before burial of their dead was practiced by primitive races, we are not in a position to decide with certainty. It seems possible, and I believe probable, that paint may have been used for personal ornamentation even before flint or stone weapons, tools, and implements of the rudest kind came into use. In localities where vegetal or mineral paints existed, accident might discover their most elementary use to the savage; and then after learning the particular vegetal or mineral producing a paint of a given color, he would likely gradually use it in a more and more varied manner, until it came to be regarded by him as indispensable for purposes of ornamentation. A few marks, even without any particular order, made with a brilliant-colored paint upon his face and body, would give a savage a very different aspect from his usual appearance, and no doubt make him more attractive in the eyes of his fellows, if they had never before seen any one else ornamented in a similar manner. And the practice of ornamenting the person with paint of showy colors, once commenced in a tribe or community, would, if the love of display was as strong in this primitive tribe or community as among existing uncivilized races, soon become general with all its members.

Thus we have presented here a period in the history of our ancestors when a few strokes of paint over their bodies constituted their highest ideal of personal adornment, and perhaps excited in them emotions similar to the emotions which a fashionable dress-suit excites in most among ourselves. More than this is true. Out of this primitive method of improving the personal appearance has grown, by imperceptible steps, all the elaborate modes of dress and decoration which have been adopted by all civilized and semi-civilized races upon the earth. The law of the multiplication of effects, which Mr. Herbert Spencer in his First Principles has been the first to recognize and develop, is well illustrated in the discovery and use of paint by primitive man. As we have already observed, the different deposits of the upper tertiary and quaternary periods prove beyond doubt that the oldest implements and weapons found are the rudest in workmanship and design. These facts introduce us to a course of reasoning which, if logically followed out, takes us back to a period in human history when man did not use stone or flint implements and weapons unless in their natural state; that is, without any fashioning or shaping by his hands. We have here, then, a condition of life in which the members of a primitive community did not differ in a marked degree from each other in personal appearance, in the manner of gaining their living, or in their thoughts and feelings generally; for there was as yet no weapon or implement manufacturer, no division of labor, and no exchange of industrial products of any kind. Now a few strokes of a bright-colored paint upon the dusky body of a member of this primitive society would, we cannot reasonably doubt, excite in the minds of his companions ideas of contrast or difference, and perhaps also thoughts of the cause producing this change in his personal appearance. A knowledge, too, of the vegetables and minerals in the locality, yielding paints of given colors, would then follow. And the discovery of paints of different colors would have a tendency to develop a nascent taste for lights and shades and combinations of colors; and the variety or multiplicity of tastes would be limited only by the number of individuals in the community. With the multiplication and improvement of weapons and implements, and with the discovery of the economical uses of fire, paint would gradually be applied to other uses than for personal adornment, but still in some manner intended to satisfy the requirements of the æsthetic sense. Thus it is quite evident that the introduction of the use of paint tended to shape the thoughts and actions of primitive man to a course different from what they would have followed in the absence of its discovery. Ethnological researches furnish very good reasons for believing that the appreciation of beautiful colors by primitive man may have been even much earlier than the discovery of the colors yielded by certain vegetable and mineral productions in his habitat. Stones, shells, and pearls of pure and variegated colors are found in most sedimentary strata from early geological ages, and were probably the first objects to excite his sense of appreciation of colors. May not, then, the genesis of personal decoration, or the wearing of ornaments, be traced back to this period when such bright-colored objects first attracted the attention of primitive men? An affirmative reply, it seems, is an unavoidable corollary, in the light of such facts as we possess. The shell-heaps or mounds found along rivers and sea-coasts in so many parts of the world, intermingled with objects of primitive human industry, are unquestionable evidences that primitive men once made their repasts of the fresh-water or marine mollusks to which these shells belonged. In some countries these shell mounds have been shown, after careful investigation, to be of great antiquity, the races leaving them as evidences of their feasts having existed at a period cotemporary with the woolly rhinoceros, mammoth, cave-bear, tiger, etc. The love of display, and personal vanity or egotism, appear to be characteristics of the human race in every stage of its development. It is not, therefore, easy to believe that a race could subsist for many generations upon fresh water or marine mollusks without being impressed with the contrasts in brightness of colors in their shells, nor without preserving as ornaments shells regarded as most attractive. No matter at how early a period shells, pearls, and precious stones may have been prized by our ancestors on account of their colors, they would of course be but little used as ornaments in decoration until some progress was made in the manufacture of cutting tools and instruments. But along with the development of cutting tools and instruments, we have unmistakable evidence that bright-colored shells, etc., were worked into ornaments for personal decoration. In most cases perhaps, where any considerable number of relics have been found in the caves and grottoes inhabited by primitive men, shell ornaments have formed a part of the collections. Again, shells of peculiar kinds found among the relics of the cave-dwellers, hundreds of miles from the waters in which they flourished, indicate that they were so much prized as to form an article of commerce. In this country, too, marine shells have been found nearly a thousand miles in the interior, mingled with relics of the American aborigines, thus proving that they must have been regarded as objects of rare value in an æsthetic point of view. Though the most ancient relics of the American Indians, or even of the Mound Builders, may not be of as great antiquity as the relics of the prehistoric races of Europe, yet they are fully as rude in workmanship and design. These shell ornaments, used in personal decoration, not only show that primitive man appreciated rich colors, but they in many cases also display his skill and taste in workmanship and design, and the progress he had made in the use of industrial tools and appliances. They throw some light, too, on the habits and modes of life of the races by whom they were left; as, for instance, whether the people lived by hunting or fishing, were nomadic or occupied permanently a given locality. It may be well to observe here also that the tastes exhibited by primitive men in ornamentation have in many respects reflected the peculiar characteristics of their environments. For instance, a tribe whose members lived principally by fishing would be apt to wear shell ornaments, while a tribe whose members lived by following the chase would be apt to wear mostly as ornaments the claws and teeth of the wild animals which they hunted for game. And as they made some progress in carving figures in intaglio upon their ornaments, the artists of one tribe would make figures of fish, while the artists of the other tribe would make figures representing animals with which they were familiar. Hence it seems clear that man's æsthetic development must always depend upon the physical aspects of his environment and the coexistences and sequences in it.

Whether a fine landscape view, a murmuring brook, or a piece of grand natural scenery of any kind aroused emotions of delight strong enough to make appreciable changes in the expression of the savage of primitive times, we have not sufficient data to enable us to speak with certainty. There are some reasons for believing, however, that he was not wholly insensible to the contrasts of the more prominent features of his physical environment; but of course it is not supposed that he had as keen an appreciation of these contrasts as the cultured of the civilized races. The number of relics generally found in the vicinity of cascades, natural falls, natural bridges or arches, indicates that primitive men admired these works of Nature in the same manner that we do. Probably the features of a given locality, as a beautiful river-shore or a lovely landscape-view, that contrasted strongly with surrounding physical conditions, were also attractive to their eyes. Hillocks, too, with gently-sloping sides, covered with beautiful groves, were unquestionably, I think, more admired and more pleasing to their sight than rocky wastes clothed with ragged and scrubby vegetation. That these groves did not escape the notice of primitive men appears evident from the fact that, according to the oldest traditions of uncivilized races of the historical period, they were used as places of council or assembly for the discussion of tribal questions. If, then, the various contrasts of smoothness and roughness, of regular and irregular outlines of the hills and mountains amidst which they lived were observed, we have to go only a step further to suppose that the brilliant and variegated hues of the autumn landscape were also observed and admired. Such natural phenomena, too, as rainbows, clouds tinged or gilded with different colors, and golden sunsets under favorable conditions doubtless also aroused emotions of delight. If we have not thus overestimated the æsthetic sentiments of primitive man, may we not safely conclude that the flowers of each recurring spring did not, in the early history of our race, bloom and fade unobserved and unappreciated. Offerings of flowers to the manes of the dead have been practised as anciently perhaps as the practice of sepulture itself. Of course it is not supposed in any of the above cases that the objects or phenomena regarded as beautiful aroused in primitive men anything like as definite and as complex emotions as among ourselves.

A PLEA FOR FAIR PLAY.

God has so made us (for which his name be praised!) that we cannot bear to see even a mangy dog ill-treated by his kind; and much more does our indignation wax hot when we see a man skilled in controversial art, having the public ear, and attended wherever he goes by crowds of people ready to accept for truth his every word, however colored by ignorance, prejudice, or passion, pursuing with undeserved and stinging invective, and branding with opprobrious epithets, men and women of noble aims, exalted aspirations, and pure lives, merely because their views upon some important public question differ from his own. It is as natural for us to spring to the defence of men thus maligned and evil-entreated as to interpose for the protection of a child harried by a ruffian. It makes no difference, as it ought to make none, whether we share the opinions of the men thus assailed or not, nor even whether they are our friends or our enemies. They are the children of God and our brothers, and the Golden Rule of the blessed Christ binds us to do unto them whatsoever we would that they should do unto us.

It is, therefore, from a sense of duty that we utter our word of indignant protest against certain statements made by the "Boston lecturer," at Association Hall, in New York, on the 18th inst. In the prelude of his lecture on that occasion he spoke of "Infidelity and the Public Malls,"—in other words, upon "obscene literature" and the means adopted for its suppression. And here let us say that we sympathize with Mr. Cook and all other decent people in their abhorrence of such literature, and in their desire to see it stamped out by the unrelenting power of law. Not even the dialectical skill of Mr. Cook is able to paint too darkly the loathsomeness of that literature, and the moral debasement of the men engaged in its manufacture and circulation. There ought to be a union, not of Christians alone, but of all right-minded people, to suppress obscenity in every form, to protect the youth of the country from contamination, and to bring all "moral cancer-plasters" to justice. In his every honest effort to intensify the popular hostility to obscene literature, Mr. Cook has our fullest, heartiest sympathy. But when, either ignorantly or wilfully, in defiance of truth, he arraigns as conspirators against purity and decency men and women as pure as himself, and whose abhorrence of everything that is obscene is as deep as his own, he should be reminded of the words of the Apostle James: "If any man among you seem to be religious, and brideth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." Christianity, be it remembered, grants no indulgence for lying, even about men whom it adjudges to be infidels. Of this sort of lying every one familiar with ecclesiastical history knows there has been a vast deal in the centuries gone by, and he needs only to keep his eyes open and his heart sweet to perceive that it defiles much of the religious controversy of the present day. There is a certain class of controversialists, ever foremost to speak in the name of Christianity, who appear to be no more under a sense of obligation to deal fairly and honestly with sceptics than they would be with so many rats infesting a human dwelling. Assuming that all scepticism is the result of dishonesty or vice, they apparently regard the sceptic himself as fair game for every type of scornful invective. How many honest seekers for truth, greeted thus with stones when they asked for bread, or menaced with a club by some ecclesiastical bully for daring to question the truth of some man-invented dogma, have been needlessly and wickedly repelled from the Christian fold, who can say?

In regard to Mr. Cook we must be more specific. Let us say, then, that on the occasion referred to, as we find him reported in the New York Tribune, he assumed that any opposition to the United States law prohibiting the circulation of obscene literature through the mails must necessarily proceed from a desire to give immunity to the producers and dispensers of such literature; whereas, many if not all of those who make such opposition declare that they are in favor of the most stringent State laws for the suppression of obscenity in every form, and ask for the repeal of the national law, either upon Constitutional grounds or because it is liable to be perverted in such a way as to interfere with the legitimate freedom of the press. Even Robert G. Ingersoll, whose name appeared at the head of the petition to Congress for the repeal of what is sometimes called "the Comstock law," says expressly: "I wish all the [State] laws against obscenity rigidly enforced. From the bottom of my heart I despise the publishers of obscene literature. Below them there is no depth of filth." But Mr. Ingersoll, in common with thousands of Christian men, thinks the espionage of the mails which the law of Congress invites or permits is dangerous to public liberty, and therefore he favors repeal. We do not say that such men are right in their view of this matter; but we do affirm, in the name of the Christianity that scorns a lie, that the man who arraigns them before a public assembly is bound to state clearly and fairly the reasons which they themselves give for their action in the premises. To conceal those reasons from a public audience, and then to attribute the action of the accused to motives which they disavow and abhor, is an act of wickedness which should make every Christian's cheek hot with righteous indignation.

Furthermore, Mr. Cook, with every means of accurate information at hand, treats as identical in organization as well as in principle and purpose two associations as distinct and as different from each other as are the American Board of Foreign Missions and the Republican party. The "Free Religious Association" is nearly twelve years old. Its objects, as defined in its constitution, are: "To promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership." The founders of this Association are men and women conspicuous for every virtue that can adorn the human character, and they made costly sacrifices in the cause of morality and purity long before that blazing comet, the "Boston Lectureship," shed its lurid light upon the modern world. The Association has not been wholly without the sympathy of Orthodox men who appreciated its catholic aims, and were willing to speak their word upon its platform. Its proceedings and the public addresses of its members are of record, and may be examined by whosoever pleases to do so. There is in them certainly much from which every Orthodox Christian must earnestly dissent, and which would furnish Mr. Cook with texts for many a learned discourse; but in them all, there is not one word or sentiment that could bring a blush to the cheek of Modesty herself. The law of Congress against obscene publications was never so much as alluded to in its meetings, and we do not believe there is among its members a single person whose abhorrence of such publications is a whit less keen than that of Mr. Cook himself. Among the officers of this society at this moment are Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Octavius B. Frothingham, Lydia Maria Child, George William Curtis, Prof. E. L. Youmans (Editor Scientific Monthly), and Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Mr. Cook does not indeed denounce these persons by name, but when he speaks of the Free Religious Association as involved in "a scheme for the immoral use of the mails," he must necessarily be understood to include its officers before all others. Is this Mr. Joseph Cook a descendant of Shimei of old, that he should go about the country venting curses upon men and women whose names are synonymous with honor and purity?

Another association, formed eight years later, for entirely different purposes, and with for the most part a different constituency, is known as "The National Liberal League." The secularization of the National and State governments is its chief and almost exclusive object. This association was divided at its last meeting upon the question of seeking the repeal of the law forbidding the circulation of obscene publications through the mails, the majority taking the affirmative, the minority seceding on that account and forming another society. The controversy between these parties is very bitter. The latter certainly are in favor of maintaining the law, though desiring its amendment to avoid abuses; and there is nothing in the recorded action of the former that implies any sympathy with obscenity; indeed, such sympathy is vehemently denied by the principal leaders of the party. It is not our object either to accuse or defend them here. But what we protest against as an act of scandalous injustice—an outrage, indeed, upon every principle of decency—is the lumping of these two associations together by Mr. Cook under a name which neither of them recognizes, viz.: "The National League of Free Religiousists," and then proceeding to hold them and their members indiscriminately up to public scorn as "national lepers and moral cancer-plankers." He does this, indeed, while scornfully confessing his knowledge that there are two associations, and he illustrates his contempt for any distinction that may be set up between them by citing the Arabian legend that when the rats were taxed, the bat said, "I am a bird;" and when the birds were taxed, the bat said, "I am a rat." In other words, the associations are both of a piece, each seeking to deny its identity and conceal its true objects!

If Mr. Cook imagines that he can promote the cause of evangelical Christianity and earn an enviable reputation among enlightened and honorable men by holding up to public scorn as "moral cancer-plankers," for whose necks "old fashioned millstones" should be provided, such persons as Ralph Waldo Emerson, T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, George William Curtis, Lydia Maria Child, O. B. Frothingham, and Minot J. Savage, he is destined sooner or later to a rude awakening. There is in the hearts of the American people a love of fair-play, to say nothing of a regard for the decencies of public speech, that may insist upon another and a juster use for at least one of those millstones for which the "Boston Lectureship" cries aloud. Mr. Cook should remember the use finally made of the gallows which Haman erected for Mordecai, and learn to bridle his tongue before it is too late.

It is a shame that it should be left to a suburban paper like this to utter the first protest against Mr. Cook's indecent assault upon men and women who, whatever may be their religious heresies, are among the purest and noblest in all the land. The religious press particularly, for its own sake and for the honor of the Christian cause, should have been swift to condemn such detraction. The theology of the free religionists is a legitimate topic of debate, and may be fairly assailed by all the weapons in the Christian armory; but when the war against false doctrine degenerates into an assault upon character, and the weapons used are those forged in the regions of "outer darkness," it is time for every one who loves God and reveres Christ to cry shame!—Oliver Johnson (editor), in the Orange, New Jersey, Journal, Jan. 25.

MR. JOSEPH COOK.

Mr. Joseph Cook is disappointing. He took on himself in public not long ago a contract to demolish Huxley, Darwin, Mill, Proctor, Tyndall, and the rest. "After Death, What?" "Life or Mechanism, Which?" and kindred conundrums were the titles of his resounding discourses,—resounding because, when they sounded once, he sounded them over again, and thus they were resounded.

These lectures were mixtures of text-book physiology, text-book chemistry, text-book physics, and text-book "microscopy," and the whole was garnished with the Bostonese language of Mr. Cook, which was a mixture of the dogmatism of Emerson without his genius, and the circumlocution of Everett without his shading. The lectures did no harm and some good. They brought before many who had never read science text-books the rudiments of the important matters they consider. They presented the spectacle of a clergyman who had not undertaken to answer science with theology, and who had given a little study to physics and cognate subjects. They made men and women who were apprehensive that the foundations of revelations were giving way aware that something could be said on the other side, and thus they reassured them. They did more: they let it be seen that the way to meet the scientists was not to read the riot act against them or call them hard names from behind the thin barriers of a Friday-night prayer-meeting, but to rate them as valuable explorers of God's universe of fact, and to claim every one of their real discoveries as an asset of truth, with which nothing else that was true would anywhere interfere, as truth matches all round, and as nothing else than truth does.

All of this good wrought by these lectures was not designed by Mr. Cook. He apparently (and we say this deliberately) designed to set himself up in science as an authority, though not a scientist,—the same as Messrs. Huxley, Tyndall, and Darwin might design to set themselves up in theology as authorities, though not theologians. Moreover, Mr. Cook apparently lectured on physics and natural philosophy to show incidentally what a many-sided man he was. He announced his scientific half statements as the final word science had to speak, and ignored the fact that the scientist is evermore the disciple, always a learner, ready to-morrow to give up the conclusions of a life-time if he finds they are wrong, a pupil and only a pupil in the school of things and forces as they are.

Soon after Mr. Cook had made an end of his appearances as the "boss" of science, he appeared as the infallible statesman and politician. He told what "ultimate America" should be, and what, by virtue of his orders, it certainly would be. About this time, the suspicion began to grow on men's minds that Mr. Cook was after all only a lecturer, a man who meant to make money on the platform, by presenting people with his opinions on things at so much a head. This suspicion has been confirmed by his last rôle. He has come out as the moralist and reformer, and he is embarking in the cheap business of abusing whatever is wrong or faulty, and prescribing wholesale and peremptorily for all our ills of politics, trade, literature, and recreation. There could be no objection to this sort of thing if Mr. Cook would come out frankly and say: "I am in need of an income. I am a lecturer by profession. I claim to be neither more nor less than that. My opinions are my own, and I propose to present them to those who want to hear them at half a dollar a head." This would be as frank as the tickets of another lecturer which read: "Lecture on Fools: Admit One."

But Mr. Cook does not do this. Instead of standing alone he surrounds himself with a bevy of clergy. He lets it be understood that he appears under their auspices and as their monitor and principal. He makes them go bail for him in their official capacity. He causes them to open his exercises with prayer. He makes his every essay at money-getting a religious occasion. After prayer hymns are sung, and then there is another season of devotion and sacred song. After this, from the pulpit, Mr. Cook delivers his message, to which he has given every antecedent of a religious kind possible, while the pastors and teachers surround him, and make the lay men and lay women below receive as gospel what is only a secular discourse, flippant in its tone, gauzy in its texture, trivial in its subject-matter, and fired at the ears of listeners with an oracular manner of the most Boanerges kind.

We find that in what he says Mr. Cook unhesitatingly libels large and respectable classes of American citizens; that he toolies to the men and newspapers whose mental pabulum is mush and mendacity, the men indulging them, as they say, in the name of the Lord, and the papers in the name of the "best classes" aforesaid; we find that Mr. Cook loudly sums up events which scrupulous persons regard as undecided, and that he deals with the reputation of public men of both parties in a way which no gentlemanly mind would indorse; we find that Mr. Cook misstates the plainest facts of the time in a way which would not impose on the better information than his own of a company of day laborers; we find that what Mr. Cook calls his opinions are shallow, one-sided, and veined with the evidences of a nature that is coarse, of a habit that is bullying, and of a conceit that is immeasurable.

To all of this we object with good cause. We have a right to insist that Mr. Cook shall not press the evangelical clergy of a locality into his service, as indorsers of inaccuracies and lampoons which those clergy have too much respect for their character and pew-rents to indulge in themselves. We have a right to insist that the clergy cease from being made use of by this Mr. Cook in that way. We have a right to insist that when he lectures in fact he shall lecture in form, that he dispense with the prayers and hymns, and stand out to talk man-fashion and amid surrounding which will make it legitimate to hiss him when he spouts ignorance and slander. Let him come out in the open, on the platform, and not put himself within the fort of a church, behind the breastwork of a pulpit, and carry along with him a crowd of non-combatants, in the form of ministers, as his own security from being made to meet his own words. Till he does this, it is perfectly legitimate to call his conduct canting and cowardly, and to reckon him more of a humbug than anything else, who gets off much loud-spoken charlatanism without taking the chances of the other platform charlatans who do not run into churches, nor flank themselves with dominies, nor go through a prelude of alleged prayer and praise before they try to earn their money.—Albany Argus, Jan. 26.

HANS ANDERSEN'S MOTHER.—Her letters would have delighted the heart of Balzac, so idiomatic are they, so racy, and so full of personal traits of character. She dictates advice to her son, not only in a spirit of affectionate concern, but with extraordinary acuteness and worldly wisdom. Her style is rude and colloquial, but in the total absence of effort or parade she hits upon phrases of the happiest brevity. Andersen has been gliding rather too rapidly over a variety of subjects. "Think out each point by itself," she says, "and don't gallop." The characteristic vanity of her son and his habit of introspection vex her, and she writes, like an inglorious Montaigne, "Study men, and don't think too much about your own little I." He announces his desire to write for the stage, and the untaught old woman, in her little provincial town, suggests, with almost startling good-sense, that, for her part, she should think that if he wants to write plays he ought to save up his money and go as often as possible to the comedy, to acquaint himself with the ways of the theatre. In short, she proves herself, in shrewdness, wit, and sense, worthy to be the parent of a great writer, and she must in future take her place among the typical mothers of eminent men. Her later letters are not without a sad, querulous tone; poverty is pressing her very hard indeed, old age creeps upon her, and her son, flourishing in the capital, seems to become distant and out of sympathy with her. She complains of his neglect, of his silence; and sometimes her pain finds voice in such admonitions as "For God's sake, don't let pride rule in your young heart, but think often of your mourning mother." He writes to ask if she has read his new book, and she replies, with some dignity, that she has no money to buy it with, and that she cannot borrow it; whereupon it seems to occur to him, rather late in the day, to send her a copy. She marks on her almanac the day when his comedy is to be acted for the first time, and trembles with apprehension as the hour approaches. He has only to write to her to keep her in good spirits, and on the whole he is kind and dutiful, but there are lapses which she is not slow to condemn. She thinks it specially hard-hearted of him not to be moved by the death of a Miss Lotterup, who, she seems to hint, was an old flame of Hans Christian's. But he was struggling with fame and with the muses, and had no time to shed the elegiac tear. The whole circle at Odense shook their heads, it is evident, over their ugly duckling at Copenhagen.—Saturday Review.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 1.

N. B. Guernsey, $3; M. A. Shepard, $3; Jno. H. Lull, $13.20; Jos. T. White, $3; J. Maxson, $1.50; W. F. Neal, $1; D. A. Wilder, $1; W. C. Fisk, $4.20; S. F. Andrews, $4; Leonard Chandler, $4; C. K. Matthews, $4.40; Mrs. J. S. Edgerly, $3.20; Wm. Filene, $3.20; Dr. H. K. Oliver, $4.40; L. Kent, $1.50; James Harris, 54 cents; Alex. E. Nichols, $4.50; D. B. Morey, $3.95; Laura Barnaby, $3.20; G. W. Robinson, $3; Dan'l E. Griswold, $1.10; Chas. Risk, $4.70; J. C. Godfrey, $3; John Hiett, $4.50; E. C. Thomas, $1.50; Gen. R. C. Bradshaw, $30; Dr. S. B. Green, $3.20; R. O. Mitchell, $2.87; C. O. Durkee, $1.75; E. L. Squires, $3; A. Blum, $3; Wm. Barnsdall, $5; Hattie M. Tuttle, $1.50; Dr. S. B. Adams, $1.50; Jonathan Strone, $1.50; Lembart Bigelow, $1.50; T. Cunningham, $2.75; Dr. E. Wigglesworth, $3; Mrs. W. D. Gunning, 35 cents; Horace Watson, $2; Miss J. F. Titcomb, $3.20; B. Greene, $4; Mrs. C. B. Serrill, $3.20; C. F. Woods, $3; J. T. Sunderland, $1.50; Wm. J. Worden, $3.20; Dr. G. F. Matthes, $3; Miss Arctusa Hall, $6.40.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEB. 6, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON Office, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Art icles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. GERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLTOAK (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIAB WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

A WORD to our Boston subscribers: If any one of you has a job to do about your house or store, no matter what, send a post-card to Francis Connor, 4 Milton Street, Boston, and ask him to do it. We will guarantee his faithful, capable, honest performance of any ordinary work; and we will personally thank you in advance for helping a most worthy young man to earn bread for his invalid wife and himself. Do not forget the address.

A FRIEND encloses this piteous advertisement from a New York paper: "I am a Christian lady, left in great need by the death of my husband. Christians respond so very readily to the temperance cause, I hope there are some who will respond to a Christian lady's wants. I have written to many Christians in reference to their helping me get work, receiving not one single reply. If there is no Christian willing to help me, I feel sure some heathen will. A needy case. WIDOW, 187 Elm Street." We sincerely hope that some one of our good "heathen" subscribers in New York city will be moved to do for this poor widow what her fellow-Christians will not—find her some employment by which she may earn her daily bread.

THESE KIND WORDS from a subscriber in St. Paul, Minnesota, were received in the spirit which sent them: "I cannot refrain from saying a word of sympathy for the cause you work for, and for you. This, I know, goes not far in a practical world like ours; but it is all I have to send, and a similarity in our experiences enables me to say it heartily. Your patience must be sorely tried. You must be tired in being compelled to say and re-say the same things so often to the repeaters. . . . I am not sorry for the split. Dissensions must come, as they always have come, so long as there is anything bad to dissent from." There is a world of wisdom in these last words. They ought to enlighten all those bewildered and well-meaning liberals who cannot perceive the absolute moral necessity of the secession at Syracuse, after the attitude of the League had been fatally revolutionized.

LIBERTY AND LICENSE.

Rev. George C. Lorimer, D.D., a Baptist clergyman of this city, preached a sermon in Tremont Temple, January 19, on "Irreligion in Boston." He treated his topic quite as one would expect, and there is no occasion to discuss his general position; but one of his sentences strikes us as exceptionally pithy and epigrammatic: "Liberalists believe in broad liberty, and they take liberty with things not their own."

It might be retorted with justice that Christians claim as their own many things to which they have no right. For instance, they usually claim civilization, science, progress, morality, reforms of all kinds, as mere appendages and corollaries of Christianity; they seem blissfully unconscious of the fact that Christianity, as an historical faith and institution, has been the chief obstacle to all these. Rev. J. P. Newman, D.D., gravely asserted in a sermon at Cleveland, a few weeks ago: "All the original discoveries in science have been made by Christian people. Never was an original discovery made by a man who was not a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ." Dr. Lorimer himself, in the very discourse referred to, "takes liberty with things not his own" in this fashion: "I find religion in every sect, in all creeds and denominations. But when I say irreligion, I mean departure from Christianity in thought and practice." Religion, then, is one of the things which Christians claim as their own, denying to all others the least share in it; they count all other religions than theirs as irreligious! There is nothing new or surprising in this conceit, overgrown and monstrous as it is; we are all too familiar with it to note it otherwise than with a smile. For the present, let us rather inquire whether there is any truth in Dr. Lorimer's neat little epigram. Is it true that "liberalists believe in broad liberty, and take liberty with things not their own"? Instead of resenting such sharp criticisms, it is far wiser to ask if there is any basis of fact to support them.

Liberalism, as the word imports, is devotion to liberty, whether political or personal, intellectual or religious. Does devotion to liberty ever run into disregard of truth or virtue? That is the question; for to disregard either truth or virtue is inevitably to "take liberty with things not our own." To put the question in other words still, is there any force in the popular distinction between "Liberty and License"? Most assuredly there is. Liberty is emancipation from human tyranny; license is rebellion against natural law.

The love of power is one of man's universal characteristics. In itself it is innocent, like every other instinctive desire; it becomes guilty or injurious only when misapplied. Increasing mastery over the physical forces of the universe is at once the ambition of science and the triumph of civilization; yet it is only a result of the love of power directed to one of its legitimate objects. Influence on public opinion for the sake of enlightening it with greater wisdom in all that concerns individual or social welfare is the natural prerogative of character and genius; yet this, too, is only a consequence of the love of power unperverted from its natural ends. But arbitrary control of the destinies of others, whether secured by political usurpation or by the subjection of men's minds to superstition or ecclesiasticism, is the aim of tyranny alone; it is a monstrous perversion of the love of power by those who seek the gratification of selfish personal objects through the degradation of humanity at large. Liberty sets men free from all such usurpation of their fellows, not that they may live without law, but rather that the law they live by may be the law ordained by the nature of things. Human tyranny in Church and State has been the heaviest curse of mankind since society began to be; all that is good has been the result of a successful overthrow of usurping tyrannical authorities, whether lodged in despotic individual wills or in equally despotic social institutions and systems. The function of the love of liberty, wisely directed, is simply to hold in check the love of power, and guide it to those fields where its exercise shall promote the true elevation and dignity of human character, by endowing man with a noble mastery of himself according to the irreversible laws of Nature.

But men run ever to what Tennyson called "the falsehood of extremes." The passion for liberty too often acquires such momentum as to bear them over and beyond the natural limits of liberty; it too often inflames their minds with a hatred of authority so fierce and blind that they confound the natural sovereignty of the moral law with the usurped mastership of systems and persons. This is the great tragedy of history. The protesting spirit, hot with wrath against the tyrannous will which has again and again kept its heel on the necks of successive generations, blazes forth in a wild holocaust of established institutions; and into the flames the self-freed slaves have too often hurled good as well as evil, without stopping to discriminate between them. Together with the iron systems of human fabrication has too often perished all reverence for that higher law which man can neither make nor unmake; the rage of antinomianism has succeeded to the dull stupor of submission, and individualism run mad has rendered impossible that calm equipoise of liberty and law in which alone human welfare consists. Men have again and again surrendered themselves to the crazy dream of an absolute autonomy; they have fancied that no appeal need be taken from the follies and absurdities of their individual opinion; they have scorned all restraints, as well those imposed by the nature of things as those foisted upon them by cunning human oppressors. Herein lies the spirit of license, which is rebellion against the eternal and undisturbed sovereignty of natural moral law—the rule of mere private caprice or blunder substituted in vain for the empire of that universal reason which forever sits in judgment on each and all of us. Liberty achieves man's release from all artificial authorities in Church and State; but all the more it holds him subject to that uncreated law which is written in the very substance of his moral being. License scorns all law, human or divine, artificial or natural, and exalts fallible individual judgment, or—worse still—tumultuous and lawless passion, to the throne of absolute empire. The two are as wide apart as the poles; and nothing but misery for man can issue from confusion of the two in social life.

Now liberalism, rightly construed, means devotion to liberty; but it also means an opposition to license just as stern and inexorable as that which it shows to tyranny. Woe to it, if it wilfully refuses, or even ignorantly fails, to recognize this antagonism, deep as the foundations of the universe, between liberty and license! Woe to it, if it suffers itself to be seduced, by any cant of conciliation or gush of slimy sentimentalism or fear of consequences, into trying to make peace where there is and can be no peace! Woe to it, if it either will not or can not both see and say that liberty is only possible under reverent and heedful recognition of supreme, universal moral law! Aye, woe to it, if it either will not or can not acknowledge that moral law is something infinitely more and higher than any man's whim, conceit, or private hobby! The law of right is not what Tom, Dick, or Harry may oracularly pronounce it to be, on the authority of his own cramped or twisted conception; it is what Nature herself ordains, and what Science alone declares. Not to be able to rise to this lofty impersonalism of natural morality—not to be able to distinguish between this supreme law of liberty and the personal egotism which license would put in its place—would doom liberalism to perpetual banishment to the limbo of the world's most fetid and noxious superstitions. Liberty worships the law of immutable and eternal Nature; license worships the lawlessness of fickle and perishable self. Is there no issue there?

So deep and bridgeless a chasm does this issue between liberty and license create, that the fate of liberalism is trembling in the balance to-day. We have no fears for the result. We behold the massing of hostile forces without the faintest tincture of apprehension. Let the separations deepen and multiply as they must; dangerous confusions will only melt away like the mists of the early morning, and the immovable mountains of truth will only emerge the sooner into the clear light of day. Reunions will at last grow out of the separations themselves, far nobler and stronger than the original ties. Liberty will know her own at last, and License also hers; they have no more in common than light and darkness. And when liberalism is known to be what it really is, devotion to Liberty and uncompromising opposition to License, it will mount like the sun to the zenith of human thought, to shine henceforth upon the world with healing in its beams.

A BALLOT.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Editor,—Should not the constituents of the press be allowed sometimes, simply, without argument, in the paper they subscribe for and take, to cast a vote? To reply and rejoinder, to literary crimination and recrimination, there is no end. Volo,—I will, I wish, I hope, a certain position may be maintained, a particular judgment prevail; and, as there is no time to dispute about the meaning of any man's ballot at the polls, which the humblest may deposit without reproach, I trust it will not be quite impertinent to say my suffrage goes for your general undeviating course whenever a moral question, which never has in it many links, is up. That you will never hesitate to spring to the front for truth and purity, as well as liberty, and as being the only real liberty, I rejoice to believe. O. A. BARTOL.

"THE GARMENTS OF RELIGIOUSNESS."

In THE INDEX of January 16, I alluded to the religious connection of the President of the MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY of New York, whose mode of doing business was the subject of comment not complimentary to his ingenuousness. As appears from the subsequent citations from the Daily Indicator, a New York provincial paper, Mr. Winston does not belong to the Presbyterian Church of Dr. Hall, but to the Episcopal Church of Dr. Washburn.

The Indicator of January 17 has the last of a series of articles denouncing severely, and I think justly, the conduct of the "Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States," a company the second in size in the country, and which owns a magnificent building opposite the post-office in Boston, whose officers, and particularly its President, it accuses of using its funds for their private purposes, in other business corporations which they manage. And then it goes on to say:—

There is yet one other corporation, not precisely of a mercantile character, which appears to be "run" very much in the interest of the Equitable,—or more properly in the interest of those who "run" the Equitable and its brood; we mean the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. We do not ourselves worship in that temple, and consequently cannot speak from knowledge; but we have before us a list of the Directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, in which no less than twenty-five names, including, of course, Mr. Hyde and Mr. Alexander, are marked off as elders and members of the church named. This was done for us by a member of the church, who, in terms rather emphatic for a church-member in good standing we must say, condemned the shamelessness with which the influence of the Fifth Avenue, or Sunday branch, of the Equitable was used to subvert the purposes of those who attend more especially to the interests of the down-town establishment.

"Respecting the directors, I scarcely dare to speak. I must endeavor to restrain my just indignation, and speak calmly as a minister of religion. Sir, these gentlemen have been faithless to high office, disloyal to truth and the first principles of morality. What, with respect to some of them, deepens the discredit is, that they trod the streets of the city arrayed in the garments of religiousness, making long prayers while desolating widows' houses, erecting churches while wrecking homes. Their honor is tarnished, their reputation stained."

These words were not spoken by Dr. Hall, but by Dr. Robertson, at a meeting of the unfortunate shareholders of the ruined City of Glasgow Bank. Some of our directors may be thankful for two things, that Dr. Robertson is not here, and that they are not in Glasgow.

The same journal, the Indicator, in its issue of January 29, has the following:—

Wright not Right.

In one of those fierce philippics with which it is the wont of the Hon. Elizer Wright to assail the Mutual Life and its President, occurs the following extraordinary misstatement: "Now, who is this Mr. Winston . . . ? He is said to be a member, in fact a pillar, of Rev. Dr. John Hall's church in New York, one of the most evangelical and wealthy churches of that great city." This is a grave error, which, in the interests of truth and justice, the Daily Indicator feels itself called upon to correct. Mr. Winston is not a member of Dr. John Hall's church, also known as the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, but which shall henceforth be known as the Church of the Holy Tontine. Mr. Winston does not belong to any Presbyterian church; neither is he a Presbyterian in doctrine. He is a staunch Episcopalian, and attends regularly the Calvary Church in Fourth Avenue, presided over by Rev. Dr. Washburne, in which, with unobtrusive liberality, he does his duty as a church member. We do not know what he paid for his pew; but we venture to assert that he did not endeavor to express the intensity of his Orthodoxy or his piety by buying two at $6,000 each.

If this correction is any relief to Mr. Winston, I am happy to accept it. I had always supposed him an Episcopalian till I was positively told by a New Yorker who I supposed knew, that he belonged to Dr. Hall's church. How thankful Calvary Church and Dr. Washburne will be for the correction the readers of THE INDEX can judge.

Here are two churches of two distinct Christian denominations, one of which contains the officers of a corporation controlling about $30,000,000 of money, which stands charged, if not convicted, of cheating thousands of its policy-holders by gambling TONTINE POLICIES; and the other contains the President of another corporation holding $80,000,000 of money, who is known to be guilty of bribery, and who, for a dozen years at least, has been deceiving the public as to the ratio of the company's expenses to its premium receipts, by counting as premiums of the year more or less premiums received in previous years, and who has lately been detected in giving secret instructions to the company's agents which would ruin the reputation of any private citizen who should be found guilty of it. See THE INDEX of Oct. 17, 1878.

E. W.

CALUMNY.

People who live in glass houses should not throw stones at their neighbors. Rev. Joseph Cook, the favorite Monday Lecturer of Boston, has had the temerity to disregard this time-honored dictate of prudence. He charges all those who have asked for the repeal of censorship of the press, as applied to or through the post-office, as having done it in the interest of vendors of obscene literature and the corrupters of youth. He hurls at a whole class of his fellow-citizens epithets which he dares not apply to a single one of them by name, for fear of the law of libel. Such a man, if not a liar, is a coward and a sneak.

The Rev. Joseph Cook very well knows that, if Congress had passed a law establishing a censorship of the press, and the President had appointed Colgate and Comstock censors, with power to prosecute the authors of all books they should deem heretical or immoral, there would have been earnest protests against such legislation from thousands of men whom he would not dare to calumniate by name. Such a law would be the death of any party responsible for it. The Comstock law is precisely the same thing both in design and effect. The only difference is that it was pursued by stealth, under the utterly false pretence of suppressing obscenity. Obscenity has existed thousands of years. For a hundred years or more the people enjoyed the post-office without a suspicion that espionage was necessary to prevent its flooding the schools and corrupting our youth with obscenity! This offence was surely no more rife in 1873 than in 1834, when, at the instance of Rev. Mr. McDowell, Mr. Lewis Tappan, and other good Christians, attempted to suppress it by prosecutions under State law, and after considerable apparent success desisted because the inevitable notoriety of their operations only advertised and increased the mischief. The truth, apparent to all but fanatics, is that decent society protects itself by a punishment far severer than fine and imprisonment from all intrusions of obscenity. It is the public contempt. But no one, certainly no "infidel," objects either to State laws against obscenity or to their enforcement; and Rev. Joseph Cook knows this perfectly well, for he must have read the resolutions of the Liberal League on the subject.

It is said to have been discovered in 1873 that the producers and vendors of obscene literature were not only sending it through the mails to people already too bad to be corrupted by it, as they had doubtless always done, but were flooding the schools with "tons" of it, thus corrupting the innocent children and youth. Mr. Cook affirms that respectable teachers dare not publish catalogues lest the villainous vendors of obscenity should obtain the address of the scholars. He does not name these teachers. My reason for not giving any credit to this story is that lying is resorted to under the Comstock law, without scruple, to entrap the victims. False in one thing, false in all. Any set of men who justify lying to promote purity may safely be set down as hypocrites, whose damnation the Apostle Paul pronounces just. He must be more credulous than any Jew who will believe that atrocious charge against our schools, from the mouths of men who lie and justify lying in the execution of that law.

The very fact that by a lie they entrapped into the mail a book sold openly, and thus dragged the author into the clutches of their stolen law, and then imprisoned him when there was no more obscenity in his book than in scores of books in every library, including the Bible itself, shews that the promotion of purity was not the purpose of that law, but the suppression by force of heretical or unpopular opinions.

What foundation for good morals have we, when truth is thrown overboard? The trouble with the Comstock law is, not only that it is utterly and flatly unconstitutional, but that it cannot possibly be made effective without lying. You cannot tear open all the mail parcels to see what moral poison is in them. Your law is not worth a pin without liars and lying decoys. And if this great nation is not a nation of liars as well as fools, it will not long suffer on the Federal statute book a law which, while it is utterly powerless to suppress obscenity, can be used to prosecute every unpopular author and punish every heretical opinion. I sincerely whisper in the ear of American Christianity that it cannot afford to engage in any such crusade against infidelity as this.

E. W.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 221 Washington Street, Boston.

Ritualism is on the increase in the Church of England.

Great Britain produces one billion gallons of milk per annum.

Protestantism is gaining ground rapidly in France; so is Jesuitism.

The command of the God of civilization is, Let there be more light!

It is claimed that the electric light does not cost half as much as gas-light.

Miss Cary has turned the second corner; she will be thirty-five the next time.

Herbert Spencer now says that "a Religion of Humanity is an impossibility."

It is said that Queen Victoria will not read a French novel, nor allow one in her library.

Four car-loads of silk-worm eggs in transit from China to France have arrived in New York.

It is said that more than one-fourth of the land throughout Europe is covered with forests.

Mr. E. H. Heywood calls the nineteen Molly Maguire murderers nineteen labor reformers.

New York city has seventy-three Episcopal churches, fifty-four Catholic, and fifty Methodist churches.

Four new elements have been discovered recently: they are called mosandrum, philippium, ytterbium, and deciptum.

The Queen has given $1000 to the poor of London. How much does she take every year from the poor of England?

One thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven miles of new railroad were constructed in the United States during the year 1878.

The property of the late Pope is being sold at the Vatican. Most of the paintings on exhibition are described as intolerably wretched.

It would be interesting to know the religious opinions of the present Congressmen; how many are Christians and how many know better.

A good many sensible people are asking if they who are working so hard to preserve the Old South are not "paying dear for their whistle."

Two Mormon youths are reported on their way to Harvard University. Cambridge mothers better have an eye on these polygamous individuals.

The arm of sympathy does not always end in a hand of help. The charity which prevents one from assisting himself is an injury, not a benefit.

The Catholic priests of Quebec recently burned in a public bonfire a vast amount of sensational literature which their congregations surrendered.

Gambetta warmly favors the project on foot for girls' colleges partially supported by the State and the municipal councils of the French towns.

France is a richer country than England. The public and private property of France is estimated at $46,110,000,000; of England at $42,500,000,000.

Paris has forty-seven daily papers, with a circulation of over seven hundred thousand. A large majority of these papers are Republican in politics.

It is asserted that of the sixty thousand students in the country only twenty-five thousand are professing Christians. Study does not tend to make Christians.

The National Reformer says, "Leo XIII. does not curse as vigorously as did Pius IX., but he hates liberty as piously as did any of his sainted predecessors."

It is twenty years since Theodore Parker was brought down with the hemorrhage that ended in his death. His last written sermon he was never able to deliver.

A Christian paper thinks it is to be regretted that Bayard Taylor was not a Christian. It is too bad that the Church cannot claim one great man when he dies.

Baptist Fulton has got into trouble again. The Baptist Conference of New York has suspended him for offensive and insulting language. Fulton knows that "the tongue is an unruly member," as well as did James.

Dr. J. M. Peebles relates that in his Eastern travels he met a Brahmin priest who refused to shake hands with him for fear of pollution, because, as he said, "Americans eat hogs."

A woman has succeeded in inventing a device to deaden the noise of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad. This proves that woman can not only make a noise, but can stop a noise also.

Col. Mallory says that "the number of our Indians is on the increase, and will naturally so continue unless repressed by causes not attributable to civilization, but to criminal misgovernment."

Richard Grant White says in the Atlantic for January: "I saw no beggars in London streets. But London has 81,241 paupers, of whom 42,012 are in workhouses and 31,227 receive out-door relief."

Anna Dickinson ridicules the statement of the decadence of the drama, in her lecture on "Platform and Stage." She administers a deserved rebuke to the ignorant and Puritanical criticism of the theatre.

The Empress Eugénie is described as living a quiet and monotonous life at Chislehurst. She prays and plays whist, drives and embroiders. She is still handsome, and her hair is yet beautiful in its golden glory.

The First Unitarian Society of Minneapolis, Minn., has changed itself into "The First Liberal League of Minneapolis." We would say to other Unitarian societies, "Go and do likewise," if you would do a wise thing.

The Universalist denomination in this country boasts of seven hundred and thirty-seven churches, and seven hundred and eleven preachers. In 1878 there was an increase of forty-six churches and a loss of eleven preachers.

William E. Dodge estimates that there is annually expended in the United States over $600,000,000 for intoxicating drinks, and as much more in consequence of their use. Vices cost more than do virtues, but virtues pay best.

South Carolina has had a duel in the most approved manner. The principals fired at each other without any serious injury to either party, and then shook hands over it, and both confessed that they did not mean what they said. A duel is well that ends well.

Grant has "flung away ambition" in his travels, and is coming home a poorer, wiser, better man, according to hearsay. He does not aspire to rule, but hereafter will be content to settle down on a respectable salary. His only wish is to hold his old position at the head of the army.

The Archbishop of York denies that he has denounced teetotalism, or that he ever said that "salvation was only possible in connection with total abstinence." The Archbishop believes in an easy kind of temperance. He wishes to be free to drink, and respects such freedom in others.

Four hundred and forty-two voters of the town of Albion, N.Y., have signed a petition to the New York State Legislature, asking that the law of the State exempting church property, ministers, and priests from taxation be repealed. Among this number of petitioners are seven Orthodox clergymen of that town.

The Unitarians of England have three hundred and seventy churches, but a great many of these are in that state where "any little thing will carry them off." Unitarianism ought to take something for its blood. It is almost as pale and thin as Calvinism. It is dying of too much respect for others and too little respect for itself.

At the recent meeting of the International Congress of Commercial Geography held in Paris, it was resolved "that there had been surveys enough made for a canal across the Darien Isthmus, and that an international committee should meet as soon as possible to organize a company to raise funds and put the canal through."

No minister in Boston can preach a sermon that will appeal to the heart, the soul, the better part of a man, with such power as does Lawrence Barrett's fine impersonation of the high-minded, pure-hearted, loving "Man of Arlio." It is a narrow prejudice that forbids the performance of a drama like "Harebell" on Sunday, and it is a still narrower prejudice that holds it a sin to go to see such a play on Monday.

Extract from the Gospel according to Christianity: "Good Minister, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." "All the commandments have I kept from my youth up. What lack I yet?" "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the Church, and thou shalt have thy name praised in the pulpit and printed in the paper; and come and hear me preach."

A novel project is being undertaken by Count Ferdinand Lesseps, an eminent French engineer. It is no less than the formation of a sea in the interior of Tunis, and along the eastern confines of Algeria, bringing the Schott in communication with the Mediterranean by means of a canal twenty kilometres in length. Such an undertaking carried through will completely change the face of the African Continent, and will be of greater service than even the Suez Canal.

Parker Pillsbury lectured in the Malden Unitarian church week before last, on "Hindu Missions, or Buddhism and Christianity." The lecturer must have said something disagreeably true to his hearers, as many of his statements are declared to be without any foundation of truth for their support. The lecture has created a great interest throughout the town, and Mr. Pillsbury will probably in his next effort explain, to the satisfaction of his opponents, his damaging statements.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, has announced his purpose to rebut the opinion of Col. Ingersoll, that Burns was a freethinker. Under all varieties of literary and personal criticism, Burns has slept quietly in his coffin for a hundred years; but what a rattling of his bones will there be, if at this late day a controversy is raised to prove that the author of "The Two Herds; or, The Holy Tulzie" and "Holy Willie's Prayer" was a "humble follower of the meek and lowly Jesus."

The Congregational ministers of Chicago have agreed to pronounce against cards, billiards, and dancing. Will the Church ever learn that amusement is not a vice, and that it is the duty of the Church to rescue amusements from vicious surroundings? If Christian ministers wish to kill vice, let them take amusements away from the saloons and provide a place for them in the church vestry. One of the most needed reforms is to make the Church of some practical use to the world.

Prof. Felix Adler does not have a high opinion of "the state of literature when schoolmen could soberly discuss such questions as these: Whether it is permissible to use sand or beer in baptism instead of water? In what language the snake spoke to Eve? How many angels can sit on the point of a needle?" How much higher is the state of literature when scholars seriously write about the "procession of the Holy Ghost"; the coming on earth of a man who has been dead two thousand years; and of the actual presence of Jesus in the consecrated bread and wine of the eucharist?

A friend writes: I have known Mr. Spurgeon personally for many years. About the last time I visited him at his church in London (the Tabernacle, as it is called) I waited upon him in the vestry, and spent half an hour there with him. He said, "You are not one of the cold-water men are you?" I answered, "I am not." "Well," said the great preacher, "I have some fine old wine just here, the best that ever came to London. We will enjoy a glass or two, and then you can give me your opinion of it." We drank the wine and I pronounced it "first rate." How does that read after the stories now going the rounds about Mr. Spurgeon drinking only the product of the pump?

This country is suffering a labor depression, the burden of which is most grievous upon the laborer. A general calamity may be traced to a general fault. No such wide-spread suffering as afflicts the people can be attributed to a single cause; nor can we exempt those who suffer most from their share of responsibility for the hard times. We have all had a hand in producing the present state of affairs. Some have laid the evil at the door of capital, and charged upon corporations the present state of depression. Others have selected the railroads as the prime source of all our difficulties, and declared that by their competition they had brought about the ruin and disaster that have fallen everywhere upon the land. Yet others see the chief cause of our misfortunes in the vice of intemperance, and think that could the sale of intoxicating liquors be stopped the tide of prosperity would immediately set in. Some have attributed our troubles to the rascalities and frauds in business; while many look upon the present depression as the result of the late war. It is more important to find the cure of the hard times than to find the cause. The man who can tell us how to get out of our difficulties, not the one who can tell us how we got into them, is the man we want. If the remedy lies with capital, then capital should apply it; if with the laborer, then he should do his duty in the matter. I believe that everybody is more or less to blame for the hard times, and that everybody has more or less to do to remedy them. The fact of depression is everywhere acknowledged; it cannot be narrowed to local or provisional importance. Workmen have no work; trade languishes, and the whole machinery of business is moving but slowly, where it is moving at all. This state of things is not confined to a particular section. It is the complaint which rises from the whole land. Our entire nation is stricken with financial paralysis. Not alone the arm of the country feels the shock, but our entire national system. We ought to take a large view of the situation, and look upon all sides. The whole truth cannot be seen from one point. It is the duty of each person to study carefully his own relation to the present condition of things. All should inquire into their own difficulties, and each one seek and apply as far as he possibly can the remedy for his own distress. If a man has been made poor by extravagance, and is kept poor by expensive habits, let him cease to indulge such habits. There is no other remedial agent. If another is suffering from his addiction to some vice, and cannot support his family and his vice too, he should give up his vice. The hard times should be reduced to their individual bearing. There may be cases of embarrassment in business for which those employed in the business cannot of themselves find the relief, and there are still other cases where men who are out of work are powerless to use the means which shall give them employment; but we hold that one step to be taken toward a better state of things is a step in the direction of more economical habits. A man cannot earn two dollars a day and spend two dollars and a half without sometime being obliged to stop. We have had to stop living in this manner, and now we are paying our debts of folly. Every man ought to earn something and save something. This is the rule which, if applied, will prevent hard times; and it will furnish the means of cure.

Communications.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL'S POSITION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

If there was not intended to be a touch of irony in the editorial on page six of last week's INDEX, then Professor Tyndall is not quite fairly treated in it. Professor Tyndall, as an intelligent man of science, no doubt accepts it as a first principle, too plain for dispute or serious discussion, that the eternal uniformity of Nature's law is the very basis of all science, and of all useful information; and being aware that development of science must proceed by deliberate and patient observation made for ascertainment of even subsisting law, and, in respect of which, assertion without proof would be absurd, he is of course logical enough to know that no other ground than that of fancy can be assigned for the special, dogmatic, supernatural form of faith ecclesiastical, aside from some appearance of occasion presented of impugning the measure of intelligence or thoughtfulness, or of veracity and sincerity, of all who teach, and of all who accept it. Conformity to the dictates of reason, that being the only legitimate guide of human life, is the necessary condition of every moral virtue. In awarding justice, it is a rule with the lawyers that all things which equity requires to be done are to be regarded as done. So Professor Tyndall, in order to avoid ungracious imputation in respect of quality rational or moral, was obliged to put upon the thing he was dealing with the only charitable construction it would bear. Therefore he gives credit for flights of fancy to those who accept as true, and those who teach to others as certain, things which are repugnant to the dictates of common-sense, and of the truth of which no evidence whatever is possible. The sentimentalism which confounds fantastic dress assumed by religious principle with the principle itself is none the less a flight of fancy for being seriously entertained. The substitution of myth for reality has made men as ready to die, and to kill, from persistence in gloomiest crotchets, as to endure calamity from adherence to moral principle. When such myth is beyond the range of rational probability, and is accepted as literally true, it is a stretch of courtesy to call it poetic. If Professor Tyndall has erred in that way, his excess of courtesy ought certainly to be excused; though more strictly speaking, poetry ceases as reason retires, where the madness of faith in myth begins.

If what is called religion has been made the engine of political and social despotism and moral debasement, the suspicions and even the contempt and scorn which its name may awaken are the natural consequences of the bad company that name has kept.

Mr. Tyndall distinguishes between the actual and the mythical when he says, "It is against the mythologic scenery, if I may use the term, rather than against the life and substance of religion, that science enters her protest." Since he accords to religion in its better sense life and substance, he implicitly admits that it is a legitimate subject-matter of science, the domain of which is coextensive with the reach of natural things and their relations. It is the function of science to deal with truth. If religion, in the better sense, is subject to the condition of being true, then all religion, which is worthy to inspire respect rather than pity, is subject-matter of science, and rests upon its authority; for natural reason, transformed and enslaved by mythologic madness, can bring no certain light as to duty, moral or religious, nor any consolation to enlightened conscience, however it may deck with artificial roses the pathway of the childish, the supremely selfish, the dishonest, or the subservient.

It is no answer to say that mystery exists which seems impenetrable; for it is as well the part of science modestly to recognize limitation of known truth as to proclaim truth ascertained. Imagination can render useful service only under control of intelligence; therefore it can give no help where intelligence fails; and in such case an honest man, an intelligent freeman, worthy of the name, will be as little inclined to welcome its life-deforming interference as to rely on its authority.

It seems not quite satisfactory to say that "religion includes science as a part of herself." In the passage, "Religion demands the truth first of all things, and it is the special function of the intellect to supply this demand by a faithful application of the one scientific method wherever truth is sought." It is gratifying to see this legitimate subjection of religion to science so happily expressed: Religion is defined as "the perfecting of human nature in all its relations." Consistently with this definition accepted, it will hardly do to say that religion includes science; for then, if by science in its larger sense is to be understood the sum of natural truth, as yet to but limited extent explored and known, it follows that the universe of which man forms a part, subordinated to the conditions that surround him, one of which is the acknowledged existence of a standard of perfection to be reached, is but a mere appendage to man. But the universe is not to be contemplated as an appendage to man, or to his caprices.

The indulgence of sentimental sadness over the loss of fancies which once were pleasant, but which have faded before the light of reason, is hardly consistent with honesty of purpose, with a proper sense of dignity or duty, or with a just estimate of highest human happiness. Whatever may be the compassion or the pity for which such things may give occasion, still not to be sighed after or regretted is the outgrown infirmity which comes of incapacity to comprehend that love of actual truth is the crowning glory of existence. C. C.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., Jan. 10, 1879.

"THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY."

EDITOR INDEX:—

I have just concluded a second reading of the Rev. J. W. Chadwick's recently published and altogether admirable book, The Bible of To-Day, and desire, through the columns of THE INDEX, to thank him for the pleasure and profit I derived from its perusal; also to commend it to the attention of those persons who earnestly desire to learn something of the true history of a book around which cluster the hopes and fears of many millions of devout souls, who, while pondering its enigmatical pages, are alternately lifted to heights of ecstasy and sunk in depths of despair.

It is not claimed by the author, or his friends, that he has perfectly illuminated the hazy atmosphere in which that mystic volume has been so long enveloped; but it cannot fairly be denied that he has succeeded in clearing a path into a wilderness of error, which must grow broader and more plain as it shall be further explored by other seekers after truth.

Mr. Chadwick possesses, in an eminent degree, a judicial mind; and through it he has sifted a large amount of biblical criticism, the life-work of many of the most profound scholars of the present century, giving to his readers a concise and comprehensible presentation of the conclusions he has, with much labor, deliberately and conscientiously reached. He has certainly treated his difficult subject with candor, and, if with entire freedom, yet respectfully, even reverentially. Copious notices of his book, by competent critics, have appeared in various newspapers and magazines within the past two or three months, many of them commendatory, some otherwise. Of course, those theologians who are incensed in the narrow dogmas which have been handed down through the Church from generation to generation will cast it aside with the customary contemptuous sneer; nor will it meet with any favor among those laymen who refuse to be parted from their idols. But with that already large and rapidly augmenting class who are capable of doing a little thinking for themselves, and are willing to make the effort, it will, wherever it reaches, be hailed as a new and brilliant light, conducting through the bogs and fens of supernaturalism to the green fields and shady groves of rational religion.

It is not expected that The Bible of To-Day will immediately supersede the Bible of the Christian Church, already hoary with age; but, if it shall, in some small degree, assist the conscientious student of the history of one of the world's great religions to a clearer and more coherent interpretation of that hitherto enigmatical volume, it will have rendered an important service to mankind, and laid rationalism under many obligations to its accomplished author. D. C.

WOBURN, JANUARY, 1879.

DE TOCQUEVILLE ON CHURCH AND STATE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—While the question of the entire separation of Church and State is not yet fully settled, it may not be out of place to look over some remarks made upon this subject about fifty years ago by an eminent Catholic writer,—M. De Tocqueville. (See Democracy in America, p. 838, A. S. Barnes & Co.'s edition of 1851):—

"I am aware that at certain times religion may strengthen this influence, which originates in itself, by the artificial power of the laws, and by the support of those temporal institutions which direct society. Religions, intimately united to the governments of earth, have been known to exercise a sovereign authority derived from the twofold source of terror and of faith; but when a religion contracts an alliance of this nature, I do not hesitate to affirm that it commits the same error as a man who should sacrifice his future to his present welfare; and in obtaining a power to which it has no claim, it risks that authority which is rightfully its own. When a religion founds its empire upon the desire of immortality which lives in every human heart, it may aspire to universal dominion; but when it connects itself with a government, it must necessarily adopt maxims which are only applicable to certain nations. Thus, in forming an alliance with a political power, religion augments its authority over a few and forfeits the hope of reigning over all.

"As long as a religion rests upon those sentiments which are the consolation of all affliction, it may attract the affections of mankind. But if it be mixed up with the bitter passions of the world, it may be constrained to defend allies whom its interests, and not the principles of love, have given to it; or to repel as antagonists men who are still attached to its own spirit, however opposed they may be to the power to which it is allied. The Church cannot share the temporal power of the State without being the object of a portion of that animosity which the latter excites. . . .

"In proportion as a nation assumes a democratic condition of society, and as communities display democratic propensities, it becomes more and more dangerous to connect religion with political institutions; for the time is coming when authority will be bandied from hand to hand, when political theories will succeed each other, and when men, laws, and constitutions will disappear or be modified from day to day, and this not for a season only, but unceasingly. Agitation and mutability are inherent in the nature of democratic republics, just as stagnation and inertness are the law of absolute monarchies.

"If the Americans, who change the head of the government once in four years, who elect new legislators every two years, and renew the provincial officers every twelvemonth,—if the Americans, who have abandoned the political world to the attempts of innovators, had not placed religion beyond their reach, where could it abide in the ebb and flow of human opinions, and where would that respect which belongs to it be paid, amid the struggles of faction? and what would become of its immortality, in the midst of perpetual decay? . . .

"In Europe, Christianity has been intimately united to the powers of earth. Those powers are now in decay, and it is, as it were, buried under their ruins. The living body of religion has been bound down to the dead corpse of superannuated polity; cut the bonds which restrain it, and that which is alive will rise once more."

Most respectfully,

CHARLES J. BUELL.

ROSENDALE, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1879.

A COLLEGE FOR LIBERAL EDUCATION IN AMERICA.

That there is a large and increasing liberal element in the United States, I suppose will be conceded by every one who is familiar with current events. If the object to be attained by the various liberal organizations is the liberation of the minds of men, the unfettered use of our reasoning faculties upon subjects which have heretofore been held too sacred for investigation by the laity, and, in fine, the elevation of the race, why not commence at the "beginning of things" and give our sons and our daughters an education in an institution of learning kept free from these very bonds which we outgrow after leaving the old halls of learning, supported as they are in most cases by some particular creed and officered by doctors of divinity?

We are frequently confronted by those who question the sincerity of our motives, with the argument that we profess to believe that which we would not have our children taught. Though this is not true, yet it gives good ground for an argument. The want can only be met by a high-toned, well-conducted institution of learning, founded and managed by liberals and upon liberal principles. Money should not be weighed against the proper cultivation of the mind. We are ably represented by a well-patronized press; the lecture field is being constantly enriched by able speakers; yet the times are out of joint somewhere. We lack something to start us in the right direction. After many hours, days, months, and years of study, doubts, and fears, we manage to get where we should have started in the beginning. Let us profit by these lessons from sad experience, and not bequeath them to our posterity, as we have inherited them from our ancestry.

I have given my reasons why we should have a college of our own. Now for

The Plan.

Let the columns of every liberal paper be open for free discussion upon the subject; let every lecturer who would practise what he preaches agitate the subject before his audience to the extent of the interest he takes in the project. After there has been a sentiment created in that direction, let there be a meeting called, and, after determining upon a location, have five charter members appointed to procure a charter from the State in which the institution is to be located, with an authorized capital of not less than a hundred thousand dollars. When twenty per cent. of the capital stock has been subscribed, let a meeting of the stockholders be held to elect five directors, a president, secretary, and treasurer, with annual elections thereafter until all the stock has been taken, and the treasurer to give bonds for double the amount of stock subscribed at the time of his election.

When thirty per cent. of the stock has been actually paid up in cash, let there be a building committee appointed to confer with architects and contractors for the erection of a suitable building, not to exceed in cost the amount actually paid up, and report to the next meeting of the board of directors. The secretary will keep the stockholders well-informed by reports of progress, either by circular or through the press, or both. Thirty per cent. of the authorized capital should be by subscription; the remainder may be by donation, the sale of scholarships, and the like.

As to location—which should be central, easy of access, and healthy—I have examined the map of the United States, several health reports, and the character of the people, and, after careful consideration, I would suggest one of the following places:

St. Louis, Mo., Chicago, Ill., or Mansfield, in this State.

As a primary committee, by way of having some starting point, I here nominate Hon. N. Holmes and R. Peterson, for St. Louis, Hon. Henry Booth, Rev. Robt. Collyer, and Col. R. G. Ingersoll, for Chicago, and F. E. Abbot, Horace Seaver, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, J. L. Hatch (San Francisco), Dr. W. H. Brown (Bangor, Me.), Dr. L. J. Russell (Harrieville, Tex.), Hon. R. S. McCormick (Franklin, Pa.), Rabbi Isaac M. Wise (Cincinnati, O.), and E. D. Stark (Cleveland, O.), as a committee at large, who will confer with each other, if thought advisable, to "form a more perfect union . . . and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." Trusting that these columns will be ever open for suggestions touching this important subject, I will close, with the hope of seeing others enlisted.

PETER M. HEROLD.

CARROLLTON, O., Jan. 13, 1879.

GOVERNMENT AND RIGHTS.

"The general right which includes every other is the right of every one to be let alone, and not to be governed at all until he interferes violently or fraudulently with his neighbor." Truer words were never spoken. "It is only as socially fructified that man, a moral being, is rationally conceivable." This is equally true and important. "Meantime the right to freedom is itself a right to the governed state, for there could be no real freedom without this." But who is to do the governing? What is to do the governing? Would it not make the matter clearer if we should say that freedom and individuality are only possible in an orderly state of society, in which the individual members of society freely conform their own lives to the laws of order, scientifically ascertained and demonstrated?

In an orderly or harmonious society, there must be underlying all the sense of unity, or the love of humanity as a whole, which I should call religion; but there can be no social order without a compliance with the general principles which should govern us in our relations with our fellow-men. And it seems to me clear that it is the business of the human reason to discover these laws and apply them to all particular cases.

We should then be governed in our actions by the laws of social mechanism in the same sense in which the stars are governed in their courses, or in which a watch is governed in its movements.

And it seems certain that the only way in which the general laws governing human society can be ascertained is by the exhaustive study of the nature of the individual man, and the principles inherent in his organization. I believe that from a thorough knowledge of man can be deduced the laws of society, or the principles of social ethics; but I do not believe that the right of every man to be let alone, or to be free from the interference of his neighbor, can be reconciled with his right to a governed or orderly society by any political government through majority votes, or any other form of the rule of force.

Is it not worth considering whether it would not be easier to "govern" the world by love than by force, by attraction rather than compulsion?

Can we not see in our present society how powerless repressive laws and punishments are to make men better and purer and wiser and happier? Has not all our real progress come from a better knowledge of the right, from better ideas and better conditions, beginning usually with better physical conditions?

Is there any way to do away with stealing except to teach equity in all our relations with our fellow-men, and introduce the universal practice of it? Could private and public wars take place if we were taught to do justice to one another? Will laws for the punishment of murder teach justice? Do not our punishments rather teach the doctrine of retaliation, do we not constantly hear of the murderer expiating his crime on the gallows, and did not the murdered man perhaps expiate the wrong he had done to his murderer?

In one case the expiation had the form of law, in the other case not.

Would it not be well for liberal thinkers to abandon the idea of benefiting the world by the old repression methods, which can safely be left to the care of Church and State, and apply themselves to ascertaining the positive methods, determined by the nature and constitution of man and the universe?

F. S. C.

A CARD.

PRINCETON, Mass., Jan. 23, Y. L. 7.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is due to say that I was never connected in any way with either the Free Religious Association or with the Liberal Leagues. My social faith is not the fruit of heresy. I imbibed my free-love views from the New Testament, and was a free-lover while I was yet a member of an Orthodox church and an incipient Orthodox preacher. Yours ever,

E. H. HAYWOOD.

A NEWLY MARRIED couple, of the ages respectively of eighty-two and eighty-four, were taking their wedding-trip in a railroad car. A passenger, sitting in the seat behind them, among other fond words, heard the following: Bridegroom: "Who is a 'little lamb'?" Bride: "Bofe of us!"

LADY CUSTOMER: "My little boy wishes for a Noah's ark. Have you one?" Toyman: "No, m'm, no. We've given up keeping Noah'sarks since the school boards come in. They was considered too denominational, m'm."—London Punch.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 to 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 to " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANÇOIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen.—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STUBBS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANÇOIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 G. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.38 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wesson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wesson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. S. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MRS. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANÇOIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined list, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"..... 1.00

DARWIN'S Origin of Species..... 2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols..... 4.00
Journal of Researches..... 2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals..... 3.50

The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated..... 6.00
DESCARTES (RENÉ.) Discourse on the Method of Highly Conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences..... 2.25

DICKENS' Child's History of England..... 1.50

DURRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Poets. A Study..... 2.00

ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each..... 1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede..... 1.00
Romola..... 1.00
The Mill on the Floss..... 1.00
Felix Holt..... 1.00

Miles Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The same. Library Edition. 2 vols..... 3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols..... 3.50
Wit and Wisdom of..... 1.25
The Spanish Gypsy..... 1.50

EMERSON'S (M. W.) Essays. First Series..... 1.50
Essays. Second Series..... 1.50
Miscellaneous..... 1.50
Representative Men..... 1.50
English Traits..... 1.50
Conduct of Life..... 1.50
Poems. With Portraits..... 1.50
May-day and Other Pieces..... 1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold..... 1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold..... 1.50
Prose Works. 1 vol..... 5.00
Society and Solitude..... 1.50

EVANS (E. F., Ph. D.) First Historical Translations of Christianity. From the French of Charles Quignard the Younger..... 1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols..... 5.00

FARRAR'S Original History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion..... 2.00

FEUERBAUER (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation..... 3.00

FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. 2 vols..... 2.00
Cosmic Philosophy..... 2.00

FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity..... 1.50
Child's Book of Religion..... 1.00
Life of Theodore Parker..... 2.00

FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols..... 9.00

GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences..... 2.00

GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol..... 5.00
Elective Affinities..... 1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 1 vol..... 1.50
Hermann and Dorothea. Translated by Helen Frothingham..... 1.00

GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life..... 2.00
Literary and Social Judgments..... 2.00
Creed of Christendom..... 1.00

GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait..... 4.00

HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France..... 1.50
Thoughts about Art..... 2.00
The Unknown Miver..... 5.00
The Intellectual Life..... 2.00
Chapters on Animals..... 4.00

HAMILTON (GAIL) Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First..... 1.50

HAMILTON'S Lectures..... 1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures..... 2.50
2. Logical Lectures..... 3.50

HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol..... 2.00
Twice-Told Tales..... 2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse..... 2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance..... 2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image..... 2.00
The Marble Faun..... 2.00
The English Note-Books..... 2.00
The American Note-Books..... 2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books..... 2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton..... 2.00

HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers..... 1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance..... 1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment..... 1.50
Atlantic Essays..... 2.00
Oldport Days..... 2.50

HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey..... 2.00
Sketches..... 2.00
Vegetarian Life..... 2.00
Italian Journeys..... 2.00
A Chance Acquaintance..... 1.50

HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three"..... 1.75

HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON) Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits..... 10.25

HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life..... 1.50

HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN) Verses..... 1.25
Bits of Travel..... 1.50

HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature..... 1.25
On the Origin of Species..... 1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Admirable Traits..... 1.00
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals..... 1.25
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews..... 1.75

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems..... 2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen..... 1.50
Songs of Seven..... 2.50

INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Shelf..... 1.75
Studies for Stories..... 1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series..... 1.25
A Sister's Bye-Bye..... 1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story..... 1.25

INGERBOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures..... 2.00

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall..... 1.50
II. Physics and Politics, or Theories on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot..... 1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith..... 1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Faculties of their Relations. By Alex. Bain..... 1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq..... 1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr..... 2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine..... 1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Ball Pettigrew..... 1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D..... 1.50

JERROLD (DOUGLAS), Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers..... 1.50

JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India..... 5.00

JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian..... 3.50

JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by M. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols..... 12.00

KER (ORPHEUS O.) Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous..... 2.00

LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols..... 4.00
History of European Thought from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols..... 8.00

LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings..... 4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics..... 2.00

LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham..... 1.50

LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols..... 6.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed..... 3.00

LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life..... 1.50

LEWIS (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.) What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews..... 1.00

LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols..... 4.50
Prose Works. Portrait..... 4.00

LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols..... 4.50
The Biglow Papers. First Series..... 1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series..... 1.50
Among my Books..... 2.00
My Study Windows..... 2.00

LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children..... .75

LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN) Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times..... 5.00

LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 1 vol..... 5.00

MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter..... 1.50

MANN (HUBERT) The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife..... 3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1845..... 3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann..... 1.25

MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol..... 2.00

MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind..... .75

MERRIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire..... 1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations..... 1.50

MEL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each..... 2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 1 vol., each..... 3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition..... 2.50
The Subjection of Woman—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol..... 2.50
Representative Governments..... 1.50
Autobiography..... 1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works..... 1.00
Three Essays on Religion..... 2.50

MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Land..... 1.50

MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species..... 1.75

MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire..... 2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols..... 4.00

MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories..... 1.50

MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series..... 2.50
The Same. Second Series..... 2.50
Ode from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Language. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquity. Three vols. Price per volume..... 2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion..... 2.00

NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle..... 1.50
Hakoe from Kentucky..... 1.50

NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy..... 4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy..... 1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical..... 4.25

PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion..... 1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols..... 4.50
Additional Sermons, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols..... 1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings..... 1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham..... 1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story..... .50

PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite..... 1.50

PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar..... 1.50
The Tretty Book..... 1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts..... 1.50
Begg'd In..... 1.50
The Silent Partner..... 1.50
What to Wear?..... 1.00

PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Octavo Edition..... 2.00

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates..... 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena..... 1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. Science, the Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc..... 5.00
The Expanses of Heaven..... 2.00

ROSBETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante..... 1.50

SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies..... 4.00

SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S..... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... .50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth..... .50

SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols..... 31.25

SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition..... 2.00

SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help..... 1.50

SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical..... 1.25
First Principles..... 1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic..... 2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers..... 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed..... 2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols..... 5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols..... 5.00
Philosophy of Style..... 1.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition..... 2.00
Metaphysics..... 1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each..... 4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics..... 5.00
Universal Progress..... 2.50

STOW'S (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Lanyard..... 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin..... .50

STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New..... 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols..... 12.00

TAINWELL'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols..... 7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine..... 2.50

TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems..... 1.75

THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol..... 1.50
Vanity Fair..... 1.50
The Newcomes..... 1.50
Adventures of Philip Lovegrove..... 1.50
The Virginians..... 1.50
Remond, and Love the Widower..... 1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol..... 1.50

This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.

1. Harry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.

THAYER'S (MRS. OLLIE) Among the Isles of Shoals..... 1.00

THORAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods..... 1.00
Excursions in Wild and Forest. Portrait..... 1.50
The Maine Woods..... 2.00
Ope Cod..... 2.00
Letters..... 2.00
A Yankee in Canada..... 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers..... 2.00

TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind..... 2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols..... 5.00

TYNDALL (JOHN) Faraday as a Discoverer..... 1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People..... 1.50
Light and Electricity..... 1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps..... 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion..... 2.00
On Sound..... 2.00
Radiant Heat..... 5.00
Forms of Water..... 1.50
Lectures on Light..... 1.50
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall..... .50
Lessons in Electricity..... 1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast..... .50

TYTLER (HARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures..... 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings..... 1.50

VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each..... 2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each..... 2.75

WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden..... 1.00
Scatterings..... 1.50
Back-Log Studies..... 2.00

WEISS (JOHN) American Religion..... 1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols..... 6.00

WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life..... 1.50
Essays and Reviews..... 2.00
Character and Characteristic Man..... 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth..... 1.50
Success and its Conditions..... 1.50
Washington and the Revolution..... .50

WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life..... 1.50
We Girls: A Home Story..... 1.50
Real Folks..... 1.50
The Other Girls..... 2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems..... 1.50

WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols..... 4.00
Child Life..... 2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

251 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,
BLUFFTON,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S
DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marple's. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Secularism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 60 cents.

II. Burgess-Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 50 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoke.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Boden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE
Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by scientists of the highest authority.

Prominent attention will also be given to those various sciences which help to a better understanding of the nature of man, to the bearings of science upon the questions of society and government, to scientific education, and to the conflicts which spring from the progressive nature of scientific knowledge.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
BONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Trollope, Author of Supernatural Religion,
Mr. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSS-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECT-
URES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Free and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamous Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Paganism and Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNHILL, MASS.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-
TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGION, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1875, '76, '77, '78, and '79, five cents each.

FAITH AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.00.

INTERESTING
NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. E. Cort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kneese, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.50.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 253 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 288 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 283 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION; with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 364 pages. Price $2.00.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. R. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 218 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $4 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $15 a day at home. Outfit free. Address TRUB & CO., Augusta, Maine.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 27 Maiden Lane, New York.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School. The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress. Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGES FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 25, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $7.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Boston Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEB. 13, 1879.

WHOLE No. 477.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. E.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

ALLUDING to the postal-law question, a member of the Iowa bar writes: "I do not know a liberal who does not take the side and the view that you do."

LIBERALS used to be derided by the Orthodox for believing in "mere morality," and the reproach was accepted as a compliment. Shall they resign their right to this agreeable abuse?

THE BOSTON Transcript says that the Chinese in California contributed more for the relief of the yellow-fever sufferers than the whole United States gave to the victims of the famine in China.

NEXT SUNDAY, February 16, at 3 P.M., the First Liberal League of Boston will hold their third meeting of this winter at the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street. Mr. Ivan Panin will read a lecture on "Russia," his native country. All friends of this League are invited to attend.

THE REPORT that Rev. Mr. Checkley, an Episcopal clergyman of Toronto, was recently starved to death turns out to be a mistake. The Herald, of that city, states that he did die of starvation, but simply because his disease was such as to prevent his food from affording him nourishment.

HERE is a precious sentiment, preached by Rev. J. P. Newman, D.D., in the Central Methodist Church, New York, January 26: "Morality is good as far as it goes; but it does not go far enough. Here are two telescopes, one of which reveals to me the moon, the other the sun in all its glory: morality is moonshine, piety is sunlight."

AN IRREVERENT secular paper thus illustrates the "power of prayer": "An excellent lady in this city tells what a trial to her her first husband was, being a scoffer at holy things; and how, after vainly remonstrating with him for years, she at last organized a prayer campaign concerning him, and in less than three weeks from that time his horse ran away with him, and he was thrown out of the wagon and killed."

SODOM AND GOMORRAH are to be the centres of a revived population and a new commerce in lignite, with a railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem: "The country round about the ancient sites of Sodom, Gomorrah, and Babylon abounds in bitumen. This was the incentive to the building of the railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem, down the Euphrates Valley, for which the Sultan of Turkey has recently granted an English company the right of way. It will eventually connect with Egyptian railways. The Jews point to this project as a fulfilment of the prophecy in Isaiah xix., 23: 'In that day (when 'the Lord shall smite Egypt') there shall be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt and the Egyptian into Assyria.'" It is evident that the ancient curse pronounced on these wicked cities is subject to the statute of limitations.

THE JAFFUA (Ceylon) Catholic Guardian vouches for a "miracle" in that place on the feast of St. Sebastian: "A deaf-mute, born of non-Catholic parents at Manippay, a close relative of the Kachcherri shroff, and about twelve years of age, after having been allowed to remain for a couple of hours tied to the cross erected in front of the celebrated shrine, was able to hear and to repeat the word father, mother, etc., for the first time in her life. The parents of the girl, overjoyed at the circumstance, begged the Rev. Fr. Ghilini to administer to her the sacrament of baptism, which was performed in a most imposing manner. I relate the fact as I saw it. Let sceptics and scoffers say what they like. There is no denying a fact attested by hundreds of eyes and ears."

ALBERTO MARIO, one of the leading republicans of Italy, makes this declaration, worthy of the great-souled Mazzini, in the Rivista Repubblicana: "We are the declared enemies of the 'Internationalist' regicides, and the adversaries of the 'Barsanti' republicans.

Regicide is a crime! Barsantism is an immorality! So much for the principles. In regard to their consequences: Barsanti republicanism violates the dogma of the sovereignty of the people by the apotheosis of an insurrection, traitorously caused by small minorities, and it thus consolidates monarchy even better than plebiscites. Regicide Internationalism, in provoking universal reaction, increases misery, and renders the solution of the problem which it brings forward only more difficult. We, who are firm republicans of old date, send our congratulations to Humbert I., King of Italy, upon having escaped the dagger of the assassin."

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican says: "Another subject which it will be proper for Congress to go slow upon is Senator Lamar's scheme for a national department of health. By all means, put the naval surgeons and doctors at something useful if possible, but a department of health, on the model of the agricultural 'department' and the educational 'department' is too much. That Memphis editor hit it right when he said: 'We have had heroism; now let us have a sewer.' So we must remind Mr. Lamar that what they want down South, after all, is not a department of health, but sewers; and if he gets the former, his constituents will probably regard the sewers as quite superfluous. The States of Louisiana and Mississippi are just as able to maintain their own boards of health as the State of Massachusetts is. To quarantine, which must be largely national, we have no objection as a national function, but we see no call as yet for a national department."

WE FIND this curious case related in the Secular Review: "A lady, named England, recently dismissed her cook 'for refusing to join in the family prayers.' Believing herself injured, the domestic summoned her former mistress before the County Court, claiming a month's wages in lieu of the usual warning. Mrs. England apparently thought herself justified in summarily dismissing the cook for the misdemeanor of refusing to bend the knee with the other servants at the appointed times. The judge, Mr. Martineau, gave a verdict in favor of the cook, with costs against Mrs. England, declaring that, 'unless there was an express stipulation that she was to include attendance at family prayers in her duties, she was legally justified in refusing to join them. She went to her situation to cook, not to pray.' This just decision will probably teach other pious ladies who have servants to wait upon them that the feudal days have passed away, and with them the power of reducing their fellow-creatures to the level of serfs and vassals."

THE VINELAND (New Jersey) Independent is pretty sharp in its rebuke of a certain phase of religiosity: "Nothing tends more to develop a distrust and disbelief in religion than the cant and hypocrisy so often committed in its name. It is reported that Hunter, rallying from a fit of stupefaction in which he had failed to recognize his wife and children who made their last visit to him, sent this message to his wife: 'Tell my dear wife to prepare to meet me in heaven.' As a piece of insulting effrontery this has no equal. A man who had committed the greatest crime known to the law, and who had not evinced manhood enough to decently repent and meet his fate like a man, sends word to the mother of his children, whose life had been made almost unendurable by his own infamous conduct, and who has lived a spotless, devoted life, to meet him in heaven. The only word that fits the situation at all is 'bosh.' This great assurance of brazen-faced criminals, that the gallows will launch them into heaven, is becoming a stench to decent moral nostrils. If they are sure that they are the recipients of Infinite pardon and mercy, they ought to be reasonably humble and reverent about it, and not insult other people, who in morals and religious qualities are their superiors."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. K. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. B. F. ELSENTHAL.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 HON. ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MOOREHEAD.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tennafly, N. Y.
 MISS RALLIE HOLLEY.....Lansburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 HENRI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HANLEN.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....147 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HANLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HAYES, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. B. OLIVER, Wilkesville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. CUPPLAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARNETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. E. PRICH, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. J. J. RUSSELL, Harlingen.
 Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. FORTHE.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 Mrs. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 STRACONNE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, Ill.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Liberty versus License:

OR,

TRUE AND FALSE REFORMERS AND REFORMS.

A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF PROVIDENCE, R. I., JANUARY 12, 1879.

BY MRS. ANNA GARLIN SPENCER.

I make no excuse for coming before you to-day with a plain-spoken discussion of practical questions. We are old enough as an association, and earnest enough as individuals, to meet the problems of the day—especially those which bear directly upon our standing in the community as "Radicals"—with brave frankness and clear statement.

This Free Religious Association stands pledged to the "practice of virtue" as well as the "study of truth." Many wiser and far more brilliant teachers come before you, with speculative wings spread to catch the latest breezes in the upper air of thought. You will not refuse to spend an hour of earnest, if more humble, consideration of that which affects our every-day life, with one to whom the duties of free religion seem even more important than its rights or privileges.

In every great reformatory movement, whether in religion, general morals, or government, there are two supreme tests of character applied: the one to the world without, the other within the ranks of the reformers themselves. One stupid, blundering generation receives from a past, still less enlightened, a heritage of bad conditions, of half-statements of truths, of half-applications of those principles which are fully stated, of feeble and half-hearted devotion to accepted standards of right-living. Some morning hails the birth of one whose clear vision pierces to the heart of some idea but dimly perceived by his fellows. Outer influences, shaped by that power which is slowly fashioning the race to some fair pattern we can only dream of in our moments of brightest hope, are at work to make an epoch of deep significance. The occasion and the man together make some moral question paramount in importance above all other concerns. A crisis in some special detail of the slowly-developing standard of right approaches. A question waits on the judgment and devotion of a people for answer:—

"A touchstone,
 Which testeth all things in the land
 By its unerring spell."

Though the outward revolution be ever so gradual, though the questioning reformer be ever so gentle, there comes in every such moral crisis a great parting of the ways. Families, churches, societies divide; one part to cling to the old gods and the old traditions, the other to accept the "new duties" and the new readings of truth that the "new occasions teach." As the conflict deepens, the first seers of the freshly-revealed light are joined by a motley following. The discontented and fretful, to whom whatever is wrong; the restless and impatient, who long for the excitement of contest; the injured and wronged, who see great questions only through the colored glasses of personal grievance; the designing and self-seeking, who see in moral crises only a fine chance to attitudinize before a gaping crowd,—these all come up to the temple of the new faith to offer lip-service with those humble, devout, and loyal souls who truly worship. Then comes the inner test,—the sifting within the ranks of the reform. To the true reformer the whole life is a consecration; means are as much bound by the moral law of truth and purity as ends; methods must be as clean and wholesome as aims. But the true reformer is in so small a minority, he is so innocent of the wiles of the world, he makes such slow headway against the ignorance and inertia of the multitude, that the temptation is great to accept the help of those who for the sake of the principle he preaches will fight with the world's weapons. If the reformer be of those who think the universe circles round their pet principle, if he be of those who draw the scheme of millennial glory on the thumb-nail of their special measure, he will be likely, unless exceptionally devoted to the ideal and perfect truth, to join hands with all who profess his faith, whatever their personal character and aims, and whatever their crookedness of method. But if he be of those who have drunk deep at the fountains of Nature and history the lesson of patience, if he be of those who have the rare wisdom of proportion, and can see how their little field of moral effort stands related to the great garden of truth, he will plant his seed-thought with serene faith, watch it with diligent but not too anxious care, and be more solicitous to keep his whole work and life consistent with the gospel he professes, than to gain merely external converts by tricks of the politicians.

The difference between the unselfish devotion of the true reformer and the shallow self-seeking of those who come in to reap the reward at the end is generally perceived clearly, if slowly, by the world. But the real confusion which exists in the minds of many good commonplace people as to what constitutes reform, in a given case, is less easily made clear. Sooner or later character in the person makes itself manifest, whether it be the savor of life unto life, or of death unto death. But when the words "Radical," "Conservative," "Liberal," and "Bigot" are bandied back and forth as terms of reproach; when what was thought too daring a speculation yesterday is accepted to-day, and cast aside to-morrow with impatience as a timid half-truth,—who shall wonder that the naturally cautious fear all changes as leading the way to the undermining of established order, or be surprised that the naturally rash will hear naught of putting on brakes to check the reckless speed of any movement called "progress"?

We learn to distinguish between the true and false reformer by the self-sacrifice of life and purity of method of the one, and by the eager seeking for gains, or the use of bad means for securing good ends, by the other. Is there any test to apply to so-called reforms which will teach us as certainly the difference between true and false principles of progress? May we learn to judge of measures as of men? Two public teachers come before us with appeals. They both deplore existing wrongs, they both use many of the same words, "justice," "liberty," "truth," but they each charge the other with teaching evil. They may be equally earnest and honest in appearance, and both look eagerly forward to a future when their principles shall be accepted. If by their deeds we may come to know the false and true prophets may we also learn to distinguish between the false and true prophecy?

To answer this question, we must look more closely at the inner significance of those tests of character which reformers apply to the world and to themselves. It cannot too often be reiterated that in discussing moral problems we must make a broad distinction between the moral standard and the moral life of a people.

We must separate in our minds that ideal of what constitutes right living—an ideal modified by national differences, and by all experience and condition—from personal right-living itself. We must never forget that general moral enlightenment is one thing and individual morality is another. The ideal of goodness which an individual or nation may have depends largely upon external conditions of civilization, education, literature, and government. The fidelity of each soul to his ideal of goodness, be that ideal more or less developed, depends simply upon his devotion to the best he knows. Reformatory movements are first tests of our power to apprehend new statements of truth; and only second, tests of our fidelity to the known right. They are primarily efforts of growth to perfect the ideal standard of goodness, and only after we have received the new revelation are they measures of our moral devotion.

But suppose one be devoted to the right as he sees it, and also eager for the last revelation of truth; is he then sure of always being wise in his work of reform? Let the words of Madame Roland, condemned to die by the people for whose true advancement her statesman-like brain had schemed, and her devoted heart had loved and suffered, be our answer: "O Liberty, what crimes have been committed in thy name!"

Under the banners of "Freedom, Equality, and Fraternity," homes have been violated, priceless treasures destroyed, necessary and beneficent laws revoked, and personal rights denied by oppressive tyranny, as fatally as under the standards of crowned kings and rapacious nobles. In the name of "Progress," the crystallized wisdom of centuries has been melted in the fierce heat of some consuming and suicidal passion. It is as often the people as the high-priests who cry, "Crucify him, crucify him!" Russia's Emperor emancipates millions of serfs of his own free will. Democratic America passes a fugitive-slave bill, and only relaxes her iniquitous hold upon the slave when the lightning of war paralyzes her arm. Conservative England recognizes the humanity, and consequent equality of rights, of the women; progressive America puts all its political freedom for women into the "Goddess of Liberty," which mocks the loyal devotion of her disfranchised daughters.

My friends, be not deceived. There is a cant of "reform" and "progress," as well as a cant of "conservatism" and "established order,"—a cant to me more insufferable than any other, because more inconsistent and shallow. That a law or condition or belief is old, is no sign in itself that such is wrong; that a law, condition, or belief is new, is no sign that such is right. That we train under democratic colors, is no proof that we respect the rights of all our fellow-men. That we swear by the king or the pope, is no proof that we are oppressors in wish or act. How then? If the test of newness and the test of name be not enough to determine whether a so-called reform be true or false, by what more interior analysis may we discover its quality?

Let. Put it in the witness-box, and question and cross-question it as to its motive principles. "Are you, O audacious theory, daring to oppose yourself to the practice of ages,—are you the mistress of license or the wife of liberty? Are you trying to get outside the dominion of law, or are you appealing from the letter to the spirit of law? Do you disobey the lower, that the higher obligation may be sacred, and for that reason alone? Are you so in love with your own individuality that you self-confidently oppose it to the united will of your kind, or do you yield in fearful reverence to the impulsion of the hidden law within, and only because that bids you do so take issue with the world? Are you the butterfly offspring of some exuberant fancy, or were you born of the sweat and tears of earnest thought? In your scheme of progress, is the moral law pronounced obsolete, or has duty the same transcendent place she held in noble minds in the past, only with her features touched to greater perfection by the hand of the ideal? Is freedom with you a means or an end? Do you seek a changed condition for itself alone, because you tire of the old, or because your unchastened will frets at all restraints? or do you seek it because through it you desire and hope to reach an easier virtue, a purer life, a nobler devotion for yourself and the world?"

Then, after thus searching the heart of the so-called reform, we must examine it in its history lesson. "Have you, O thought-child of to-day, been to school to the ages? Have you traced out your lineal ancestry, and can you prove by your pedigree your right to existence and control? Have you historical proof that you are the 'next thing' in moral growth? Have you the facts to give us respecting the successful working of your parent-theories? Are you the logical sequence of anything that has been, and that you can tell us good things about? Are you the natural outgrowth of some great tendency which by its universality is proved to be the work of 'whatsoever forces draw the ages on'? Come you to consciously fulfil the old law in its latest interpretation?"

If the questioned reform can clearly prove to the mind open to conviction that, first, its motive principle is obedience to a growing ideal of goodness rather than a desire to gratify wilful impulses; and, secondly, that it is a logical link in that growing ideal, we may safely pledge to it our supreme devotion. If, on the contrary, the movement bearing the sacred name of "Progress" be found to be at heart the lust of unbridled license of self-expression at the expense of social order, or if it be found to be an abnormal and ephemeral disease of reaction from abuses of the past, then he must oppose it with equal devotion.

It seems to me that never before in any country or time, was there such pressing need to apply these tests to self-styled reforms as in the America of to-day. Our soil is new and rank; weeds and flowers of thought grow with equal luxuriance. Our institutions breed free speculation, and free speculation reaches wise or foolish conclusions according to the trained capacity to reason, and depth of true culture, or the lack of these qualities, in the speculator. Our air stimulates to quick and easy revolt against existing laws, and revolt is good or evil in its results according to the strength or weakness of the moral life of the revolutionist.

Let us try in cautious self-distrust, but with brave, earnest frankness, to apply these tests to some of the great moral questions before us to-day. We can only touch briefly upon each, more to indicate the line of further thought than to exhaustively discuss our subjects.

And first we must speak of education, always the most vital interest in morals. I mean by education all the personal training which one generation gives another—training in character and in mind. The old theory of moral education was of repression, of constant watching for the worst, of authoritative control, of unquestioning obedience to unexplained commands. The so-called reform in education has for its theory cultivation of individuality, hopeful confidence in the best, control attenuated to the least possible shade of authority, careful explanation to the child of why he should do, or should not do, everything exacted of or denied to him. In general direction this is true reform in education, since people capable of self-government must be trained to independent judgment and self-poise of character in youth. Yet there are some dangerous inferences from this modern theory which strip us of the valuable restraint which was in the old system of training, without replacing it with any new power capable of doing the same work. When cultivation of the child's individuality results in a deference to its whims and fancies which leads the child to feel that the universe is its play-house, and constructed solely with regard to its desires, we have the not uncommon spectacle of a spoiled nature, out of which can grow no fruit of disciplined will. When confidence in the divine in human nature subjects the child to temptations, to outside evil, before the mould of his virtue has hardened to resistance in the atmosphere of home, it results in that fearful increase of juvenile depravity which shocks us in the police records of to-day. When the lessening of the authority of parent and teacher is carried so far as to defraud the child of that training in the habit of obedience which was the safeguard of an earlier generation, it results in a pert, wilful, self-sufficient, and shallow independence which is the worst possible material out of which to build a democratic government. True reform in education is stimulating that sense of moral obligation which can alone render outward restraints unnecessary by its superior control of the life. True reform in education is steeping the child in scientific knowledge of the dread results of all unwise and immoral actions in his own life, and, by way of inheritance, to all who come after him; a knowledge which would make the terrors of an imaginary hell forever needless, by showing how sternly and irrevocably we are held to judgment by our own deeds. True reform in education is not ignoring, but persistently using, the old carefully-cultivated obedience to parent and teacher as a stepping-stone to that habitual self-discipline by which the child becomes willing servant to that law of right written in his own constitution.

In mental training we find, also, dangerous inferences from our "reform" theories in education. The old deference to established canons, the old fixed curricula, the old respect for trained instructors, has reacted so far that we often leave the student to wander at his own vagrant will, or under the guidance of pretentious ignorance, through a pathless forest of knowledge; to get laboriously, after many mistakes, a glimpse of that which trained wisdom might have led him to without delay. Said a man who had spent many years in the study of art in its application to practical industries, and had spent many more years in learning the best method of teaching what knowledge he had gained on this subject: "Why, here in America, my training goes for nothing. My word on art education is not thought by your legislative bodies—who decide whether I am to instruct the children or not—as any better worth heeding on the subject to which I have devoted my life, than that of some man who in a day's impulsive work gets out a dashing prospectus of 'a drawing-book series.' That I have gone to school to past art, have investigated the present industrial conditions of the Old World as well as the new, that I am thoroughly educated in my profession, gives me no more power than the assumptions of some educational adventurer who has never mastered the A B C of pedagogic science give him." True reform in mental training, while it removes that slavish deference to the old which hinders advance, reverences thoroughness of preparation for instruction too much to allow untrained minds to deal with the mental life of children.

In government we find similar disorders resulting from mistaking the show for the substance of reform. We hang out our gay banners, and fire our noisy cannon, in honor of the removal of the seat of government from the king's palace to the people's "town-meeting house." And we do well; although, if we went up to our temples of State in solemn worship of all-conquering but easily mistaken freedom, we should do better. But even while we rejoice, we find that democracy works both ways,—to the elevation of the lower classes by giving them political power, and to the cheapening of political power by making it the easy possession of all. When political service is high business, demands severe and lengthy preparation, and confers real and permanent distinction, it is sought by those who raise it still higher by their own transcendent qualities and powers. When political service is within the reach of all, it may easily become the stepping-stone for personal ambition or greed, the ignorant and easily-shirked play of the amateur, or the illegitimate weapon of the zealous but unwise religionist. True reform in government meant always what it means now,—not only growing application of the sacred truth of equality of rights for all human kind, but equal carefulness of training in political science, equal cultivation of personal responsibility in government, equal stimulation of enthusiasm for public service, of the reigning many as of the reigning few. I would that every boy and girl in America were trained like the favored crown princes of monarchic lands, to a true conception of the duties, the powers, the honors, of sovereigns! I would that in America the ark of the covenant of our political liberty were deemed so sacred that a man's arm should wither if he touched it for unholy ends! Only by giving the substance of self-discipline and true culture of character can we make it safe to write on our statute books the name and show of self-government.

I turn now to the great labor problem. Labor-reform has one face turned threateningly toward society to-day which should be carefully tested. The feud between poverty and riches is as old as the inequalities of fortune and as bitter as ungratified desire. The cruel law of gain, that "to him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath," has always raised contentions. The selfishness of power and the vulgarity of display on the one hand, the jealousy of inefficiency and the hunger of the dissatisfied on the other, have resulted in many a social revolution. And that reform in the administration of business is needed, none can deny. That human-brotherhood theory we talk so grandly about shows in satirical light beside the fact that, all over the world, the many overtop the idle few, the multitudes are briers of wood and drawers of water for those to whom all labor is low and common. Something is wrong and must be righted before the word "Fraternity" shall be sought but a mockery, so long as any class in our midst are in actual suffering for lack of work or from insufficient pay. Something needs reforming, so long as opportunities for study, for social enjoyment, for refined ways of living, for healthful and pretty homes, for education of children, and for the proper care of the sick are denied, by their poverty, to any industrious class among us. They are right who protest against a condition of things which places such a premium on superiority in mere money-getting power. Yet are all the remedies proposed true reforms? Most of the communistic theories advocated look toward some arbitrary distribution of wealth. They indicate some way by which the State is to step in between the employer and the employed, and adjust the relation in the interest of the latter. Now, far be it from us, who have watched with interest the increase and refinement of the functions of government, who have seen vital and delicate questions of family relation, education, and charity handled and settled by law,—far be it from us to declare that the State will never grapple with and successfully settle the labor problem. For aught we know, the dreamy experiments of the "Transcendentalists" in a community-life whose industrial conditions are settled by all, for all, in purely democratic caucus,—a life in which, as at "Brook Farm," dishes are washed to the rhythm of classical music, and potatoes are planted and dug to Emersonian periods,—a life in which all, however gifted, help bear the physical burdens of labor, and in which all, however mentally undeveloped, have leisure and incentive for devotion to the artistic and intellectual,—for aught we know, such a community-life as this of our "Transcendental" epoch waits in the future of government for our children's children. But meanwhile we test all labor-reform movements with the query whether they seek to alter bad conditions through law or against law. However justice and equality of opportunity are to be secured to the industrially oppressed, we may be sure it will not be by "striking" against that order which is the priceless growth of ages; it will not be by removing arbitrarily that sense of ownership of property and land which has been such a mighty power in giving stability to social institutions; it will not be by violently destroying that love of gain and possibility of personal accumulation which have been such wonderful incentives to civilizing commerce and refining art. The spirit of too much of our labor-reform talk is that of the man in Boston who made one of the processions of "workingmen" who besieged the Mayor last winter with somewhat threatening appeals for work. Driven into a corner by the crowd, I heard this man say fiercely to his comrade, "This petitioning is all tomfoolery. What we want to do is to go up on Beacon Hill, smash in the windows, and take what we need! Then the rich men would see they'd got to do something."

The "reform" that has the heart of such lawlessness, such ignorance, such class hatred, we must fight with the true kindness of severity and the quick vindication of assailed order, however tender our hearts may be for the poor, misguided multitude in whom the criminal neglect and selfish oppression of the more gifted and fortunate have bred this frenzy of revolt.

Let us turn now, last of all, to what is called the "social reform," in some of its many phases.

History teaches that the institution of law-protected monogamic marriage is a plant of slow growth. Our present social order developed from indiscriminate lust, through patriarchal association of wives and concubines, to a condition in which the home is the result of the life-long union of one man with one woman, and its sacredness counted above all transient impulses, however strong. Latin Christianity, more than any other force, has set for us this mould of fixedness to love's vows, of statute-bound devotion for the one first publicly chosen, whether or not the choice would fall on the same one again, could a new casting of lots be made. But neither advancing civilization nor religious teaching has as yet held the passions of mankind within the prescribed bounds. The most that has been done has been to define the home, and press unsanctioned indulgence farther and farther back from it. Since increasing education and social power of women have given them more independence, this pressure backward of the tides of animalism has been more marked and determined. And at last we have associations of many women and a few men, pledged to work in public and private for the repression of vice and final extinction of all expression of sexual attraction which cannot find room to dwell in chaste and permanent marriage. But the signal of such a war of extermination, whether sounded to the world as at the late "International Conference" at Geneva, or whispered under breath in parlor meetings of "moral education associations," or dumbly and quite unconsciously expressed in the expanding influence of womanhood, this signal of radical reform finds its note to be but one of many, all professing equal concern for purity, the rights of woman, and the sanctity of love. On every side spring up social reformers, Mormons, who, sincerely believing that one code of virtue can never hold men and women to identical restrictions, give the stronger passions of man legal recognition and honorable dwelling in the marriage bond, by plurality of wives. Oneida Communists and other social experimenters, who think personal attraction does not indicate perfectly that complementary harmony which will alone secure the best inheritance for children, advocate State ownership of the channels of transmitted qualities. The doctors of medicine, who find that the unmentionable vices which drain the soil about our homes have, like the public sewers, openings by which the foul miasma of disease breathes its poison back into the purity of the nursery itself,—these physicians often see no other remedy than placing these escape-valves of society under legal license and regulation. The "free-lover" who sees all social troubles to be the result of arbitrary dictation to the affections, who thinks most social evils result either from failure to mate or mismatching, would leave the gate in and out of marriage wide open to whosoever would change his loosely-assumed bond. These and many others fill the air with conflicting theories. And doubtless, where either is sincere, they have truths to tell of existing wrongs. The Mormon points to our statistics of prostitution, and asks with pertinent scorn, "Are you the virtuous people who can instruct us?" The communist in family life points to its well-cared-for children, and then to the neglected and badly-born little ones who throng our city streets, and asks, "Is this the way your selfish marriage of personal impulse cares for its fruitage?" The advocate of licensed prostitution calls upon us to justify the murder of the innocents by the effects of vice, which he claims may be palliated, while we engage in the Utopian task of removing vice itself. The "free-lover" points with emphasis to the desecration of the marriage bond by the union of unloving souls; he pictures the evil of inherited discord and contention in the child, and talks of the subjection of women under the sanction of Church and State. To these charges of existing evil, what can we do but bow our foreheads to the dust and acknowledge our sins? Yet not the less, but with the more searching questions, must we try the remedies proposed. History gives us our answer to the Mormon: "Your more primitive type of family life has proved itself inadequate to the demands of a high state of civilization. Child-culture is too expensive business in refined communities to be carried on so extensively." To the family communist, the mighty and sacred instincts of personal choice and individual parenthood stand opposed. To the advocate of licensed prostitution, we have the actual facts to prove against him that his palliative does not work, that it stimulates the cause of disease by giving a fancied security, while omnipotent Nature exacts her pound of flesh for every sin of indulgence. To the "free-lover" we own that the body of marriage is held more sacred than its soul in many high places of earth; we admit that in homes where the framed certificate of marriage shows no flaw, tragedies of dominant bestiality on the one side, and dumb submissive agony on the other, cry to heaven for revenge; we know as well as he how unfortunate is that child whose birth-dower is not of love.

Yet when he bids us reform by removing all external obligations because the spiritual laws are often violated, and rarely understood in their true significance, he babbles of the criminal's heaven,—a place without law. Go to history again for your lesson. First, unbridled desire, only bounded by the power to capture and command. Next, the homestead land staked off, and the populous harem built. Then the germ of monogamic marriage in the absolute ownership of one woman only,—that ownership made necessary to protect the wife from the brutality and lust of other men than her husband. Then the more honored wife, with legally-protected concubines, as in Rome, or with socially uncondemned mistresses, as in Greece, to dispute her power with her husband. Then the marriage covenant of our civilization, which forbids all legal recognition of any union save of one to one, and makes all illicit connections more and more condemned by society. Would that we could go further and say: last, the sacredness of the marriage bond universally respected in spirit and in letter. But, alas, we cannot. Still the mournful procession of those women whom Mr. Lecky calls "sorrowful priestesses of civilization" parades the streets. Still wasteth at noonday that pestilence of vice which walketh in darkness. Still good women bear about with them the hateful consciousness that a gulf is fixed between them and others of their sex; a gulf of man-made, one-sided laws, conditions, and penalties; a gulf bridged by men who have free access either way. Still mothers shudder as the little feet grow larger and travel the world's highways, lest they sink in the pitfalls of evil. But who that has thought fails to see that to have driven a vice out of a legal home, out of a social vantage, into the outer desolation of dishonored hiding, is to have well begun its overthrow?

Until the home was firmly built on the undoubted purity of one woman who was its head, until that home was protected from all legal and recognized social affiliation with vice, neither the dignity of motherhood nor the power of woman's purity could be sufficiently respected by men to begin the work of thorough restraint without. Now, but not before, we may well look forward with hope to the time when the teachings and influence of pure men and of brave, free women shall be potent to place every instinct of humanity under the control of reason.

And in the light of these thoughts, how stand the theories of those we have mentioned? Mark you, they are theories for the most part based on the principle of making indulgence safe or legal. They all beat against the laws which have recorded the growing sense of permanent obligation in the marriage bond. As such, we protest against them as false reforms. He who teaches such doctrines, whether he be the coarse fellow who seeks warrant for license, or the one whose pure heart and earnest purpose have been beguiled by the semblance of reform, is a dangerous leader.

Because the sealed house built for your marriage love by law is sometimes uncomfortably close, would you go back to the gypsy's tented camp of a night? Because the walled fortress of childhood's protection has not yet fully secured the home against the raids of secret vice, would you tear that fortress down? Because the law binds where you would be unbound, would you revoke the slowly-distilled wisdom of the ages to gratify your impulse? Because the passions are still dangerously strong, would you remove those slowly accumulating restraints which give those true reformers who work toward more and more chastened desires a place of vantage to work from?

The line of real historic development of social order is in the direction of more and more sacrificing the personal wish to the combined wisdom and the good of the whole. True reform in social conditions is that which fills the body of home which law has made with the soul of a self-ruled virtue. True reform in marriage is to intensify the feeling of responsibility to the future respecting it; it is to purge the decisions leading to it, more and more, of sensuality; it is to call wisdom as well as love into the high council-chamber that determines the happiness or unhappiness of two human beings, and fatefully predicts the inheritance of others. True reform in marriage is to deepen the sense of unselfish devotion to family interests, and to restrain more and more that passion which, governed, is crowned with creative power,—which, ungoverned, works the ruin of all life.

I know of but one principle which can guide us safely through the tangled maze of conflicting theories of reform on all vexed questions,—that principle which has been exemplified by all great reformers: namely, the principle of following up the first glimmerings of moral obligation recorded in existing law to their logical ends, and to their more spiritual signification. The appeal of the true reform is always to the sense of duty, not to the power of the personal wish. They who lead the race to higher revelations of truth and nobler devotions to right do so always by the one road of unselfish consecration to the law of truth and right. And true reformers show only cautious and fearful tampering with those statute rules of human conduct which have been slowly deduced from the experience of ages. True reformers only break with existing laws and conditions for the purpose of building wider and more stately dwelling-places for the growing idea whose germ they find in such laws and conditions. Increasing liberty is only found in more perfect obedience to better understood and expressed law. All else which bears the sacred name of liberty is license in masquerade. Revolt against the world's commands is only justified when those commands prohibit us from obeying a higher law.

I have taken up these topics to-day because I think the time has come when the tests which radical religion applies to the outside world are turning inward. Radical religion, if it means anything, means the attempt to work out in actual life the theories of rational, philosophic, thought-respecting government, moral standards, and personal virtue. Speculation is not life; scientific investigation is not practice; but religion is living, vital, practical devotion to whatever ideals of right and truth we hold. It is good and helpful to talk about "truth as we see it," but religion is a blasphemy on the lips of an individual or organization which does nothing but talk, which does not seek to exemplify itself, and make manifest in the world its latest-born thought. But practical efforts of all sorts bring about our ears this din of opposing theories. And we cannot shirk the hard task of argument, and often antagonistic argument, if we are to do any work in the world. Radical religion has now to meet, to question, to sift, the theories of all those who call themselves of its order. Free religious organizations, if they are to live, must define themselves on the great problems of morals. Individual leaders must show whether they are of those who seek to reform the world by fulfilling law, or by opposing law. No other force in the community except radical religion has power to teach the true principles of progress; for no other is at once bound to perfect freedom of speculative thought and perfect devotion to discovered law. Within our own ranks must go on the conflict begun outside; the conflict which will separate the true from the false in so-called progress; the conflict which will show, not only who is with us, but who is of us; the conflict which will try our own souls to prove whether we are seekers of that personal indulgence which would make our selfish wish the rule of life, or whether we are devout and earnest followers of that sacred purpose of the universe, to bind all in one holy order of obedience, which is revealed more and more clearly year by year.

May each soul here present be found the advocate of the true and not the false, as we go on to the fierce heat of battle which, I believe, awaits us in the near future!

EDUCATION IN THE SOUTH.

A GEORGIA REPUBLICAN BELIEVES THAT FREE SCHOOLS ARE THE ONLY MEANS OF BREAKING UP THE SOLID SOUTH.

A resident of Georgia, who holds a prominent position in the Republican party in that State, and is now present in this city, was visited by a Tribune reporter recently, to whom he spoke freely on the state of political affairs in the South, with which he is thoroughly conversant. "The Tribune's correspondence from South Carolina," said he, "exposing the systematic intimidation of Republican voters in that State, and the fraudulent methods employed to secure a 'solid South' for the Democratic party, is accomplishing a good work. Seventeen years after the act of secession, the spirit which actuates the leaders of the Southern Democracy is the same. They have not learned one new principle; their defeat only taught them discretion. State sovereignty is their political creed now, as it was before the war; instead of slavery they want a feudal control of labor. To establish this, they are fighting for the control of the government. This they will attain by political action if possible, through the political sentimentalism of some Northern States it may be, but by force if necessary and possible. They do not propose to take the field again as rebels. If the old issues are to be fought over again, the South will fight from the position of the government, against the North as the rebels. These are the views of the leaders, the landed aristocracy, a class embracing only a small proportion of the people, but by reason of their thorough organization, singleness of purpose, superior education and desperation, the absolute masters of the Southern Democracy. Many good men act with the Democratic party in the South who do not approve of the policy advocated by the Bourbon leaders, but the latter control the party and compel the masses to obey their commands."

"Do you believe these leaders desperate enough to plunge us into another war?"

"They are desperate enough for anything. Do you imagine that the men who through social ostracism, vilification, intimidation, force, fraud, and murder have gained the control of all the governments of the Southern States would stop at anything to accomplish the designs for which the South has already suffered so much? They would fight again, but their chief hope lies in legislation. With this view they are pushing all their ablest men to the front, and the delegation representing the South in the incoming Congress will be found one of the strongest it has had there for generations, and will be doubly strong from its singleness of purpose and devotion to that 'righteous cause' to which through force, fraud, and ballot-stuffing it owes its presence there with so solid a front."

"How do you account for the hold the Democratic leaders have over the Southern Democracy?"

"The prestige of birth and education. Were education as general in the South as it is in the North, such a thing as a 'solid South' would be out of the question. With a good system of free schools at work in Georgia, the power of the Bourbons would be broken forever in ten years; without such a system, it seems likely to perpetuate itself. Common schools, free to all, are the only means by which the old feudal doctrine of a privileged class can ever be eradicated from the Southern nature. When seven millions of whites and four millions of blacks in the South have been educated to read and think, and vote for themselves, and to regard themselves in all the civil attributes of manhood and freedom as the peers of the one million landed aristocracy, the South will begin to realize what American civilization is,—and not till then. I have helped make education the watchword of the Republican party in Georgia. Through it we are attracting moderate Democrats to work with us, while we have aroused, if possible, a more bitter antagonism among the Bourbons. They see in the free system of education we advocate the downfall of their supremacy and the building up of a civilization that knows and acknowledges no superiority of race. To defeat independent Democrats who advocate schools for the enfranchisement of the South, the Bourbons have arrayed all their forces of lies, fraud, and intimidation, with the same bitterness as though fighting against Republicans. For they realize that to yield the State governments to the friends of free education would be to forego all their schemes against the national government."

"Do they not realize that to consolidate the South means a consolidation of the North?"

"The result of your November elections opened their eyes to that in a sudden and unexpected manner. It amazed them, but that it will divert them from their purpose is not to be hoped. The Southern leaders may be turned from their path, but it will only be to seek another leading to the same end. The North has always been slow to comprehend or believe the intrigues of the South. It did not understand the political danger in 1861 until the war was actually begun. If it is wise, it will not be caught a second time. Southern aims are the same now as then, only their tactics are changed. Southern leaders watch closely the course of events in the North and shape their policy accordingly. Let Northern Republicans imitate them in watchfulness, and assist the cause of free education in the South as the speediest means of putting an end to all distinctions of birth and class. Free education also means the building up of the Republican party in the South. It will detach a large following of the whites from the Democracy, to which they are only bound by the chains of ignorance. And whenever the Republican party shows itself able to protect and advance the blacks, it is sure of the colored vote."

"And, finally, there is one more important point. The North must be brought to see that the conversion of the South to Republican ideas must be a political missionary work, if it is ever to be realized in our times. The ideas have been planted there, and are of such vitality that they will grow, although left to themselves. But if they are to amount to anything in the present, they must be aided from the North. The Republican party is well organized in the South, but it is without men thoroughly imbued with the ideas of true republicanism, able to cope with the leaders of the wealthy class. With this class it is a money fight, for the control of labor is what they seek, and that means money. As the field now stands it is money, supported by indifference and ignorance, against the principles of education and enlightenment which are organized in the Republican party. If you can detach the indifferent and ignorant support from the wealthy leaders, you can convert the South to republicanism. The way to this lies through education.—N. Y. Tribune, January 1.

DEATH OF THEODORE BROWN.

[We are pained to learn by the Worcester Daily Spy of January 27 that another warm friend of THE INDEX, and one of the stockholders of the Index Association who never neglected to do his part in sustaining it, has gone to his long rest. Though personally unacquainted with Mr. Brown, we know that every good cause is the poorer for his death. It is such men as he who give liberalism its chief claim to public respect. His relatives have our sincere sympathy in their great loss.—Ed.]

The death of Mr. Theodore Brown, which occurred suddenly Saturday morning, removes another of the men who have been prominently identified with the business interests of Worcester for the last half-century. Mr. Brown came to this city from Providence in 1828, when but sixteen years of age. After working as an apprentice with his brothers Albert and William, at that time and for many years after the leading custom clothiers of central Massachusetts, he was admitted to the firm, which was known as W. & A. Brown & Co., the other members being Albert, who died in 1854, and William, who died in 1872. Since that time he has retained his interest in the business, which is now conducted under the firm name of W. & T. Brown, and is the oldest clothing house in the city. In his business relations Mr. Brown's dealings were always marked by the strictest integrity, and his business associates will ever remember his career among them as an example worthy of imitation and perpetuation. Socially, he was one of the most agreeable of men. With a refined literary taste, which was most carefully cultivated, a retentive memory and pleasing manner, his society was much sought, and among his large circle of acquaintances he was ever a welcome guest, his ready and brilliant but refined wit, his keen appreciation of the humorous, and his superior conversational powers making him a most agreeable companion. He had the happy faculty of always looking upon the brightest side of life, was ever cheerful and cordial in his greeting, and never refused his aid in furthering a reform, social or moral, giving freely of his time to any movement in either direction, and materially forwarding the work by his close and earnest application. Liberal in his treatment of all questions, he respected and attentively listened to the opinions expressed by others, his way of presenting his broad and generous views winning for him the respect of his most radical opponents upon matters under consideration. Whether discussing a serious or humorous question, his conversational powers were such that he was enabled to command attention and disarm criticism by his frankness, sincerity, and never-failing geniality. Although sixty-seven years of age, he was young in heart and manner. He was alert and youthful in his carriage to the last, and he kept his boyish heart although he was nearly at the door of the allotted threescore years and ten, and was never regarded otherwise than youthful in years by the younger generation, who were always glad to have him with them. So much was he interested in the things of to-day that those who enjoyed his society hardly realized that he had seen so many years of active life. His death was sudden and unexpected. He was about as usual on Thursday, was somewhat indisposed on Friday and kept to the house. Early Saturday morning he complained of an oppressed feeling about the chest, turned upon his side and died quietly and almost instantly. The immediate cause of his death was shown by a post-mortem examination to have been fatty degeneration of the heart. Mr. Brown was a veteran walker. No one knew so well as he the best attractions of the woods and fields of Worcester and the surrounding towns. He was their constant friend and visitor, and knew the names and habits of the various birds, and where to find the wild flowers which are the most curious and rare. In this he strongly resembled Henry D. Thoreau, his friend, while living, and whom he has now gone to join. His friendly relationship to other men of letters is well known. The fact that he was himself an occasional contributor to the columns of the periodicals of the day is not so well understood. Harper's Magazine, in its collection of wit and humor, has had articles of which he was the author. In another vein is the following, which he sent to THE INDEX, and which we cut from that journal:—

AN ENIGMA.

More subtle than sunlight am I;
The life of all action and thought;
Without me your best projects die,
With me your worst may be fraught.

Men invent many ways me to bind,
And exclusively make me their own;
And, when feeling most sure me to find,
They're surprised to find I have flown.

The Shekinahs I build and forsake;
Contented in few long to stay;
Strange new ones 'tis my business to make,
At this game forever I play.

My realm is all Nature and art;
In high and low places I dwell;
Of heaven I am the best part,
And also the worst part of hell.

SWITZERLAND.

GENEVA, Dec. 27.

Yet another draft of law, for the consideration of the Grand Council of Geneva! This time it is nothing less than the question of the separation of Church and State, a delicate and thorny subject, which will probably entail the burial of more than one political party in this town and elsewhere. The problem is an exceedingly complex one in this place, on account of its national traditions, its geographical position, surrounded as it is by French population ignorant and intensely Roman Catholic, and its ecclesiastical properties, etc., etc.—all matters which tend to entangle the question; and it needs some moral courage to face the discussion, particularly as it is not the first time it has been mooted and set aside. We must, however, recognize the fact that the present is an unusually favorable moment to bring it forward; the stern experiences of the last few years have shown with what a strong arm the civil power can regulate religious matters; how undesirable it is, at the same time, that it should turn theologian; and how ready it is to touch to the quick the many inconveniences of this ally marriage between Church and State,—a union which embitters the existence of both. One day it is the State that oppresses and tyrannizes over the Church, the next it is the Church that encroaches upon the rights and dignity of the State; peace scarcely ever exists between the two, and is never of long duration. Let us, then, separate the two; let us pronounce a divorce between the State and Church! Such is the proposal now started. Mr. H. Fazy, the author of this proposal, hopes to solve the whole problem in five short paragraphs; but even this, the Journal de Genève finds too complicated, and demands that the question should be put purely and simply before society in this form: Does the Genevese public want the separation of the Church from the State, or does it not? If the sovereign people pronounce in the affirmative, then the Grand Council should be charged to elaborate a law on the subject in conformity with that principle, a law essentially practical, but carefully respecting the numerous interests and even the prejudices attached even in these days to so-called National or State religions. It is not possible to treat pastors and curés in the same way as one does servants with whom one is discontented, by simply turning them off; society is too ceremonious and gentlemanly for that. Then, again, there is the question of edifices, churches, temples, and presbyteries, and especially, among these, the question of the Cathedral of St. Pierre. We do not refer to the venerable building itself alone, although that is of great artistic value for its own sake, but because it is a sort of symbol or standard of Genevese Protestantism, a sacred fane, a sort of Temple of Mecca, if we may be allowed the comparison, intimately associated with the Reformation and the rise of Protestantism all over the world. Should religious sentiment ever so change in Geneva as to permit the celebration of High Mass in the Cathedral of St. Pierre, Protestantism will have suffered a fearful blow, and the bones of the martyrs of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries might well tremble in their tombs. To whom, then, shall St. Pierre belong? If we understand Mr. Fazy aright, he would make it an inalienable public property. The city of Geneva should be its guardian, and should still devote it to public worship, subject to the requirements of the State for State ceremonies, elections, etc.; but we fail to find any guarantee that Protestantism shall have its rights in the Church respected. In this matter, we see a gordian knot; one not to be cut with a sword, but to be carefully and laboriously unravelled.

As to the effect of this law on parties, we can already see that the "liberal-radicals" will pronounce energetically against any separation whatever. They created a National Catholic Church, and they will support their own creation to the end. On the other hand, the conservatives are divided: some are rather afraid of what to-morrow may bring forth; and others on the contrary warmly support the project, so as to be able to fling a heavy stone at the rationalists, who now take the leading part in the official administration of the Protestant Church.

The "Old Radicals," Mr. Fazy's party, favor the scheme most; and as regards the ultramontanes they of course are dissidents; they receive no money from the State coffers; they have been turned out of all their churches! What can they do? Their organ, the Courrier de Genève, speaks ambiguously; it reproduces Mr. Fazy's speeches and arguments, but makes no comment; but nevertheless we should not be surprised if that party were to resolutely support the proposed separation, in spite of the Syllabus having pronounced an anathema on the principle and its supporters; but heaven is forgiving, and much more so the Vatican; especially under such a Pope as Leo XIII., who seems to be inclining more and more to a liberal policy.—Continental and Swiss Times.

A SELF-SUPPORTING CHURCH.

The Evening Post has long been of opinion that the American theory of a self-supporting Church ought to be carried to its full and legitimate conclusion; that the separation between the Church and the State ought to be complete. It has always seemed to us that the Roman Catholic claim, that secular education ought to be combined with religious instruction is substantially conceded by Protestants when they insist upon reading the Bible in the common schools, or upon introducing any religious exercises whatever there; or, at all events, that they throw away the advantage of a clear, logical, and consistent position in resisting the demands of Roman Catholics when they take the ground that religion has any relation to free public instruction more than it has to the collection of taxes or the administration of the sheriff's office.

The absolute separation of Church and State should include the total discontinuance of contributions of public money, direct or indirect, to the support of any religious establishment. We have never been able to see the slightest difference in principle between the appropriation of a certain sum of money raised by tax to a particular church and the release of that church from a tax on its property to the same amount. The cost of the benevolent act in either case falls upon the tax-payers generally. In the one case the sum is levied directly upon all but the church property. In the other case all property but that of the church is obliged, in consequence of this exemption, to pay a larger share of the expenses of government.

A secular newspaper which contends for this absolute separation of Church and State perhaps incurs a suspicion of indifference to religious education, or a carelessness as to whether the Church is maintained or not. We are therefore glad to receive timely and valuable reinforcement such as comes from Christ Church in this city. In his sermon Sunday night the Rev. Dr. Shipman, the rector of that Protestant Episcopal parish, took strong ground on both of the questions to which we have just referred. Remarkable on the strangeness of the truth that it took Christian nations more than seventeen centuries to begin to give effect to the words of the founder of Christianity,—“My kingdom is not of this world,”—he showed how in some particulars an effort is still made to unite the two. While he opposed the Romanist's scheme to “propagate religion by means of State funds raised for the support of common schools,” he held that the Protestants were “wrong in claiming a legal right to have the Bible read as a religious book at all. In omitting to teach religion,” said he, “the public school is not irreligious.” It simply leaves that branch of education where it properly belongs, in the family and the church.” In respect to the exemption of church property from taxes Dr. Shipman gave some interesting statistics. It seems that the value of this property is now about five hundred millions of dollars. Before many years, at the present rate of increase, it will be three thousand millions. In respect to all this property he contended that nothing more could be asked than is asked in behalf of other property, that it shall have the protection of the government. “That which is protected by government may justly be compelled to maintain it.” When the operation of this rule is suspended the government really in effect contributes to the support of the owner of the property which profits by the suspension. Dr. Shipman's arguments against the direct or indirect support of the Church, in whole or in part, by the State were substantially those which we have presented. His conclusions were set forth in this forcible way:—

“I would like to see all church property throughout this land taxed to the last dollar's worth, not merely as a matter of justice, but in the interest of religion itself. The effect of anything like compulsion in the matter of religion is to engender prejudice against it. The Church cannot surrender her proud position of being a kingdom not of this world without suffering for it in the blight of her spiritual life. The churches may fight this question, but sooner or later the battle will go against them, and their retreat, I fear, will be not only with dented armor, but with banners soiled.”

The church which cannot maintain itself without the help of the State may well be allowed to fail; but we believe that a curious lack of faith is shown by the contention that the Church cannot be wholly self-supporting. If all public subsidies should be withdrawn from it its prosperity would not be impaired in the slightest degree; while some embarrassing questions which now and then arise in the administration of public affairs would be set at rest finally by a consistent application of the principle of an absolute separation of Church and State.—N. Y. Evening Post.

CHURCH DEBT-LIFTING.

It often happens in the trial or a suit at law that what is kept-out of the case is of more interest and significance than what gets into it. This is certainly true of the litigation which has just given the Brooklyn Tabernacle a first-rate advertisement. The suit in form was one brought by Mr. W. J. Gelston against Dr. Talmage's society, to recover money advanced by the plaintiff as its late treasurer. The defendant admitted the claim, but proposed to offset it in part with a subscription of the plaintiff's to the fund for extinguishing the Tabernacle debt. The plaintiff in turn admitted the subscription, but contended that he was not bound by it, because, not to put too fine a point upon it, it was obtained upon what would be called, in the brutal language of secular affairs, false pretences; that when the subscriptions were called for it was understood that they were not to be paid unless enough was subscribed to extinguish the whole debt; that the amount of the debt was represented to be less by many thousands of dollars than it really was; that some of the subscriptions by which the fund was swelled were what are called in worldly auctions “bogus bids,” made to induce persons to subscribe; and much more to like effect.

It is of little concern to the public whether Mr. Gelston gets his money or not; but it is a matter of some interest to know whether or not his charge of substantial false pretences is true. The jurors are reported to have been divided equally on this question, and last evening they were discharged as unable to agree. As we understand the case, under the ruling of the court the plaintiff was not allowed to show what the actual amount of debt was when he subscribed, but was held in law to be liable upon the statement made on the memorable Sunday of debt-lifting in the Tabernacle. That is, subscribers were bound to pay if the whole amount then called for, $72,500, was raised. As we said in the beginning, the question thus kept out of the case was more interesting than any question which was let into it; and some of the evidence relating to it which was rejected will attract a great deal more attention than any evidence which was received. Certain significant correspondence by telegraph between Dr. Talmage and a nephew in Baltimore, and a letter from the pastor to the trustees of the church, seem to the lay mind very pertinent, though on technical grounds the jury was not permitted to know anything about them. “It will be a superhuman effort,” says the pastor to the trustees, “to raise $93,000; but God can and will help us.” This fixes the amount of the debt; but confidence in supernatural aid seems to have so far diminished that the “superhuman effort” was called for only to the extent of twenty thousand dollars less than the actual amount. “For the Lord's sake, say yes,” exclaims Dr. Talmage by wire, after exhorting his nephew's “house” to subscribe five thousand dollars to start the business. Later in the same day he asks, still by wire, whether his nephew and his nephew's partner will allow him to pledge them for five thousand dollars apiece, provided—these are his words—“I make up to each of you privately the difference between your subscriptions and five thousand.” Upon this the nephew takes up his end of the wire, saying:—

“Cannot permit the course suggested. Frankness, earnestness, and faith, without deception, will command success.”

Nothing need be added to this comment, by a business firm, on the methods of a minister of the gospel; but Mr. Kimball and Mr. Ives and other persons may be seriously asked, Is it not about time to put a stop to the business of church debt-lifting by Sunday auctions?—New York World.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 8.

C. W. Newton, $5.40; O. Fountain, $1; S. P. Chamberlain, $3.20; Louis Lange, $1; Dr. Israel Betz, $3; Thomas Marshall, $3.58; A. G. Fisher, $5.34; J. K. Rose, $3.20; M. B. Bryant, $13.20; H. Jacobson, $1.50; J. E. Peck, $2; B. F. Kershaw, $1.50; George Allen, $1.20; E. R. Brown, $3.20; J. C. Kearns, $1.50; W. E. James, $3.20; Wm. H. Wood, $3.25; Samuel Brooke, $5.25; B. W. Strong, $1.50; Mrs. J. H. Bennett, $3.20; W. F. Freeman, $3; Rev. S. B. Stewart, $3.20; Miss S. E. Dunn, $3.20; Geo. H. Frost, $2.20; Charles Nichols, $1.50; Francis Edison, $2.27; John Cooper, $1.50; D. W. Dixon, $1.50; J. M. Reid, $1.50; J. E. Sutton, $1.25; Mrs. A. C. Richards, $3.20; M. H. Doolittle, $1.3; S. L. Bailey, $3; R. M. Watson, $1; Mrs. Fanny Palmer, $1.50; Thomas Pierce, $1.50; George Iley, $1.50; R. P. Thompson, $3.20; W. H. Spencer, 50 cents; M. R. Trumbower, $1.50; W. W. Moore, $4.70; Wilmer & Rogers News Co., $1.50; Fred G. Allen, $3.20; Dr. M. Bennett, $1.50; T. B. Skinner, $1.50; E. W. Abbot, $10; Dr. N. T. Clevenger, $3.25; Samuel S. Green, 25 cents; Miss M. D. Rhodes, $1.50; J. S. Perry, $3.20; L. K. Washburn, $3; C. J. Higginson, 35 cents; Cash, $5; Jno. W. Chadwick, $13.20; W. D. Thomas, $1.50; S. R. Mumford, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEB. 13, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBON, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURER, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

CORRECTION.

The types last week, by no fault of theirs, made me call the New York Daily Indicator a provincial paper, when I meant to say financial. They also made me say that a certain ecclesiastical law "was pursued by stealth," when I meant to say it was procured by stealth. If I were young, I would buy a "type-writer." E. W.

Mr. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Meriden, Connecticut, February 15 and 16. He makes friends wherever he is heard.

THE Literary World of February 1 has two articles on Mr. Chadwick's Bible of To-day—a fair one by Nicholas P. Gilman and a flippant one by Howard Crosby. As specimens of two opposite styles of criticism, the impartial and the dogmatic, they are equally successful.

THE THANKS of the Index Association are cordially returned to their numerous friends who have been active of late in procuring new subscribers to THE INDEX; and we add our own personally. It is very encouraging to find that our efforts to advance the cause of true liberalism find response in other minds. Unable to reply by letter to the many kind words we have received, we cannot refrain from this simple but hearty general acknowledgment.

A SUBSCRIBER in Jefferson, Ohio, thus wrote on January 14, about one of the best of men and noblest of thinkers: "Mr. Chas. D. B. Mills gave us a fine lecture upon 'Huxley' last evening in the parlors of Mr. J. A. Giddings (who, by the way, is the son of the revered Joshua R. Giddings, of anti-slavery fame). All were highly pleased with Mr. Mills and his effort, and many expressed a desire to hear him again. For my part I wish our land could be thoroughly canvassed by 'evangelists' like him, and the glorious doctrines of the free religious faith presented to the people. Thousands are ready to drink at its life-giving fountains."

LIBERALISM AND LIBERTINISM.

It is customary to class as liberals in religion all those who, for whatever reason, have become discontented with Orthodoxy, and who no longer believe it to be true. It is inconsiderately taken for granted, not only by the Orthodox (who often know no better), but also by very many liberals themselves, that disbelief in the popular religious doctrines of the day constitutes the sole and sufficient bond of union in the great liberal army. If this were true, then it would be also true that liberalism is, as has been so often asserted by preachers and members of the dominant churches, merely negative and destructive in its character,—that it has no mission but to attack and destroy the Christian Church.

These things, however, are not true. Genuine liberalism does not rest on negations of any sort; true liberals repudiate emphatically the charge that their real bond of union is sympathy in negations. Repulsion is not attraction, and of itself creates no attraction. There can be no attraction unless there is something which attracts. The attractive power of a positive common end must be felt, before union in spirit or in work can possibly exist. Has liberalism any such positive common end?

Certainly not, if liberalism means merely disbelief of Orthodoxy; certainly not, if all who disbelieve in Orthodoxy are to be reckoned liberals. But we deny that merely to disbelieve in Orthodoxy makes a man worthy of that name. The previous question is in order: Why does he disbelieve? Is it because he has found something better to believe? Or is it merely because he wears of all restraints, and desires to give free rein to the spirit of lawlessness? According to the reasons which make him a disbeliever in Orthodoxy must he be classed with liberals or libertines. Most emphatically do we affirm the world-wide difference between these two classes; most emphatically do we affirm that the spirit of liberalism is diametrically opposite to the spirit of libertinism. Liberalism is intelligent and conscientious devotion to liberty—that is, life unworped from conformity with the immutable laws of Nature by any arbitrary tyranny of man; libertinism is mistaken or reckless self-abandonment to license—that is, life as little governed by Nature's laws as by man's will. We deny that liberals and libertines have anything in common. We refuse to give to the latter the honored name of the former. We scout the assumption that the mere disbelief of Orthodoxy, which may or may not accompany libertinism, creates the feeblest bond of union between libertines and liberals. The one grand aim common to and characteristic of all to whom the name liberal justly belongs is the purpose to live in strictest obedience to that higher law of natural righteousness which all human tyranny more or less defies—the purpose to vindicate and to maintain, both for the individual and for society, the right to realize that moral ideal which the spirit of license equally defies. In fine, liberalism is human life dominated by reason and conscience, and emancipated from all human influence contrary to these; while libertinism is human life dominated by no law but that of self-interest or of passion, in defiance of reason and conscience both. It is this purpose of governing life by natural moral law which distinguishes liberalism, on the one hand from Orthodoxy, which would govern life by supernatural moral will, and on the other hand from libertinism, which would govern life by neither, but set passion, caprice, and wilfulness in place of natural moral law and supernatural moral will alike.

It is therefore sufficiently clear that disbelief in Orthodoxy may signify either liberalism or libertinism; but it constitutes no bond of union between the two. The whole spirit of liberalism is positive and creative; it does not consist in denial; it may and does destroy, but only in order to construct; it seeks, above all things, to reconstitute human life on a higher, purer, and nobler plan; and it seeks the key to this plan in a fuller and larger knowledge of Nature. But the whole spirit of libertinism is disintegrating and corrosive; it rebels against that natural hierarchy of the human faculties by which reason and conscience are crowned with sovereignty over the animal and selfish passions; it proclaims a democracy of the faculties, makes the foot and the hand equal to the head, and rises in a wild insurrection against the best-established results of human experience. Sanity protests against the confounding of things so utterly and eternally at war as liberalism and libertinism. Heterodoxy may or may not be common to the two; quite as often as otherwise, libertinism cloaks itself in Orthodoxy for a blind to the world.

But mere heterodoxy, mere sympathy in disbelief, never yet formed a bond of union among true liberals; sympathy in the recognition of and practical obedience to the moral law of Nature can alone make them one in spirit or action. Coöperation among them on any large scale must wait until the love of liberty and the love of morality are indissolubly blended in enthusiasm for the great, positive, constructive ideal of a new society grounded on reverence for the moral and rational nature of man, as distinguished from his mere animalism and selfishness.

What we have said is true of genuine liberalism alone; we wish it were true of all that passes under that much-abused name. There is a spurious liberalism which apes the genuine, and relies on a mere savage iconoclasm to perpetuate the cheat. No wonder that the world is deceived, when so many liberals, even of the best class, seem not to be conscious of the chasm which divides them from the disguised libertines who seek their company and their sanction in ends which, if confessed, would be indignantly spurned. No wonder that Orthodoxy points the finger of scorn at all liberalism, when liberalism has not yet learned to distinguish itself from libertinism, to tear off its disguise, or to rebuke its ambition of leadership. Between liberalism and libertinism there is an eternal gulf fixed; between liberals and libertines there should be the same gulf. Not in the churches alone, but among liberals outside of the churches, are there wolves in sheep's clothing—men and women whose lives are stained with immorality, and who would fain shield it under the blasphemed name of liberty. Too many ministers and laymen who have been expelled from Orthodox communions for abundantly sufficient moral reasons come over to the liberal camp, loudly complaining of "persecution for opinion's sake," and obtain employment as lecturers on behalf of a liberalism which they disgrace. We counsel liberal societies and committees to exercise much greater caution in this matter, and to scrutinize closely the antecedents of all applicants for engagements before welcoming them to their platforms. It is an old trick of libertinism to palm itself off as liberalism; not all the hypocrisy in Christendom is to be found in the churches. If liberals who believe that liberty alone is able to bring a higher morality into our social life, and that license would only make society's last state worse than its first, fail to look closely at the personal life of those whom it accepts as teachers, lecturers, and speakers, and to act accordingly, let them not complain when Orthodoxy punishes their lack of necessary discrimination by indiscriminate slanders.

It will be the death of liberalism, so far as its public influence and public spread are concerned, if it refuses to separate itself from libertinism. The great bulwark of Orthodoxy is the people's general belief, however ill-founded, that Orthodoxy is the indispensable safeguard of public and private morality. Correct this erroneous belief, and liberalism will have the field all to itself. But this belief never can and never will be corrected, so long as liberals allow themselves to be publicly represented by those whose liberalism is nothing better than libertinism. However loud-mouthed, pretentious, demonstrative, aggressive, the latter may be, their power for mischief is wholly derived from the fact that too often they can claim, uncontradicted, to be publicly indorsed (as the phrase goes) by liberal societies and organizations. Such claims, unrebuked, do more to retard the progress of liberalism among the people at large than all the preaching of Orthodox pulpits. It avails nothing to point out, as is the custom with certain low sheets, instances of defection from morality among the Orthodox clergy and laity; these, well-established, generally meet with fitting rebuke from the Orthodox themselves. Two wrongs never make one right. It is not by the vices of the opposite party, but solely by its own virtues, that liberalism must win favor with the people. If it throws its protecting mantle over libertinism, no matter for what reason, the people will judge it accordingly, and cleave all the more tenaciously to their old faith. And who will dare to blame them for judging the tree by its fruits?

The time has come for a serious consideration of this subject. We speak solely with a view to promote the highest possible interests of the liberal cause, and speak solely what all true liberals ought to hear and to ponder. For the interests of the libertine cause, we have nothing but settled and invincible opposition. Let the separation between liberalism and libertinism, never yet made resolutely and effectively, begin and go on; it is the only way to free the living body of liberty from the decaying corpse of license.

Life or death for liberalism itself is the issue. Let it be met unflinchingly by every one to whom true liberalism is dear.

A NEEDED PHILANTHROPY.

Among the schemes for solving the present problem of poverty that presses with such dire exigency upon thousands of American people, none seems more practicable or more promising in permanency of benefit than that of emigration. Fertile lands in the West and South-west may be obtained almost for the asking, and in a single year will put any industrious settlers that may occupy them above want. These untilled acres, ready to respond with abundant food in a few months and even weeks to any one who will come to them with spade and hoe, appeal to the overcrowded laboring populations in the old States, with whom it is an anxious question every day how to satisfy hungry mouths, to come and partake of their bounty. And emigration to a large extent is going on. Accounts from the West, and especially the statistics of certain railroads, show that there has been the last year a very heavy emigration from the Eastern and Middle States, and even from those once called Western, into Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, and other parts of our unsettled territory.

But this emigration, encouraged and to some extent organized by certain interested railroad corporations and land companies, naturally takes only those classes of people that have still some pecuniary means,—enough at least to transport them to their destination and get them started as cultivators of the soil. And hence it does not take those who may be in the greatest present need. There are numerous cases of families (without going into the class of chronic poor)—families industrious, worthy, and respectable—that, in the long depression of business and difficulty of obtaining work, have come to the point where they have no money left and no means for getting away from their present homes. They have waited from year to year, under the deluding hope, which everybody seems to have possessed, that with each new year better times were coming. With every year, more of their little savings in past years have had to go for the support of the family. And now they have waited so long that they cannot get away if they would.

I have in my mind the case of a worthy family of this class. It is an American family. The head of it is a skilled mechanic. Six or seven years ago he was induced to leave the place of residence where he had lived for many years and been reasonably prosperous, by an excellent prospect of better business in a town a hundred miles distant. Good wages were guaranteed to him by written contract for five years. Hence he moved his family and began work in his new home. In a few months the panic of '73 came. The new manufacturing company in whose employ he was went to pieces, and there was nothing of it left for him but the paper of his contract. He was in a city of strangers without work. Still he was a man who could easily turn his hand to two or three branches of labor, and under the encouragement of a few friendly acquaintances he deemed it best to remain in the new location and trust to finding employment there. He did find, for two or three years, just enough employment to keep him from seeking elsewhere. And then the times everywhere grew harder and no openings appeared. And sickness came. His wife fell into a state of chronic invalidism. The children had to be taken from school and put to work if they could find any work to do,—which to find was the great trouble. Disappointment followed disappointment. All the time the family was getting poorer and more discouraged. And now they have to look the bitterness of actual poverty daily in the face. The man would gladly take them West upon a farm, but they are now too poor to get away.

Now what is greatly needed is some philanthropic organization that shall make emigration possible for this class of people; an organization to aid in the removal of their families, and the getting of them established on the new lands in the West. The exigency is hardly less urgent than that which organized the great Kansas emigration in the "Free Soil" times, and made Kansas a free State. The exigency does not appeal so much to the passions of political competition, but it appeals with equal force to the sentiment of philanthropy. The cry of the laboring population—of the really worthy who deserve sympathy and help—everywhere is for more work. But the difficulty is that there is not nearly work enough for the hands that are struggling to secure it; and there is not likely to be enough for many years to come. To enable a portion of these workers to get upon the unoccupied Western lands as tillers of the soil, is therefore to prevent pauperism and misery in the near future. It will benefit both those who go and those who stay. It offers one of the best channels for philanthropic impulse that is open to our time. What other method of relief is there for our overcrowded cities, and for the surplus population of our manufacturing towns and mining districts? It might not be best that the whole aid, or perhaps any of it, should be given as a charity. A system of easily-managed loans might be more judicious, both as preserving the self-respect of those aided, and giving them a spur to industry. We have beneficiary schemes for helping the poor to education. Why should we not have a "Beneficiary Emigration Society" for helping the poor to places where self-support is possible?

W. J. P.

MRS. SPENCER'S LECTURE.

Every one into whose hands this number of THE INDEX may chance to fall should read with the utmost attention and care the noble discourse of Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, which has been most kindly sent to us for publication at our special request. It is one of the choicest papers we have ever been permitted to lay before our readers, and we return our most grateful thanks to the author for her self-sacrificing consent to publish it now, when it would have been her preference to reserve it awhile for further use as a lecture.

The occasion of this lecture is so admirably expressed in the accompanying note that we cannot do better than to state it here in her own language:—

HAVERHILL, Feb. 8.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Perhaps I ought to say—and you may publish my testimony if you wish—that the thoughts of this paper were suggested by the split in the ranks of the Liberal League on the Postal-law question. Your position, and that of Judge Hurlbut and those who sympathize with you, seems so wise, just, and altogether right that I feel sure opposition to it springs, for the most part, from false ideas of reform, of freedom, and of morals; and I have therefore in this essay aimed to deal with the tendencies of thought indicated by the action of the majority at the Syracuse Convention, rather than to discuss controversially that action itself. It is for radicals to go back of the superficial condition to the causes which underlie that condition; and false theories are to blame for the bad action of many well-meaning but ignorant zealots. Yours for truth and purity,

ANNA GARLIN SPENCER.

It would be impossible to surpass the consummate delicacy, gentleness, and fearlessness with which this gifted lady has discharged her painful self-imposed task. To the quick moral perception of woman she adds a moral courage in which too many men show themselves deficient; with the most exquisite loveliness of spirit, and yet with a penetrating insight and unassuming firmness which command our unqualified admiration, she has borne her testimony bravely and clearly on the great crisis now impending over liberalism, at a time when too many public teachers have remained silent.

All honor to woman for the grand mission which she is fitting herself to perform in the struggle, already come, which must decide whether civilization is to go on and upward, or is to tread backward its melancholy pathway towards the barbarism from which it once emerged! And all honor to this modest and faithful teacher of Free Religion for the example she has set, not to her own sex alone, but to all who believe that liberty is as far from license as it is from bondage!

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Herbert Spencer winters in the south of France.

There is a stealing profit which no honest man will take.

The labor reform most needed to-day is some labor to perform.

There are sixty-three towns in the State with no indebtedness.

In the reign of Henry III., four women had seats in Parliament.

The late George Henry Lewes left in personal property only $10,000.

The amount of exempted property in Massachusetts is $53,855,397.

M. D. Conway wrote the obituary of Bayard Taylor for the London Academy.

The best Japanese barbers are women. Some of our best shavers are women.

A man has met with a "change of heart" when he gives up bad habits for good ones.

The first edition of Homer ever printed in America was published in New Haven in 1814.

Oliver Wendell Holmes used but one pen for all his literary works from 1857 until last September.

Dom Pedro is abolishing monastic orders and paying the national debt with their building funds.

What Burns called "a rousing whiff" is known to-day as a Cookism, or a Tremont Temple hyperbole.

Edison thinks his constitution, aided by good food, is the source of his inventive genius, and not spirits.

Since greenbacks have been made a full legal tender, they are practically demonetizing gold and silver.

England has one hundred and four thousand one hundred and seventy-five ordained Methodist preachers.

Teaching German in the Chicago schools is a failure; only one hundred and six pupils took German last year.

The Pope has thrown another bombshell into the Christian camp. "Behold how these Christians love one another!"

The preacher of the annual election sermon hereafter gets only $50. "God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts!"

The word "imp" formerly meant a lovely child. Bacon, in his prayer, asked a blessing on "our prince, the most angelic imp."

Mozart, the great German composer, died listening to the hymn of his sainted wife sung by the voice of his saintly daughter.

Theodore Parker, not Abraham Lincoln, was the author of that expressive phrase: "Of the people, by the people, for the people."

It is stated by a German physiologist that the heating of the earth by the sun causes magnetic currents from the equator to each pole.

Fifty-three per cent. of the population of France are engaged in agriculture, and only three per cent. are returned as doing nothing.

Professor Wise, the veteran balloonist, predicts great achievements for meteorology when ballooning reaches its fuller development.

It is said that Queen Victoria believes she holds communion with her late husband in a room elegantly furnished for the purpose.

M. Ernest Renan is rotund in person, almost jovial in bearing, simple in manner, speaking with something of the suavity of a courtly priest.

The ladies who spoke at the Convention of the Woman's Suffrage Association, lately held in Washington, were severe on President Hayes.

The churches ought to set apart one day to pray "to do as they would be done by," and then do it by paying their just proportion of the taxes.

Two Christians are in the new Turkish Cabinet; and the Missionary Herald, in commenting upon the fact, says, "Turkey moves." Which way?

Anna Dickinson's lecture on "The Stage," delivered in the Globe Theatre on Sunday evening, February 2, should be printed and distributed as a tract.

The London Spiritualist thinks that "inconclusive cabinet séances" in this country have given far more blows to Spiritualism than any given by its enemies.

It was one hundred and forty-two years Wednesday, January 29, since Thomas Paine first saw the light of this world, and it is now over seventy years since he last saw it.

Mr. Spurgeon has published the first of a twenty-fifth volume of sermons, having issued a sermon week by week for twenty-four years,—fourteen hundred and fifty in all.

The First Liberal League of Lynn met at the house of Mrs. Todd, No. 9 Estes Street, on the evening of Feb. 4. The subject under discussion was "Taxation of Church Property."

Unitarianism and Universalism dangle between the heaven of mental and moral freedom and the earth of Orthodoxy, and their feet are nearer earth than their heads are to heaven.

"When a person is conscious of inferiority, he begins to feel as if he required something artificial to shield himself from scrutiny; hence he resorts to outside show and display."

Four million Bibles have been sold to the Roman Catholics in France; many more have been given away. The reading of the Bible is the first step the Christian takes toward Free Religion.

Baltic, which has one hundred and thirty-seven families, has no church of any kind, but has seventeen liquor shops. There are liquor shops enough to support one church at least in good style in the town.

A law of Charlemagne, and also of the Saxons, condemned to death any one who ate meat in Lent, unless the priest was satisfied that it was "matter of absolute necessity." In Poland such an offender lost his eye-teeth.

The "young men" of Boston must be sustained by sterling moral integrity, if they can withstand the debilitating effect of the mawkish talk that is dealt out to them every Sunday by the Christian Association and Union.

A book once owned by Martin Luther, and containing manuscript notes made by his hand, is owned in Maine. It is a Latin translation of Solomon's Song, with a preface and notes by Luther. We wish it were a better book.

A young lady by the name of Ada Heather Bigg was one of the recent competitors for the Richards Scholarship in political economy at University College, London. It is stated that the examiners specially commended her.

The Japanese Government never until now has authorized any portion of the Scriptures to be published in that country. Recently it gave authority to a Japanese publisher to print an edition of the book of Genesis in the Chinese language.

France now takes the lead in civilization. During the last five years, while the rest of the civilized world has been under a cloud, she has achieved the twin glories of founding a new material prosperity and perfecting herself in republicanism.

The papers tell us that Hammond, the revivalist, has succeeded in making one hundred and eighty of the students in the Normal School at Edinboro, Pennsylvania, stand up and confess that they desire to be converted. Normal schools ought to be made of better stuff than this.

It has been suggested that a great deal of sickness, if not disease, may be attributed to the use of impure ice; for the notion that ice purifies itself by the process of freezing is not based upon trustworthy observation. It is wrong to take ice for consumption from any place the water of which is foul or even impure.

The Municipal Council of Paris has had a discussion upon the merits of the electric light. Mr. Levy, an engineer, declared that the cost of maintaining the light was double the cost of gas. It was also too variable, and during a fog its intensity was diminished. It is possible that the attempt to light our cities by electricity will yet end in gas.

Bells were invented about the year 400. They were first introduced into the churches as a defence against thunder and lightning. In the eleventh century it was the custom to baptize them before they were used. The curfew bell was established in 1058. It was rung at eight o'clock in the evening, when people were obliged to put out their fires and candles.

The Ancients used no alcoholic liquor, nor tobacco, nor tea, nor coffee, nor sugar, nor butter; Galen says he never saw butter but once in his life. They were ignorant of clove, nutmeg, ginger, mace, pimento, and pepper. They had no corn, nor potatoes, nor buckwheat, nor beans, nor many of our fruits. But they liked the flesh of wild asses, dogs, the dormouse, the fox, and the bear.

The Rev. J. Cook imagines that the man Friday, wishing for the boat that Crusoe has built, represents the socialist. Any one with ordinary intelligence would see that the socialist's real ground of complaint is that the boat is seized by the man who did not build it, leaving the actual builder in penury. But we presume no one supposes that Joseph understands what he is talking about.

The earliest notice of the use of cotton in manufacture is by Herodotus, four centuries and a half before the Christian era. In his day the natives of Southern Asia utilized the larger varieties of the cotton shrub. He speaks of a certain plant of India bearing, instead of fruit, fleeces more delicate and beautiful than those of sheep, of which the people of that country made their garments.

The idea of a canal through the Isthmus of Suez was considered practicable and the excavation actually commenced upwards of twenty-five hundred years ago; and in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, two hundred and seventy-three years before the Christian era, the union of the two seas was perfected. The channel existed for several centuries after Cleopatra's time, but was gradually choked up by the then unconquerable sand.

A Methodist lady went to church with her Baptist husband on communion day, and of course was not allowed to partake. Returning home, the noontide meal was duly prepared, but two separate tables were arranged. In reply to the husband's astonished inquiry as to the cause, she coolly informed him that, "if they could not sit together at the Lord's table, neither could they sit at the same table at home." He saw the point, and the Baptist society lost one communicant.

The way to get a new subscriber to THE INDEX is to ask some liberal friend to take the paper. An acquaintance of ours has got a dozen subscribers in this way within a few weeks, and he says he has been successful in nearly every instance. There ought to be two thousand new names added to the subscription list before January 1880, and there will be, if the subscriptions continue to come in as they have for the past week. Friends of THE INDEX, work to help humanity by helping spread the principles and faith of liberalism! and the best way you can do this is to send this paper once a week into some family.

The Hon. Elizur Wright delivered an eloquent address at the late meeting in Paine Hall, on Thomas Paine. The brave Englishman never received a more loyal and just tribute. Every sentence contains a noble word in defence of the memory of this noble man. A friend at the meeting said: "The name of Thomas Paine is distinguished by a freer platform than the churches have ever built." This fact should silence the church's voice of condemnation of this man's life. We regret to see that the Herald in its head-lines calls the patriot who gave so much for American Independence "Tom Paine," and speaks of the hall dedicated to his name as an "Infidel Temple." It is not often the Herald is guilty of such an offence.

Extract from "The Wife's Commandments":—

1. I am thy lawful, wedded wife. Thou shalt have no other wife but me.
2. Thou shalt not look upon any other woman to love her, flirt with her, or kiss her; for I thy wife will be jealous of any other woman to whom thou shalt pay the least attention.
3. Thou shalt not pry into my private correspondence, nor read any letters I may receive from my old friends. It is my business to attend to these, and you must not ask any impertinent questions, but simply confide in my honor, and believe all is right. Remember I am thy wife.
4. Thou shalt be in thy house by nine o'clock every evening.
5. Thou shalt give to me all the money thou makest, as I know best how to spend it for our mutual good and comfort.
6. Thou shalt be careful to provide for my future comfort and happiness by insuring thy life in a good company for a handsome sum, say $10,000, to be payable to me immediately at your death. Remember I am thy wife, and may want to marry another man.

One of the most remarkable women of this or any age is Mrs. Lucretia Mott. She is eighty-six years old, and in excellent bodily and mental health. She lately delivered an address before the Pennsylvania Peace Society, and was unanimously elected President of the Society for the ensuing year. She was almost the first Abolitionist in the Republic, having determined in her fourteenth year, while at a Quaker boarding-school in New York, to abstain from the use of anything produced by slave labor. This was when William Lloyd Garrison was only three years old. Mrs. Mott was really the mother of American Abolitionism. She commenced preaching at the age of twenty-six, and has ever since been more or less on the public stage, advocating woman's rights, negro emancipation, and preaching the most liberal views of religion. She is to-day one of the vice presidents of the Free Religious Association, and her voice is always ready, and her hand first, to assist in any work of progress for the human race. Lucretia Mott is a representative of woman, or, rather, of what woman should be, in the nineteenth century,—strong, clear, progressive, and sensible. May she live many years yet, and may the women of America learn from her busy, noble life what a woman can be and do!

No political plaster applied to the nation's back will give it the strength it needs. The election of no man, the triumph of no party, brings a millennium, nor removes our faults or the faults of our neighbors. The success of just principles is cause for gratulation, and the administration of such principles the only surety of a government's existence; but individual prosperity is only assured by individual effort. We can pass no law that will make us rich, wise, or good. We cannot legislate the ten commandments into virtuous actions. There is no other way for a man to get what he wants than to work for it. No one imagines that our statutes are the ne plus ultra of human legislation, nor that mankind in its experience will not learn better financial management than has been practised in the United States for the last fifteen years. Progress has the universe for a field, and the wants of man will always develop answers to those wants. But let us give up what serves us well only for what will serve us better. The labor question is not alone the laborer's question. It is everybody's question. In a land like ours labor is king. The men who hold the plow, the hoe, the shovel, and the hammer hold the destiny of America in their grasp. It is not what we consume that gives us our national character, but what we produce. While the laborer has developed the wealth of the country, he has not kept it; and labor is suffering today because it has not had the habits of economy which must go with habits of industry. If the men who shall do the work which will be done for the next generation in the United States will save what they do not need to support them, the property of the nation will change hands.

The February number of the North American Review opens with an article by Senator Hoar on "The Conduct of Business in Congress," which calls attention to defects in the present system of transacting business in the national legislature, and suggests improved methods. This is followed by a paper on "The Mysteries of American Railroad Accounting," by "An Accountant," showing how the most popular railway enterprises are conducted, and urging an immediate revision of the laws bearing upon railway management. "A Statesman of the Colonial Era," by Gen. Richard Taylor, describes the career of George Mason, of Virginia, and attributes to that gentleman many sayings and writings that have hitherto been credited to other men. Hon. D. H. Chamberlain writes on "Reconstruction and the Negro," and presents the results of his experiences and observations while occupying the gubernatorial chair in South Carolina. "The Empire of the Discontented," by a "Russian Nihilist," is a revelation of the abuses of the Russian rule, and of the influences at work to overthrow the government. The author is a prominent leader of the insurrectionists. "The Scientific Work of the Howgate Expedition," by O. T. Sherman, of the scientific corps, gives a very full statement, and the only one that has been presented to the public, of the scientific results of the recent government preparatory expedition to the polar seas. "Sensationalism in the Pulpit," by Rev. Dr. Taylor, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, is a pungent criticism of the theatrical tendencies of certain preachers. The number closes with an article by Prof. T. F. Crane, on "Medieval French Literature," reviewing a class of books known to but few readers in this country.

Communications.

JOSEPH COOK'S CAREER:

A CORRECTION.

The Albany Sunday Argus, quoted in THE INDEX of Feb. 6, is quite right in the substantial part of its criticism on the Monday lecturer, Cook, but mistakes in regard to an incidental matter, spoken of at length in the same article. Instead of "surrounding himself with a bevy of clergy,"—"pressing them into his service,"—"making them go ball for him in their official capacity,"—it is they who have engaged him, raised money for him, hired a larger hall for him, "cracked him up" before their people as a competent and trustworthy critic of rationalism and its advocates, and made a point of enlarging his audience and bolstering up his credit by regularly going themselves to hear him.

The Argus holds an opinion altogether too favorable of those Boston ministers who call themselves "evangelical." Unfortunately, the majority of them, and the prominent leaders of that majority, have not "too much respect for their character" either to want that sort of work done, or to engage such a man to do it. The people who prayed in Park Street vestry a year or two before Theodore Parker's last sickness, that he might be supernaturally prevented from writing and preaching, were of the class of laymen most under the influence of the Orthodox clergy, and were accurate representatives of their feeling and spirit. I myself, after Mr. Parker's death, heard an Orthodox minister refer to that prayer, not only with approval, but with an implication that God had favorably heard and answered it; and he used this implication as an encouragement to his hearers to pray in faith for such other things as they desired.

Mr. Cook is a man of industry as well as energy, and has a good deal of sagacity and worldly wisdom. After graduating at Andover Theological Seminary, he went to Germany, and his course of study there was arranged as if with foresight of the opportunities that would be given him here on his return. Coming back to Boston, he continued to study, using industriously the treasures of the great libraries, and writing lectures on various theological subjects, and advertising them by circulars, sent and given as opportunity offered. But, knowing that calumny against Parker, and opposition to his doctrines, were acceptable to the majority here, and would long continue to be so, he specially prepared himself to fill those departments, and, meantime, went on patiently giving, for little or nothing, such of his lectures as he could find audience for.

Before many years, the managers of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, like-minded with Mr. Cook in hatred of Parker and devotion to Orthodoxy, found him out, and discerned that he was the man to waken and enlarge their drowsy audiences. They soon engaged him to lecture in the Melancon, the gloomy but sizable hall under Tremont Temple, which they occupied, but had not been able to fill, except under revivalistic pressure. They found the move a successful one. Their audiences grew, and continued to grow, under the impulse of Mr. Cook's vehement rhetoric. They found larger accommodation necessary, and easily obtained the use of Park Street Church for Mr. Cook's lectures. The Orthodox clergy of the city not only helped their subordinates with advertisement and eulogy of the rising orator, but went themselves to hear him. They found him a man well suited to supplement both parts of their work, the exaltation of Orthodoxy and the disparagement of Parkerism, and to use in aid of these a scientific-sounding dialect which, impressing them as accurate and profound, might well be expected to impress their parishioners in like manner. On the 24th of April, 1876, a committee of five was formed, "one from each evangelical denomination" (Rev. Dr. Webb representing Orthodox Congregationalism), to raise $2500, in aid of the continuance of Mr. Cook's lectures. The meetings were soon transferred to Tremont Temple, the largest hall but one in the city, and ever since that time the Boston clergy have saved Mr. Cook the trouble of either hiring a hall or providing an audience. They flock around him on the platform, eulogize him in speech and writing, pass resolutions in his honor, and send their parishioners to buy his books. What can he do less in return than ask them to "open his services with prayer"? Gratitude and policy alike demand it. Moreover, it pays well. The bargain between Mr. Cook and the clergy is one by which both parties gain. They get an effective coadjutor, both in representation and misrepresentation; he gets cash, credit, and notoriety. If he would only stick to truth in his lectures, the public also would be gainers. C. K. W.

THE DOUBLE OR THE SINGLE STANDARD.

The question is not, Which is the more valuable, a gold dollar or a silver one? but rather, since the late "decline in silver," To which belongs the true dollar value,—which has remained more near the normal purchasing power?

To refer to the price of bullion in London for the purpose of settling that question, is to betray ignorance of first principles. At the risk of assuming pedagogical airs and being tedious, let us define our words and lay down some elementary principles.

Value, in economics, is a word importing a relation between different commodities. It is that property or accident of a thing by which you can induce another person to give you something else for it. The definite amount of value a thing has is that particular quantity of some other commodity which is its market equivalent. What you cannot induce another person to give you something else for has no value. So that out of market relation, there is and can be no value. To find what value a thing has, therefore, there is no need to inquire about its cost, supply, or demand, or go anywhere but in the market. All talk about "cost of production," etc., is impertinent and confusing when the question of present value is to be settled.

The idea of value emerges in thought, then, and only, when an exchange is made or imagined; and when one is made, the operation of measuring or indicating value is absolutely reciprocal. If a hat is exchanged for a dollar, the hat determines and indicates the value of the dollar in the same sense and to the same extent as the dollar the hat.

One to whom it is "impossible to avoid referring to some definite standard," "and that standard is gold," is radically incapacitated for the discussion of the question of the standards. His incompetence becomes hopeless and pitiable when, as showing the stability of gold, he quotes the price of bullion in the London market!

Price is the value of a thing expressed in money. When money (as the pound sterling) is gold, it can no longer measure or express the fluctuations in gold. As applied to the standard metal, "price" has no meaning as indicating value. Price is all the broker cares about. That is enough for his purpose; but he must enlarge his mental horizon beyond that view intelligently to discuss this question. Let him use the words "purchasing power," and by a little mental effort he may avoid talking nonsense.

It is conceded on all hands that the purchasing power of gold has increased in Europe from seven to ten per cent. within the last four years; but while the mint is open to it, the price of gold cannot materially change; not because the pound does not fluctuate in value, but because, being bound by legal definition to gold, it must follow the fortunes of gold, and cannot therefore indicate or measure its fluctuations.

Stability in value or purchasing power being the chief merit of a money unit, the double standard is clearly better than the single. To make this plain, draw a varying horizontal line representing the fluctuations of our metal. Draw another representing the fluctuations in value of the other. Now place one line over the other, and, taking those parts of each that lie below the points of intersection, make a third line. This third line will be more nearly straight than either of the others. The illustration, though conclusive as far as it goes, only partly shows the greater stability of the double standard; for the legal ligature tends to hold the metals together, and prevents one from falling much below the other.

I am of opinion that, even with German monometallism added to England's, if our mints had not been closed to silver in 1873 the market ratio of the metals could not have much departed from 16 to 1, fixed by our statute. But for that bad act, our vaults would have had at least two hundred millions silver coin, Europe would have had two hundred millions more of gold, and the situation all around would have been vastly relieved. During the short period of 1873 before that act took effect, more silver dollars were coined than for years before. Who will have the hardihood to affirm that taking out of European markets that amount of silver, and restoring the same amount of gold, would not restore the former relative value?

The notion that the "cost of producing silver," any more than of gold, has decreased, if true (as it is not), has little to do with the question.

There is undoubtedly a tendency in Europe towards the single standard, and many good men in this country advocate it. It would not be a live question otherwise. The animus of that movement is not for any purpose of giving greater stability to the money unit, but rather to increase its value or purchasing power,—and that for the benefit of interest-bearing capital and those having fixed incomes. The movement, however, has overreached itself, and the reaction has set in.

Industrial stagnation and bankruptcy come of falling prices, and falling prices are only the other side of the same fact as increase in value of money. That comes of disproportionate production; i.e., the production of money or the money metal has not temporarily kept pace with other products. There is never such a thing as over-production. Hard times are Nature's method of restoring a lost equilibrium or proportion between money on the one hand and commodities on the other. If the normal relation has been destroyed by "inflation" and the excesses it leads to, the hardship is necessary and salutary, so far as to restore the normal-value relation. The normal-value relation of things is just that value things take on under free conditions with established money definitions. The proper adjustment of the value of money is the process of centuries, and has come about upon the basis of the double standard; and a change from that condition puts all in chaos.

The gradual decrease in value of gold and silver as measured by labor and brought about by improved methods of mining is normal, and as beneficent as the gradual decline of iron and wheat from the same cause; and a decline of all things, money included, as measured by a unit of labor, is in the line of a true progress. Civilization is just that. To legislate away from one of the metals the money function to counteract that tendency in the money unit, is a crime against civilization. The industrial paralysis now prevailing in Europe is Nature's protest against that infamy. The industries demand that capital in the form of money shall be subject to diminution in value under the same economic law, and for the same causes, as capital in the form of steam-engines, shoes, or coal. The true stability of the money unit is that it shall freely follow the law of all other products. Any other pretended or attempted "stability" is a delusion and a fraud.

Skill, intelligence, enterprise,—in short, labor,—is rightful King. When it, by conquering difficulties, cheapens productions, it is fitting the stock on hand shall fall, be it iron or gold. Obligations for future delivery are incurred on that condition; but the theory we are combating would insist upon increasing the weight of the gold coin if improved methods of mining should lessen the cost of its production, but would call it rank dishonesty to lighten it if the production should fall off.

No; legislating to keep up the value of anything for the future delivery of which there are outstanding contracts is stock jobbery, and, applied to the money unit, is a conspiracy against labor and industrial progress. E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 23, 1879.

THE DRAYMAN.

Place—a small village twelve miles from a neighboring city; date—January 1, 1879.

Rev. Mr. Grimes.—Good morning, Mr. Hale. I wish you a happy new year, and may the Lord bless and prosper you through the year.

Mr. Hale.—Yes, sir. I hope it will be a happy new year.

Rev. Mr. G.—Here is a box of poultry I wish you to take out to the city, and this is a list of the goods to bring in exchange; and I shall be much obliged to you.

Mr. H.—If you want that amount of drayage done, I presume you will be willing to pay the freight, the same as my other customers.

Rev. Mr. G.—Well, this is different from a regular business transaction; this poultry has been donated to me on account of my being a clergyman, and, not needing so much for the use of my family, I thought best to send most of it out to exchange for merchandise. I supposed you would do the business free of charge.

Mr. H.—I am doing a business of hauling goods to and from the city, and it is necessary for me to charge a certain amount per hundred on the produce and merchandise I carry, to pay the expenses of myself and my team.

Rev. Mr. G.—Last year you carried my packages free, and is it any more necessary to charge freight this year?

Mr. H.—In justice to myself and my other customers I ought to have charged you the regular rates last year, but I think it best to begin the new year on a correct basis.

Rev. Mr. G.—As I spend my time in the service of the Lord, Christian people consider it their duty to contribute of their means for the support of myself and family.

Mr. H.—As to whether you shall spend your time in the service of the Lord is for you and him to settle; but I have become convinced that the only way to sustain the dray business is to charge freight on the goods transported.

Rev. Mr. G.—I had hoped that your generous policy of last year would be continued through this and other years in the future.

Mr. H.—You began a year ago sending occasionally a small package, but your business increased so that for the last three months you have been one of my largest customers, and for the whole I have received nothing; I have to take as good care of your packages as of others, and have decided to collect charges in future on all alike.

Rev. Mr. G.—You are not as generous as the State. We pay no taxes on the parsonage in which I reside, and nothing on the church in which I preach.

Mr. H.—Very true; but there are very many who think that the State had better change its policy as I have changed mine. Fifty years ago church property was not of great value, and it did not attract much attention; but, now that the churches own in the United States property worth about eight hundred million dollars, the question of its taxation is one of considerable importance. It is the business of the State to protect the property of all kinds in the State, and it is a positive necessity for the State, in order to maintain its existence and perform its work, to levy taxes on the property which it protects; and as church property receives its full share of the protection, it ought to pay its equal proportion of the taxation. CYRUS LEE.

THE ALBANY LIBERAL ASSOCIATION.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1879.

DEAR INDEX:—

At a meeting of the Albany Liberal Association on the evening of Sunday, February 2, the following were elected as officers for the next six months:—

President, Judge E. P. Hurlbut; First Vice-President, Adam Strever; Second Vice-President, Charles Sexton; Corresponding and Recording Secretary, Thomas Dugan; Financial Secretary, Charles L. Edinger; Treasurer, T. J. Hennessey; Librarian, R. Z. Sheridan; Executive Committee, Wm. H. Pangburn, Minos McGowen, M. W. Dodge, Oliver Briggs, Lansing Van Wle.

The Association is now but little over a year old, having been organized Oct. 7, 1877. During its brief existence, however, it has accomplished not a little to hasten forward the growth and spread of liberalism in our community. From the first its meetings have been largely attended. About eight months ago it was found necessary to remove to larger and more accessible quarters, which it secured in Martin Hall, one of the most centrally located public buildings in the city. Throughout the heat and dullness of the past summer, its Sunday evening meetings were kept up regularly and with unflagging interest, and on no single occasion did they fail to be noticeable on account of the numbers present. In December last, Prof. Adler, President of the Free Religious Association, delivered a lecture here, under the auspices of the society, to a large and interested audience. His theme was "Liberalism in Religion," and it is believed that good seed was then sown which is destined at no very distant day to spring forth into vigorous and useful life. Judge Hurlbut, a Vice-President of the National Liberal League of America, also recently delivered, before a numerous assemblage of appreciative listeners, an excellent address which was prepared by him expressly for the occasion.

Rabbi Max Schlesinger, another officer of the League, has frequently spoken before the society, and invariably delighted his hearers.

Judge Morton, brother of the late Governor Morton of Indiana, and others, have at various times appeared upon the platform as speakers. The Association has lately been presided over by Mr. J. McDonough (another Vice-President of the National League).

Mr. McDonough is a fluent speaker and a logical and effective debater, and to his ability and energy the society is indebted for much of its past success.

The foregoing facts have been stated in order to show what the society has already done in the way of popularizing and disseminating liberal ideas. Its course has been slowly but constantly onward and upward. It starts forth on its new term with high hopes of still greater progress. With kind and sympathizing friends in our city to cheer it on its course, with renewed earnestness of purpose among its members, and with that veteran pioneer of Liberalism, Judge Hurlbut, at the helm, we believe it is safe to predict a long and useful life to the Liberal Association of Albany. C. M. C.

A FEARFUL WARNING.

PUBLISHER OF INDEX:

Sir,—You need send no more of your vile stuff in the form of THE INDEX to my father, Uriah Biggs, North Lawrence, Kansas, as he is dead and beyond the reach of your poison, in this life at least. And let me say to you that "God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." You are sowing now; reaping-time will come by and by. L. C. BIGGS.

LAWRENCE, Kan., Jan. 25, 1879.

HUXLEY AS A HANDICRAFTSMAN.—"Technical education," in the sense in which the term is ordinarily used, and in which I am now employing it, means that sort of education which is specially adapted to the needs of men whose business in life it is to pursue some kind of handicraft; it is, in fact, a fine Græco-Latin equivalent for what in good vernacular English would be called "the teaching of handicrafts." And probably, at this stage of our progress, it may occur to many of you to think of the story of the cobbler and his last, and to say to yourselves, though you will be too polite to put the question openly to me, "What does the speaker know practically about this matter? What is his handicraft?" I think the question is a very proper one, and, unless I were prepared to answer it, I hope satisfactorily, I should have chosen some other theme. The fact is, I am, and have been any time these thirty years, a man who works with his hands—a handicraftsman. I do not say this in the broadly metaphorical sense in which fine gentlemen, with all the delicacy of Agag about them, trip to the hustings about election-time and protest that they, too, are workmen. I really mean my words to be taken in their direct, literal, and straightforward sense. In fact, if the most nimble-fingered watch-maker among you will come to my workshop, he may set me to put a watch together, and I will set him to dissect, say, a black beetle's nerves. I do not wish to vaunt, but I am inclined to think that I shall manage my job to his satisfaction sooner than he will do his piece of work to mine.—Prof. Huxley, in Popular Science Monthly.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLMO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.30 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Orthodoxy.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Revivory.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.90
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
OLDD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONGUE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1.

Historical Pictures Etched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESOAKES (KENN). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. F., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gouthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	6.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GÖTTE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.00
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	1.75
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.25
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skeltons.....	1.25
Studies for Stories.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagot

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by R. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the present Day. 3 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAFAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 3 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Year's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.—Essay on Liberty—Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.25
Romances, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
A Kicker from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
ROBBETTS (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Seebock.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Union-Hom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Book, &c.
3. Snake, Sketches, Denis Duvet, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada, on Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Excursion in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	2.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
TITLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	4.00
Vols. III, IV. and VI., each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banquetings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Web.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Panades. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

251 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,
BLUFFTON,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 8,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FOR TEN DOLLARS CASH

we will insert a seven-line advertisement one week in a list of 209 weekly newspapers, or four lines in a different list of 337 papers, or ten lines in two weeks in a choice of either of four separate and distinct lists containing from 70 to 100 papers each, or four lines one week in all four of the small lists, or one line one week in all six lists combined, being more than 1,000 papers. We also have lists of papers by States throughout the United States and Canada. Send 10 cents for our 100-page pamphlet. Address

G. P. ROWELL &amp; CO.,

Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce Street, New York.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S
DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marple. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Secularism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 60 cents.

II. Burgess-Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 60 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

THE SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE

Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUMANS.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by scientists of the highest authority.

Prominent attention will also be given to those various sciences which help to a better understanding of the nature of man, to the bearings of science upon the questions of society and government, to scientific education, and to the conflicts which spring from the progressive nature of scientific knowledge.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.
A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).
The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.
We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
649 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
RONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaiche, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Lealie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. E. Lewis, Sir David Wedderburn,
AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECT-
URES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Paganism Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 6, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
E. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-
TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1875.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING
NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Cort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. K. Kneen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Kneppert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 288 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 268 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 261 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION: with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 54 pages. Price $2.00.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 272 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5-outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & Co., Augusta, Maine.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 18, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, E. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10,

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEB. 20, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 478.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. E.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

- SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
- SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.
- SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.
- SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture before the Free Congregational Society of Florence, Massachusetts, February 23, and at Lanesville, February 25.

MRS. BESANT pithily says in the National Reformer: "Leo XIII. does not curse as vigorously as did Pius IX., but he hates liberty as plouly as did any of his predecessors."

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE, R.N., is one of the few independent, noble-hearted members of the British aristocracy whose principles and sympathies alike prompt them to advocate and work for justice for the poor and oppressed. We learn from the National Reformer that he has been invited to become a Parliamentary candidate in the Liberal interest for the Tower Hamlets at the next election. It would be expecting too much, we fear, to anticipate his election to Parliament; but it is just such members of Parliament as he would make that England sorely needs to-day.

THE BOSTON Christian Register, the old and fair exponent of Unitarian Christianity, contained this editorial paragraph in its issue of February 15, for which its editor, Rev. Charles G. Ames, deserves the thanks of every friend of Free Religion in the land, as he certainly has ours: "The Christian Union delivers a blow in the dark when it confounds together 'Free Religious Associations, free lovers, Heywoods, and Restells,' as 'all more or less directly interested in the hideous traffic that Mr. Comstock by all legitimate means seeks to suppress.' In that matter, we believe the Free Religious Association is as clean and clear as any Christian church in the land, Joseph Cook to the contrary notwithstanding."

THE LONDON Secular Review, in its issue for January 4, has an article by its editor, Mr. Charles Watts, entitled "Our Annual Address," in which occurs the following kind passage: "In the United States, the great Secular organization known as the Liberal League has undergone just such a trial as that to which British Secularism has been subjected, the question at issue being almost identical with that which created so much interest among ourselves, while the result has been in both instances the same. We have every reason to hope that the American counterpart of the British Secular Union—namely, the new Liberal League of America—will in the future find its exertions repaid with success,—an issue which no one has reason for doubting who knows that the new organization is conducted by persons of wisdom and moderation."

THIS is the way in which Rev. Dr. Isaac M. Wise, of Cincinnati, an eminent rabbi of the "Reform-Judaism," and also a Vice-President of the Free Religious Association, refers to the Society of which Dr. Felix Adler, the new and esteemed President of the same Association, is the lecturer: "Nor will we deny that, being a member of any of the New York congregations, we would certainly advocate the suspension or expulsion from the congregation of any fellow member who is also a member of the Ethical Culture Society. No man can serve two masters." In order to stand on the platform of Free Religion, is it necessary to remain either a Christian or a Jew? The above goes far to confirm the suspicion that one cannot serve Free Religion and either Christianity or Judaism at the same time. Who is it that is "serving two masters" in this instance?

THESE PASSAGES in Herbert Spencer's recent "Study of Sociology" are making quite a stir: "No one need expect, then, that the religious consciousness will die away, or will change the lines of its evolution. Its specialities of form, once strongly marked, and becoming less distinct during past mental progress, will continue to fade; but the substance of the consciousness will persist. That the object-matter can be replaced by another object-matter, as supposed by those who think the 'Religion of Humanity' will be the religion of the future, is a belief countenanced neither by induction nor deduction. However dominant may become the moral sentiment enlisted on behalf of humanity, it can never exclude that sentiment, alone properly called religious, awakened by that which is behind humanity and behind all other things. . . . The child, by wrapping its head in the bed-clothes, may, for a moment, suppress the consciousness of a surrounding darkness; but the consciousness, though rendered less vivid, survives, and imagination persists in occupying itself with that which lies beyond perception. No such thing as a 'Religion of Humanity' can ever do more than temporarily shut out the thought of a Power of which humanity is but a small and fugitive product, a Power which was in course of ever-changing manifestations before humanity was, and will continue through other manifestations when humanity has ceased to be."

REV. DR. B. FELSENTHAL, of Chicago, writes in the Jewish Advance in a very catholic and kindly spirit of the Society for Ethical Culture, yet betrays a great apprehension lest it should cut itself loose from the historical Jewish Church. He says: "If Professor Adler and the Society for Ethical Culture spurn the idea of separating definitely from the Jewish Church, and if they really and honestly have the intention to remain Israelites, they may become the fathers of a great reformation within Judaism, the importance of which only a future historian of Judaism may be able to appreciate. Otherwise they will leave but faint traces behind themselves. As Israelites, they will probably be the harbingers of a new birth, of a Jewish religion emancipated from a Jewish nationality. And this seems to us to be the real issue now, or to become it in a near future, within American Judaism. On the one side the parole will be: 'Jewish nation!' On the other side they will gather under the banner inscribed, 'Jewish religion!' On the one side they will declare, 'Judaism is indissolubly connected with the Jewish race.' On the other side it will be maintained, 'It is impossible to keep the Jewish race in its purity, and to guard it against great losses by intermarriages, etc. These intermarriages, although numerous enough already, may seem to some to be of no particular consequence. But what in the beginning may appear to you as a small ball only, will soon become a large avalanche. These intermarriages will multiply in geometrical progression. We therefore will endanger Judaism if we do not elevate it from the narrow confines of a racial religion to the heights of a universal, prophetic religion.' Nay, good Dr. Felsenenthal! The issue between the historical religions of the past and the universal religion of the future is irreconcilable. Your "cosmopolitan Judaism," quite as much as your "national Judaism," is too small! The sacrifice of the special traditional tie is in every case inevitable. The reason why we feel so profound an interest in Professor Adler's Society is precisely because he and they comprehend the inexorable necessity of sacrificing the lesser to gain the greater fellowship—because they hear the same high summons to leave the Mother-Judaism which we heard ten years ago to leave the Mother-Christianity, not with bitterness but with inexpressible sadness, as the only way by which the priceless "freedom and fellowship in religion" can be won at last for all. Only by such partings can the yearned-for oneness of mankind in spirit and in truth be finally achieved. The old religions must all die; it is but a question of time. The Free Religious Association and the Society for Ethical Culture are the pioneers of an innumerable host of organizations, whose mighty work shall be to teach the coming generations how to search for truth in freedom, and how to apply it in the spirit of a love that shall be universal indeed.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SWEET.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irrington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HOLLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES L. BARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBERTHANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
HON. S. F. SEXTON.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Spokane, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Des Moines, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORRIS ELLINGER.	Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. S. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. Y.
MRS. SALLIE HODGSON.	Littleburg, Va.
JOSEPH WOODHOUSE.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
A. J. WILCOX.	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
A. J. WILCOX.	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.	C. D. B. MILLS.
Executive Committee.
Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California.	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.	JOHN W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. J. WATKINS, Avon.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHELS, Adair.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	B. B. CLARK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
Michigan.	KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.	J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.	W. E. OUELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
Nevada.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Hampshire.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New Jersey.	C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
New York.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
North Carolina.	E. D. STARR, Cleveland.
Ohio.	SAMUEL GOIT, Hamboldt Basin.
Oregon.	GEORGE LEWIS, Prosser.
Rhode Island.	F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chastanooga.
Tennessee.	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Texas.	E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Vermont.	L. BEAULIEU, Norfolk.
Virginia.	ROBERT O. SPENCER, Albemarle.
West Virginia.	D. P. WILCOX, Parkton.
Wisconsin.	W. E. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
District of Columbia.	W. F. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.
Finance Committee.
D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessy; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASADENA, Cal.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Pasadena City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, Ill.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Gale.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHELSEA, Mass.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Orandon.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Lucifer's Lawsuit against Jesus.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH OF ALBERT BEVILLE, "REVUE MODERNE," VOL. XXXIX. PARIS, 1866.

BY MISS ARETHUSA HALL.

PART I.

Passing along, the other day, in the studious town of L—, and not knowing very well what to do with an hour or two that remained before I could resume my journey, I recollected an old acquaintance whom I had not seen for a long time; and, directing my steps towards a narrow and little frequented street, I entered a low shop, surmounted by a dusty sign, informing passers-by that it was a book-store, "ancient and modern." This last epithet was especially needed.

"Have you anything new among your books?" I, on entering, asked Master Moser, a German Jew in religion, and a dealer in old books by profession,—at least, so he said; for some affirm that, in speaking of a good man, it would be better to substitute religion for profession and vice versa, without changing anything in the rest of the definition.

"Some pretty things, some little curiosities, some trifles, my dear sir," replied he; "no great things, in truth. We find nothing new in the sales; there are too many rich connoisseurs, who seize upon all that is rare at fabulous prices. The little they leave for us poor booksellers we are obliged to pay for so dear, so dear!"

"Yes, so dear, so dear, my good sir," continued he, as he accompanied me into a sort of back shop where I knew he had the habit of placing his recent purchases; "but for good customers like you, sir, we find still the means of making you some small discount."

And he continued in this way, taking precautions on all sides, like a general who wishes to be prepared for all the attacks of an enemy; thus piquing my curiosity here, taking caution there against my immoderate love of cheapness, then against the discouragement I might feel if he made too hard terms, and all to make me decide to buy "something."

Old Moser was not a scholar; but, by means of being in contact with old books and the lovers of them, aided by mercantile genius, he had attained a certain erudition in his own way. It was rare that he did not know the value of the works which passed through his hands. His prodigious memory retained an astonishing number of dates, and of particulars about editions first printed or out of print, of copies worm-eaten, and of pages more or less soiled. He possessed also the art of quickly divining the tastes and preferences of those who came to rummage in his crazy old shop. His only fault was—and the dealers in old books beyond the Rhine would do well to imitate, in this respect, their Parisian brothers—that he was loquacious, and did not know when to hold his tongue while people were looking over his books. He showed me some very pretty Elzevirs, but of the third and fourth grade; a Pindar of Henry Stephen, ill-preserved; these were the "knick-knacks" of which he spoke to me. Then came some folios of patristic literature, procured from the library of a professor recently dead. Nothing of all this had tempted me much, when I espied in another corner a large, very neat quarto, with broken brass clasps, but otherwise in good condition, whose frontispiece and title struck my attention, and soon revived vague remembrances.

The frontispiece was one of those German engravings of the seventeenth or eighteenth century, rude in design, but strong in outline and relief. At the top was Christ coming out of his tomb, to the great terror of the Roman soldiers who guarded it, while the Emperor Justinian on the right, and the Emperor Charles V. on the left, majestically impassive, witnessed this event. Below, the two jurisconsults, Baldus and Bartolo, drawn full length, seemed to argue, one against the other, as formerly at Pèrouse. At the bottom of the page, a king, recognized as Solomon by the lions which flanked his throne, was pronouncing justice. One would not at first recognize the litigants if it were not that, on the right, a singular being, in human form, but hopping upon paws rather than feet, and having upon his forehead two great horns, revealed immediately that he belonged to the diabolical order. An abridged title, in manuscript, between the two Italian jurisconsults, informed the reader that this volume contained the historical lawsuit, described by Jacobus Ayer, Jacobus Ayer's historischer Processus juris, with the additions of Ahasverus Fritsche, cum additionibus Ahasveri Fritschii.

"What is this?" I asked of my seller of old books. "Oh! sir, can that interest you? I intended to send that to some jurist gentleman (Herren Rechtsgelehrten); the theological gentlemen would not care for it. It is an old German book which treats only of judges and laws, and all such things."

"Ah! my dear Moser," I answered, "I find you this time in great ignorance of that which concerns your calling. I detect here something theological as well as juridical." At the same time, I directed his attention to the complete title, which was displayed upon the opposite page, and which our readers, perhaps, will like to see in all its imposing amplitude. It is in German, in letters alternately red and black, and this is its translation: "HISTORICAL LAWSUIT, in which Lucifer complains violently because Jesus has taken and destroyed his hell, delivered his prisoners, and arrested and enchained himself: Wherein the whole regular process, from the initial citation to the final judgment inclusive, in the first and second instances, comprises the manner in which compromises are entered into; moreover, all kinds of writings, juridical practices, oaths, obligations, commissions, hearing of witnesses, as well as all other acts and ceremonies relating to lawsuits; all divided into distinct chapters, in order that each one may find the observations and notabilia suited to instruct him, as well as matters of law and the citations relevant to it. A work of which the like has never been published; useful, profitable, and agreeable to clerks, procurators, notaries, and all persons of a similar profession. Reviewed, corrected, and duly enlarged by many observations ad processum cameralem, by Jacobus Ayer, doctor utriusque juris and counsellor at Nuremberg. A new edition, to which have been added the additions of Ahasverus Fritschius, I. U. D.; also, forms used by many jurisconsults and illustrious personages of the Saxon bar. The whole ending with a complete latin register. Cum Privilegiis Sac. Ces. Majestatis. Nuremberg and Frankfurt. At the expense of Jean-Christophe Lochner, bookseller, printed by George-Christophe Lochner, A. 1716."

"Don't you see," I said to old Moser, "that I was right, and that, in addition to its juridical interest, this book has also a theological character? Unless," continued I smiling, "you are blinded by your prejudices against the theology it contains, and do not wish to see it."

"Ah! monsieur knows very well that in my trade I never have any prejudices," replied my old bookseller, in a tone of the most profound conviction; "and I thank you, sir, for calling my attention to the value of this book, which I have never understood."

It was now my turn to bite my lips. I had just committed an unpardonable error towards a man who was going to sell an old book. My crafty bookseller saw that I nibbled at the Processus juris, and he took good care not to withdraw the book before he was certain that the fish would follow. Nothing remained for me but, with as good grace as possible, to pay twice as much for the book than if I had opened it carelessly, and bought it only that I should not go away with empty hands. Still, I had to accept the assurance that he made me a "considerable reduction." After all, I did not regret my bargain. It is true I learned that in many parts of central Germany the Processus juris of Ayer is often found among an old stock of books; but it is none the less a very curious book, and a veritable document as to the history of dogma: for it shows how many times, after having been banished from official theology, the primitive theory of redemption remains popular in Christian countries.

Besides the frontispiece, other engravings illustrate the old German text. One of them shows us the expulsion of Eve and Adam from the Garden of Eden. The cherub with flaming sword pursues them. In the distance all the animals still rest peacefully together, though many raise their heads as if they had a presentiment that the situation was about to change. The hare, the stag, and the hind take the liberty to go where they please; by the side of the two banished ones slowly move the serpent, the lizard, and, behind them, the snail, which crawls like the former, without, however, having been to blame in that which has just taken place. On another plate we see the last judgment, and the separation of humanity into the elect and the reprobate. Nothing particular marks this engraving, which is only a rude imitation of the famous fresco of Michael Angelo. After this there is nothing more for the eye nor for art; all is for the noble science of law, upon the basis of a scrupulously Orthodox theology,—at least, such is the intention.

But who is this Jacobus Ayer, whose name shines so brilliantly in the midst of the imposing frontispiece we have described? I have in vain consulted my friends of the bar; they do not know him. However, the name Ayer is not wanting in notoriety. Many persons, more or less distinguished, have borne it, and, for the most part, have been born or have lived in Nuremberg, the place where our work originated. One of them, Jacobus Ayer, a namesake of ours, was the dramatic poet of Germany in the sixteenth century, and the remote emulator of Shakespeare, whom he seems to have wished to imitate throughout the thirty-six farces and the forty tragedies whose paternity is attributed to him. He died, a procurator at the court of Nuremberg, 1605. But the catalogue of his works, printed in 1618, contains no mention of the Processus juris. It is also from Nuremberg that originated another Jacob Ayer, a skillful draughtsman; a Justin Ayer, a renowned miniature painter; a Christian-Victor Ayer, also a draughtsman; an Ayer, a physician, known by his treatise, De Morbo Ungarico, or typhus, which appeared in Hungary towards the end of the sixteenth century. Still another Ayer, George-Henry, a distinguished lawyer, who was born at Meningen and died in 1768, privy councillor of George II. of Hanover; but he is not known to be our man. Notwithstanding the silence of the catalogue, might it not be this first, the dramatic procurator, who devoted his leisure to the composition of our great quarto? Impossible still; for he died in 1605, and among the judicial pieces cited in the books there is one which attributes to the Elector of Saxony the title of Duke of Cleves, of Juliers, and of Berg. Now this detail supposes the period from 1609 to 1614, a period during which the electoral house of Saxony claimed the possession of these duchies, and sustained it against the rival pretensions of the houses of Brandenburg and Neubourg, a war called the succession of the Juliers. There remains, therefore, only one plausible supposition; namely, that our Jacobus Ayer, counsellor at Nuremberg, may have been the son or the nephew of Ayer, the poet-procurator; and then, it might be said, that, in his father's or uncle's study, in addition to a keen taste for jurisprudence, he may have imbibed a certain talent for the art of painting characters, a talent which is revealed more than once in the singular history we are about to relate, notwithstanding its dulness and insupportable pedantry.

The repeated editions of this work, which a jurist-consult, Dr. Ahasverus Fritschius, still enriched with notes in 1716, proves how highly it was appreciated in the German libraries of the seventeenth century.

Indeed, my old bookseller would swear that he told me the pure truth when he assured me that he regarded this book as singularly destined for the legal profession. Everything in it evinces love and worship of legal right. Undoubtedly, the general tone is very religious, and the theological intention, if not the faith properly so-called, is irreproachable. The quarto ends, indeed, with this distich, which a Christian may accept without reserve:—

In magnis voluisse est; hic gloria Christo Quæritur; inde mihi gloria vera venit;

that is to say: In great things it is enough to have willed; this book seeks to glorify Christ; thence for the author a true glory.

But what are the great things which have kindled the ambition of the author? Is it primarily the glorification of Christ? Not at all. It is especially the desire of popularizing the taste for litigation, by displaying the usages and customs of civil justice. This book might be called, two hundred years later, A Manual for the Perfect Litigant. Of incontestable historic interest for those who wish to know the forms and maxims of Saxon law in the seventeenth century, it has for its immediate aim to teach the reader how he should go to work to begin a lawsuit well, carry it on well, and terminate it well. The plan is simple. A history, then well known, that of the contest of Christ with the devil, at the time of the redemption wrought by the former after his death, serves as the frame-work to the incidents of all kinds which the fertile imagination of the author endlessly multiplies, to afford occasion to put forth his directions, counsels, and models for actions and legal formalities. After each chapter comes a series of notabilia, or observations and explanations, relating to the incidents which precede. It is in these, especially, that the indigested and confused erudition of the Nuremberg Doctor of Laws is displayed by an abundance of quotations and of references,—which has always distinguished German science, and which renders it so dull and so valuable to consult. An incredible mixture of simplicity bordering upon silliness, of subtleties of consummate chicanery, a superstitious veneration for all judicial forms, a total absence of historic sense, a pedantry, a heaviness, a prolixity, all of which put the patience of the reader to the severest test, but which are compensated, at intervals, by original ideas, whimsical sallies, and the strangeness of all the supposed situations,—this is the physiognomy of the quarto. Although no index aids in determining approximately the epoch of its first edition, I would affirm that it goes back to the seventeenth century. This marriage of law and theology, the two equally scholastic, rigid, and slaves to the letter, was, at this epoch, common and admissible. It was the time when all orthodoxies became petrified within their narrow formulas, and when the import of what was done in the sixteenth century was not even suspected. It was only at such a period that the idea of innoculating with the name of Christ the love of litigation and chicanery could have entered the head of a barrister. A strange thing is, that in 1716 the want of such a book should have called out a new edition. But we must not forget that Germany was still under the influence of a leaden sleep.

If one is curious to know what the Processus juris of Dr. Ayer relates, he must resign himself to the perusal of what follows.

PART II.

The counsellor of Nuremberg goes back, even beyond the deluge, to the moment of creation. Adam and Eve, the father and mother of mankind, are in the beautiful garden which God had assigned them for their abode, enjoying the unchanged possession of resemblance to God, and of immortality which is his prerogative. But the devil, under the aspect of a serpent, seduces the woman, and, through her, Adam, so that their descendants become, with them, the prey of the infernal seducer. God would have had the right to interest himself no farther in a guilty and fallen race; in his mercy, however, he sent his only Son upon the earth, who, by virtue of the Holy Spirit, became incarnate in the womb of the Virgin Mary, the betrothed of Joseph of Nazareth.

Then follows a résumé of the evangelical history, whose conclusion is, that Christ, this innocent lamb, dieses unschuldige Lammlein Christus, condemned, mocked, and scourged, by order of the Jewish priests and of Pilate, was crucified March 25, 33. How then was he to save men? By his death itself; for, being dead, he descended into hell, and in spite of the protestations of Lucifer, prince of the devils and of his innumerable militia, to their most profound astonishment, he plucked from the dark empire the people accumulated there, who, without this unhopèd-for deliverance, were destined to burn and roast, brennen und braten, throughout eternity. And as Lucifer wished to oppose by force this abduction of his slaves, Christ, much stronger than he, bound him with chains, and left him to gnash his teeth in rage and impotence. Such are the facts which give origin to the following debates.

Lucifer, set free by the devils attracted by his cries, held a council with them, to determine how they could execute vengeance for this affront and repair this loss. The devils could, at first, only mourn and weep with their chief. This decided him to call together some of the most skillful and learned among them, in virtue of the rule, Senatus ex prudentibus et peritis constituendus. In particular, he asked them what they thought of the pretension of the ravisher that he was the Son of God. Beelzebub, a devil of very high rank, believes that this Jesus is at least four times stronger than all the devils put together, and fears, indeed, that he may be what he claims. Asmodeus is of the same opinion; and, moreover, he doubts if they can obtain any redress from the Eternal Father, who is never very benevolent towards devils. Astaroth observes that God is not any more tender towards men, and thinks that by making an appeal to that justice from which, after all, God cannot depart, they can bring an action against Jesus, before the common judge, in a suit in restitutio spoli. There was great cheering of the infernal areopagus when Belial, an old practitioner in jurisprudence, a great talker and very expert in subtleties, suggested the idea that, following the counsel of Astaroth, they would do well to challenge God the Father as judge on account of his evidently very close relations with the adverse party. They would demand of him to delegate in his place a deputy judge.

This opinion appeared admirable to the assembly and to its chief, Lucifer, who loaded Belial with compliments, and named him infernal syndic or attorney, charged with prosecuting the action, as delegated by the whole society. If he succeeded in gaining the suit, he was told, they would give him the command of twelve thousand legions of devils, and he should have, for his exclusive part, all the lawyers of bad faith who should come to hell, from then till the last judgment. This prospect filled Lord Belial with gladness, who determined to bring into play all his science of law and all the tricks of his craft.

He repaired, therefore, to the celestial court, accompanied by a notary and two witnesses, in virtue of the principle, Testes duo quatenus ad probandum actum sufficiunt, and, having arrived before the throne of God, he presented to him his credentials, with the outward appearance of the most perfect humility. The Eternal Father, knowing that a judge ought to listen benevolently to whoever came to complain to him, encouraged him to speak; and Belial presented his complaint, couched in the most adroit terms, especially at the close, where, in the name of his constituents, he presumed to challenge God as judge in this affair.

The Eternal Father answered him in a way to show that he was not his dupe, and that he could easily prove to him how ill-founded was his challenge. But, wishing to carry equity to its extreme, he consented to delegate a judge in his place, and King Solomon was agreed upon by the two parties. A commission in due form was drawn up by the chancellor of Jehovah. It was invested with the great seal, and terminated with these words: "Given at the chancellor's office of our celestial court, on Monday, March 28, 3967 of the creation of the world and the fall of Adam, and the year 33 of the redemption of fallen man."

Belial then repaired to Jerusalem, where he found King Solomon seated on a throne, in all points conformable to the description which may be read in the tenth chapter of the book of Kings. He had as clerk the prophet Daniel. It was with forms of the most humble adulation that Belial presented the business. Solomon ordered Daniel to assure himself of the authenticity of the papers, and to have them registered; after which he authorized Belial to depose his complaint (which gives opportunity to the author to display a model de forma petitionis pro processu). Then he had drawn up the forma citationis: "We, Solomon, by the grace of God king of the Jews, and of all the land of the Jews, a deputy judge, commissioned in this cause by God Almighty, command and cite to appear before our tribunal, Jesus of Nazareth, on Friday, the 15th of April, by Miserere cordias Domini."

This being done, Belial went to hell to give an account of his success. The infernals yelled with joy so loud that Belial was forced to stop his ears, and they bestowed upon him such compliments as never devil in his life before received.

Now Azael, a bailiff of Solomon, had gone to look for Jesus, whom he found, with his eleven apostles, in a chamber at Jerusalem; for his ascension had not yet taken place. Jesus, who is wisdom itself, received the summons with all deference and humility, and declared that he would obey. Only, as he had yet much to do before he ascended to heaven, he announced his intension of being represented in the case by some one of his friends, which was perfectly allowable; and, for this purpose, he requested the services of Moses, an old and very expert legislator and advocate. He gave him, therefore, a power of attorney, in due form, and Moses promised to serve him to the best of his ability.

Unfortunately, the Jews at this time gave Moses so much trouble that he forgot to read the summons, and did not appear on the day fixed. Belial, on the contrary, did not fail to present himself punctually at the hearing, and, delighted to see that neither Jesus nor his substitute made his appearance, he proposed that they should be condemned by default, with charges and cost. But King Solomon urged patience, and issued an interlocutory decree in puncto contumacie by which an appearance ad proximum peremptorie was ordered for Friday, the 29th of April, after Canitate.

The devils, seeing Belial return, deafened him with their cries: "Who has gained? Who has lost?" Belial explained to Lucifer how it was, and confided to him that Moses was a formidable adversary, a great law-giver, and, from all time, hostile to the devils. Lucifer, who did not admit at all that Moses had had any right to quit the infernal regions, flew into a passion against this "scoundrel" who violated the principle according to which Advocatus vel procurator non potest contra suum dominum patrocinium suscipere, and determined to exhaust upon him all the torments of hell, if he should be restored to him with the others.

With all this, Belial was not at all tranquil at the idea of entering the lists with Moses. He scratched his head to find some reasons for challenging him as a substitute for the opposing party, when suddenly he remembered that, in time, Moses fled from Egypt after having killed an Egyptian. He therefore resolved to plead an exception against him, and to require that he should be declared unworthy of performing the duties of an attorney.

The day for the second appearance arrived. Moses this time was present, and, like a consummate lawyer, careful of observing all the forms, he demanded verification of instruments, accrediting Solomon as judge and Belial as attorney of hell. He verified upon the document of Solomon the seal of Jehovah which he had a long time known, and found the papers of Belial in the required order. But he raised some difficulties as to the person. For it is doubtful whether excommunicati et banniti possint in judicio agere. Now Belial and all his infernal gang are excommunicated and exiled from heaven. "O Moses," replied Belial, very much terrified by this exception, "you are an acute jurist and a subtle practitioner, but you forget that you cannot liken a whole society to exiles. We are simply separated from the angels as the Pagans are from the Jews. These, however, can appear in a court of justice against each other. Before accusing me you ought to examine yourself, and to remember that you are a fugitive murderer, and that I can except to you as an attorney for the other party."

Now it was Moses' turn to be frightened. But King Solomon decided that the exceptions raised were indifferent to the principal cause of action, and that it would be better to argue the essential part. Whereupon Belial renewed his complaint. Moses declared himself ready to answer it; and his principal ground was that, in reality, in carrying away the persons held by Lucifer, Jesus, the son of God, had only retaken what was his own. But as this was the precise point of contest, Moses wished to study the indictment. In order to give him time for this, the case was put off till the 13th of the following May.

On the 13th of May, the parties again met. Moses presented anew his method of defence, upon the principle: Non dicitur vim committere qui possessionem amissam incontinenti recuperat. It was in vain that Jesus had many times demanded his people of Lucifer; he was obliged at length to have recourse to force. Belial then flew into a passion of abuse against Moses, who returned it with usury. Then he stormed and yelled to that degree that Solomon was obliged to command silence. In brief, after many formalities, the list of which would be tiresome, Moses laid down his opposing conclusions, and Belial, in his turn, wished to examine them at his leisure; and the business was put off again to the 15th. The conclusions of Moses proceeded from the principle that Ubi nulla possessio ibi nec turbatio nec spoliū præstendi potest.

But Moses did not limit himself to affirmations,—he wished also for proof; and he presented to Solomon, to summon as witnesses, the names of Adam, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, king David, the prophet Isaiah, John the Baptist, the Apostle Peter, and Joseph of Nazareth. The bailiff of Solomon, Azael, summoned them, therefore, to appear the 27th of May.

In the meantime, there was much discussion in hell upon the conclusions of Moses, a copy of which Belial had carried thither. Asmodeus poured out abuse upon Solomon, whose pretended wisdom was relied upon by this old Moses, who, for some centuries, had deserved to be stoned or beheaded, and declared, if he had been a delegate from hell instead of Belial, he would not have consented to recognize the validity of the commission of Moses. Whereupon Belial furiously replied that Asmodeus spoke of these matters like a peasant who had never opened a book of jurisprudence. "Do you think," said he, "that I am master of the judge, and that I could put his head in the bag? And if, named in my place, you had reproached Moses with the murder of the Egyptian, would he have failed to reproach you more strongly still for the disappearance of the seven husbands whom you carried away from Sara, the daughter of Raguel, who afterwards married young Tobit?" Lucifer severely reprimanded Asmodeus, and ordered him to "shut up his mouth." Whereupon Asmodeus humbly submitted. A deliberation followed this, in which it was agreed that it would be desirable, but imprudent, to have recourse to false testimony.

It may be seen here that the usage of Saxon justice, at that time, was to prepare beforehand, after having conferred with the two parties, a list of questions, general, particular, personal, additional, gravatorias, etc., which were to be put to each witness. There was, therefore, no public contradictory debate as to the testimony, nor while it was being given. But the advocates of the two parties were afterwards to submit to the tribunal their observations, deductions, and criticisms upon the principles of the examination. If I am not mistaken, the same is done at Rome at the present time.

On the 27th of May, Belial and the witnesses summoned were exact. Belial made some exceptions to Peter, whom he accused of having denied his master three times with an oath. But Peter confounded him by showing a certificate of pardon, delivered and sealed the evening before in paradise, by the master himself, in the first year of his reign. Solomon delivered a grand discourse to the witnesses upon the sanctity of an oath, the horror of perjury, which human justice punishes either by cutting off the fingers which have been raised to heaven in committing it, in cutting out the tongue which has lied, or in banishing the false witness from the country; and whom divine justice delivers to the devils to be eternally tormented.

Then came the examination, with closed doors, the official report of which was prepared by Daniel.

To give an idea of this, we will quote that of the first witness, Adam, and of the last one, Joseph the putative father of Jesus.

Examination of Adam.—Q. What is the name of the witness and that of his father; what is his age, his profession, his fortune?

A.—His name is Adam, and he does not know who his father was unless it was God Almighty who formed him from a bit of earth. According to his calculation he must be three thousand nine hundred and ninety-five years old. He is a farmer by profession, deriving his support from the spade and the hoe.

Q.—Is the witness a relative or friend of the defendant, or connected with him in any way whatever?

A.—He cannot say. All he knows is that Jesus must have taken his human nature from him, since he was the first man.

Q.—Is the witness an enemy of Lucifer, and of the infernal republic, and if so, why?

A.—He cannot be very favorable to Lucifer and his republic, because it is he who plunged him into eternal damnation; but he will, nevertheless, speak the truth.

Q.—Has the witness been influenced by him who has summoned him?

A.—Not at all.

Q.—Did he offer himself as a witness?

A.—No, he received a summons.

Q.—Has he a gain to hope, or any loss whatever to fear from the decision of this case?

A.—He has been nearly three thousand years in the power of the devil, and he would not willingly return to it; but, aside from this, he has neither loss nor gain to expect.

Q.—Which party does he wish to have gain the cause?

A.—The one which is right.

Q.—Is it not true that the devil is the prince and lord of this world?

A.—He don't know anything about that.

Q.—Does not hell, and all that is within it, belong eternally to the devil?

A.—He would willingly believe so, as hell is at the present moment.

Q.—Is it not true that, by his fall and that of Eve, the whole human race has been subjected to eternal death?

A.—It is true, but it is Satan who seduced him and his beloved Eve.

Q.—Does not the witness consider the long time during which the devil has retained the human race in his power as an unlimited prescription, and as a title more than sufficient for the possession vel quasi permanent?

A.—To answer this it is necessary to be learned in law, and the witness is not so.

Q.—Is not the witness one of those whom Jesus has torn by force from Lucifer?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Is it not true that the witness has passed three thousand years in hell, and that he found there his son Abel, who had been there nine hundred and twenty years before him?

A.—He had already answered to that question.

The examination continued a long time in this manner, offering nothing very remarkable, unless it be that it was conducted in such a way as to make Adam confirm all the premises of Orthodox theology.

After this, silentiū imponitur testi. The examination of Joseph of Nazareth was conducted upon the same plan. To the first questions he answered that his name was Joseph of Nazareth, and that his father's name was Jacob, though some called him also Elias, because he was of the family of Elias (thus, undoubtedly, Joseph reconciled his genealogy according to the Gospel of Matthew with that given in the gospel of Luke); that he was poor, but honest; nicht reich, aber redlich; that Jesus was his adopted son; that he had brought him up and supported him as such; that he has had nothing to do with Lucifer or his kingdom; and that he has no loss to fear or gain to hope from the issue of the affair.

To the question if, by the fall of Adam and Eve, all the human race had not been subjected to eternal damnation, the witness answered that he had indeed heard this doctrine preached many times, and that he willingly believed it.

Q.—Is it not true, then, that Lucifer and his devils have had the whole human race in their power and possession, and that this is equivalent to a prescription, to a title of possession vel quasi, more than sufficient?

A.—He answered that he was a layman, a simple laborer, and that he did not know what was meant by a prescription, or a possession vel quasi; that this question should be asked of other persons.

Q.—Might not the witness be the natural father of Jesus of Nazareth?

A.—No; Mary, his betrothed, conceived by the Holy Ghost; as for himself, he had no part in it.

Q.—Is it not true that, for many years, the witness had wandered about with the said Mary, without having any fixed habitation or regular housekeeping?

A.—That is false. The witness had always had his habitation in Nazareth. If he took refuge in Egypt with the Virgin Mary and her child, he did so by the command of God.

Q.—How does the witness know that Mary, the mother of Jesus, remained a virgin?

A.—The witness knows that the angel told him so, and that, as long as he had been acquainted with her, he had had reason to admire her chastity, her purity, and her modest manners; besides, nothing is impossible with God.

It is seen in what manner Joseph, in his turn, is led to make a profession of Orthodox faith which entirely justifies the assertion of Moses, according to which Jesus is guilty neither of abduction nor of spoliation; since, in the quality of the Son of God, he has only retaken his own, unlawfully retained by Lucifer and his hosts. All the other testimony sustained the same conclusion.

Belial was quite dumbfounded by these depositions, which resulted in showing Jesus to be the proprietor of everything in heaven, on earth, and under the earth. He had to bear new invectives from his companions in hell, but he extricated himself by showing the numerous difficulties against which he had to contend. A secret council was held by the arch-devils, in which it was recognized that people engaged in a bad cause have absolute need of the intelligence of a skillful advocate, to prevent them from heaping follies upon follies. They drew up a libellus correctus to be presented to Solomon, in which it was shown that, according to Imperial laws, no one has a right to take away from any person property held in possession from time immemorial. All the depositions in the world could not change an iota of this fact, which rules all discussion. Moreover, the libellus violently attacked the witnesses as to their honor and their capacity.

On the 28th of June, Moses returned to the court, with a request requiring Belial to furnish bondsmen, so as to have a guarantee of solvency, in case he should be condemned with cost and charges. Belial twisted every way to escape from this obligation, and protested that he and his constituents were nothing but poor devils (sic). Moses insisting, he offered hell itself as security; Moses replied that it was a kind of property which nobody wanted, and, consequently, without value. Belial, embarrassed a moment, bethought himself. "Jesus," said he, "has himself called Lucifer the prince of this world; therefore this world belongs to him, and he offers it as security." "Impossible," replied Moses; "Jesus said before he died that this world belonged to the devil no longer." "Ah, well! I offer the treasures concealed in the earth." "Impossible again. According to law these treasures do not belong, without some other formality, to him who discovers them." "I offer then two guarantees, Cain and the thief at the left on Calvary." "How! two murderers, and who have not a piénning!" . . . Belial was obliged to promise that he would refer it to his clients, and they would settle it.

In hell, they were roused up in earnest. Things did not go on well. It was decided to submit the case to several universities renowned for their counsel; namely, those of Athens, Rome, Corinth, and Paris. They sent to them a statement of the points of fact, and awaited their reply.

Athens was of opinion that, things having taken place as represented, the spoliation committed by Jesus was evident, and that he was, therefore, bound to make restitution and indemnification for the loss caused by him. He ought even to be punished for his irruption, arms in hand, into a foreign domain, and to give security that he would never do it again.

Rome refused to pronounce upon the matter. There were circumstances in the case which should lead one to ask if Jesus had not, perhaps, simply resumed what was his; and this was the point to be cleared up first, before judges duly qualified.

Corinth was of the same opinion as Athens, unless, however, Jesus had exercised a right of recovering.

Paris did not wish to decide. History appeared too obscure, and, besides, non jurisconsulti est super mere facto respondere, sed de jure tantum.

Nothing of all this helped the business of the devils. The suit took its course. Moses, on the 14th of July, had presented two persons, notable and well-to-do, Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, as guarantees for the solvability of his party. Notwithstanding the protestations made by Belial, Solomon declared them acceptable. The infernal council decided to demand proof, by witnesses in favor of its claim, and summoned Belphegor, Adam, Cain, Dismas the bad thief, King David himself, and the giant Cupean, the enemy of Siegfried the cuirassier, and known in the old heroic poems of Germany as a redoubtable adversary of justice and law. All these persons were to attest the perpetuity of the possession of hell, and of all which it contained, and the violence Jesus must have used to attain his end.

Then followed the fastidious repetition of the same formalities, the list of questions addressed to these new witnesses, and the contradictory discussions to which the testimony brought to the knowledge of the two parties gave rise. Moses draws the most favorable conclusions for his cause from the depositions furnished by the witnesses cited in the interest of hell. Rejoinders and sur-rejoinders succeeded each other on both sides. Finally, Solomon asked of the two attorneys if they had anything more to add, and, upon their answer in the negative, he appointed the 12th of September for pronouncing sentence.

Before doing so, however, he required of Daniel an exact and circumstantial report of all that had been said or done; and, although his personal opinion was that Jesus was entirely innocent, still he submitted the affair to two of his intimate counselors, who confirmed him in his judgment.

At length, judgment was pronounced. Belial's complaint was declared to be inadmissible. It was affirmed that Jesus had only used his right of recovery, and that he was justified in employing open force to retake his property unlawfully retained. Lucifer was condemned, with costs.

Moses, on the reading of the sentence, bowed deferentially. But Belial tore his hair, and wept and howled so loudly that King Solomon had to stop his ears. He carried his insolence so far as to accuse his judge of allowing himself to be misled by his relation of kinsman to Jesus. Then he observed that he had ten days for appeal tempore utilis. Afterwards he went back to hell so drenched with tears that he looked as though he had come out of a bath. However, he took counsel with Lucifer as to attempting a second appeal, and especially of choosing his witnesses better. They had been wrong in not invoking the testimony of Judas Iscariot, who had lived in intimacy with Jesus, and, moreover, was not closely attached to him. The devils, therefore, resumed some courage, and Belial, having as before asked an audience of the Eternal Father, obtained from him permission that the judge in the second trial should be Joseph, the secretary of King Pharaoh.

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE STORY OF MRS. PACKARD.

EXPERIENCE IN AN INSANE ASYLUM—FULL PROOF WHY THE RIGHT OF CORRESPONDENCE SHOULD BE GRANTED THE INSANE.

Mrs. Packard made this following argument of facts a few days since in support of bills on insane-asylum reforms, as requested by the Senate Committee on Benevolent Institutions:—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee,—I am a native of Massachusetts, the only daughter of an Orthodox clergyman of the Congregational denomination, and wife of a Congregational clergyman of Massachusetts, who was preaching to a Presbyterian church in Manteno, Kankakee County, Illinois, when this legal persecution commenced. Mr. Packard, my husband, was at that time a member of the Chicago Presbytery.

I have been educated a Calvinist after the strictest sect, but as my reasoning faculties have been developed by education I have been led, by the simple exercise of my own reason and common-sense, to indorse theological views in conflict with my educated belief and the creed of the church with which I am connected. In short, from my present standpoint I cannot but believe that the doctrine of total depravity, which implies the loss of infants, conflicts with the dictates of reason, common-sense, and the Bible. And, gentlemen, the only crime I have committed is to dare to be true to these, my honest convictions, and to give my argument in support of these views in a Bible-class in Manteno, at the special request of the teacher of that class, and with the full and free consent of my husband.

But the popular indorsement of these views by the class and the community generally led my husband and his Calvinistic church to fear lest their church creed might suffer serious detriment by this license of private judgment and free inquiry, and these liberal views, emanating from his own family; and he, declining to meet me on the open arena of argument and free discussion, chose rather to use the marital power which common law, unmodified, as it then was, by statute law in Illinois, licensed him to use over my identity; and under a very unjust statute law of Illinois, then in force, he got me legally imprisoned in Jacksonville insane asylum, without evidence of insanity and without trial, hoping, as he told me, that by so doing he could destroy my moral influence, and thereby defend the cause of Christ as he felt bound to do.

The first intimation I had of this legal exposure was by two men entering my room on the morning of the 18th of June, 1860, and kidnapping me. Two of his church-members, attended by Sheriff Burgess, of Kankakee, took me up in their arms and carried me to the wagon, and thence to the cars, in spite of my lady-like protests, and regardless of all my entreaties for some sort of a trial before imprisonment.

My husband replied, "I am doing as the laws of Illinois allow me to do. You have no protector in law but myself, and I am protecting you now. It is for your good I am doing this. I want to save your soul. You don't believe in total depravity, and I want to make you right."

"Husband," said I, "have I not a right to my opinions?"

"You have a right to right opinions, but no right to wrong opinions."

"But does not the Constitution of the American government defend the right of private judgment to all citizens?"

"Yes, to all citizens it does defend this right; but you are not a citizen. While a married woman you are a legal nonentity, without even a soul in law, for your individual rights are all suspended during coverture; therefore the exercise of them depends upon my will or dictation."

Here I was taken from my little family of six children, while my babe was only eighteen months old, while in the faithful discharge of all my duties as wife, mother, and housekeeper, in perfect health and sound mind, and forced into an imprisonment of indefinite length, without the mere form of a trial, and with no chance for self-defence.

But the community outside the church were staunch defenders of the rights of free thought and free speech, and they determined to defend me in my quiet and reasonable exercise of the rights of private judgment. They accordingly met at the Manteno depot, in a large crowd, to rescue me from the hands of my legal kidnappers; but to their surprise the sheriff was there, claiming that Mr. Packard had this legal right thus to control the identity of his wife.

The crowd were taken aback, but, instead of resisting this officer by a mob defence,—the only alternative left them,—volunteered my speedy liberation under the habeas corpus act; but in carrying into exercise their manly intentions, they found unexpected obstacles in the nonentity position in which the common law placed me; and since the consent of the man in whom my identity was merged or lost could not be obtained, the only alternative left me was to make application by letter, by which means alone they could legally get me for trial. I accordingly wrote, making application; but, behold! the superintendent, being an accomplice with my persecutors, and being allowed the censorship of my letters, would not mail my letter; and when he shut down upon me, every avenue between me and the laws was forever closed. I was as powerless to thwart that conspiracy as if I had been in my grave. And thus, in consequence of not having my postal rights protected to me, as an inmate of an insane asylum, I was imprisoned three years. But had this right been secure from interference, I need not have been there a week; I could have written and obtained a trial at once, and been discharged, instead of being incarcerated three years, absolutely defenceless because outside the pale of justice while inside a humanitarian institution.

Now, Christian gentlemen, will you not cheerfully cooperate in opening an avenue through which these unfortunate victims of cupidity, envy, jealousy, bigotry, or malice can easily and promptly appeal to the laws for deliverance from these machinations of the unscrupulous?

Besides, gentlemen, the personal wrongs and injustice I there endured might have been averted, had I been able to appeal to the laws. For example: One day I summoned courage to espouse the cause of these innocent victims of Doctor McFarland's barbarous attendants by giving him a written delineation of their cruel practices, and besought him to interpose and protect his patients. I accompanied this appeal with a fair warning that if he did not heed this request, since he was the only one we could appeal to, I should deem it my duty to expose him when I got out. But, instead of heeding my warning by protecting his patients, he led me that very day into the mad-room, where were confined eighteen of the most furious maniacs of the whole house, and instructed my attendants to treat me just as they did the maniacs.

Here my life was constantly exposed, both night as well as day, from their insane fights and dangerous attacks. I have been dragged around this ward by the hair of my head by the maniacs. I have received blows from them which almost killed me. I have begged and besought Doctor McFarland to remove me to some place of safety, where my life would not be so exposed, only to see him turn speechless away from me. And thus have I vainly sought for help for two years and eight months from this mad-room!

I have appealed to his humane assistant, Doctor Tenny, and, with tears of pity in his eyes, he has assured me, "There is no appeal to any law, person, or board, from the autocratic power of the superintendent, from these prison wards." Said he: "Mrs. Packard, I am a subordinate, as well as you. No power rules this house but the will of Doctor McFarland,—and there is no appeal from it; and therefore there is no help can reach you."

Oh, gentlemen, did I not need a body-guard to appeal to? And can you blame me for trying to secure one for others in like extremities? Ought not this Christian government to have provided one for such emergencies? Oh, let me say to you, my God-like brothers, there is power to oppress the inmates of insane asylums, and there is no appeal from it but to the righteous bar of our common Judge.

MY DELIVERANCE.

Dr. McFarland's "subduing treatment," as they call it, being so long and persistently continued, aroused a mutinous spirit within and a mob spirit without, by which an impending crisis was heralded; and, taking advantage of the state of perturbation into which the Doctor's mind was thrown thereby, I ventured to ask him to allow me to expose my obnoxious views before the Calvinistic trustees, that, as I argued, they might see my insanity, and thus secure to himself their intelligent cooperation and support in meeting the impending crisis. This pleased him, and he granted my request. In the most dauntless and unrestrained manner did I delineate my views of religious truth and my reasons for believing this.

But the trustees, although Calvinists, had the sagacity to readily discover that it was the use of my reason, rather than the loss of it, that had caused my persecutors to use the asylum in my case as an inquisition, and, of course, ordered my discharge.

Finding this refuge had failed him, the discomfited superintendent immediately commenced to negotiate, through my husband, with an asylum in Northampton, Mass., to have me incarcerated for life within its gloomy cells, to prevent my ever having an opportunity of exposing him. To aid my husband in this nefarious work, Doctor McFarland gave his written certificate that I was hopelessly insane, which certificate was to serve as my only passport into hopeless imprisonment. Yes, into a life-long imprisonment, without even the form of a trial, was I thus deliberately and heartlessly consigned by Doctor McFarland's certificate. And Doctor Prince, of Northampton Insane Asylum, consented to take this certificate from an "expert superintendent" as his only evidence of my title to a cell, for life, among gibbering idiots and raving, howling maniacs.

And now, gentlemen, as legislators of the State of Indiana, allow me to ask you one question: What chance has the victim when once within this "asylum ring," with no trial before being imprisoned, and none within his reach after getting there? Is it strange that the unscrupulous have used these institutions for base purposes?

And, gentlemen, in closing my argument of facts I wish to demonstrate the potency of the remedy this bill proposes, by its application to myself in rescuing me from this impending crisis.

While these two great conspirators against my personal liberty, Doctor McFarland and my husband, were maturing their plot, I was kept a close prisoner in my own house, in Manteno, under my husband's lock and key, for two months, and all communication with the post-office most scrupulously denied me. But, through the overrulings of a mysterious Providence, two days before I was consigned to this terrible fate I found some letters and manuscripts left in my room by mistake, wherein all this mature plot was revealed. Action, prompt and efficient, became an imperative necessity on my part.

I therefore wrote a note, revealing the discovery contained in these manuscripts, and pushed it down through where the windows come together, into the hands of a stranger gentleman who was passing through our yard, and he delivered it into the hands of Mrs. Haslet, to whom I had directed it, and she took it to Judge Starr, of Kankakee City, and begged of him to rescue me before two days, or I should be beyond the reach of all human help for this world.

Since I was a prisoner, and had now made application myself for a trial, Judge Starr could legally, and did promptly, summon Mr. Packard, under the habeas corpus act, to bring me before him, and show a justifiable cause for imprisoning me. This he failed to do for want of any evidence to bring before the jury that I then was, or ever had been, insane.

After a trial of five days the jury pronounced me sane, notwithstanding Mr. Packard's witnesses swore that it was evidence of insanity for a person to wish to leave a Presbyterian church and join a Methodist, and notwithstanding the sworn testimony of his certifying physicians that I had the same kind of insanity as Henry Ward Beecher, Horace Greeley, and Spurgeon, and three-quarters of the religious community generally.

Thus you see, gentlemen, that this letter proved to be the very point upon which my personal liberty for life was suspended. Had I not succeeded in getting out this letter, my persecutors would probably have triumphed over me, and I might now have been still entombed in one of these living cemeteries. And I believe, gentlemen, there are hundreds of American citizens now in the insane asylums of the United States who at this moment need this remedy as much as I then did, and who ought to have it promptly extended to them. And is it not your duty to provide it for them? And Oh, what a harmless, simple remedy for such momentous evils!

Before the trial closed, Mr. Packard fled his country in the night, to avoid the dangers of a mob retribution. He took with him all our property and our minor children. He rented our place and sold my furniture; took my money, notes, and also my own wardrobe, thus making me homeless, penniless, and childless.

Thus robbed of all my life-earnings and bereaved of my children, in addition to my three years of false imprisonment, as the decision of the jury had proved it to be, I now appealed to the laws for protection of my rights of conscientious and religious belief, as a married woman, when, alas! I found I had no laws to appeal to! And since it is impossible to prosecute parties for doing legal acts, there was found to be no redress for any of my wrongs in the laws.

And, the only restitution I ask of my government is that you now enact such laws as will henceforth render such an outrage upon any other American woman a legal impossibility.

Please, gentlemen, allow me now to ask one personal favor, which is that you report this bill at your earliest possible convenience, that I may be at liberty to commence my winter campaign work in the legislatures.

Very respectfully submitted in behalf of the unfortunate, by

Mrs. E. P. W. PACKARD,
Chicago, Ill.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 28, 1879.
—Indianapolis News, Feb. 4.

TRAIN THE BOYS FOR BUSINESS.

There is one element in the home instruction of boys to which, says a Boston paper, too little attention has been given; and that is the cultivation of habits of punctuality, system, order, and responsibility. In too many households boys from twelve to seventeen years are too much administered to by loving mothers or other female members of the family. Boys' lives during those years are the halcyon days of their existence. Up in the morning just in season for breakfast; nothing to do but to start off early enough not to be late; looking upon an errand as taking so much time and memory away from enjoyment; little thought of personal appearance except when reminded by mother to "spruce up" a little; finding his wardrobe always where mother puts it,—in fact, having nothing to do but enjoy himself.

Thus his life goes on until school ends. Then he is ready for business. He goes into an office where everything is system, order, precision. He is expected to keep things neat and orderly, sometimes kindle fires, file letters, do errands,—in short, become a part of a nicely-regulated machine, where everything moves in systematic grooves, and each one is responsible for correctness in his department, and where, in place of ministers to his comfort, he finds task-masters, more or less lenient to be sure, and everything in marked contrast to his previous life.

In many instances the change is too great. Errors become numerous; blunders, overlooked at first, get to be a matter of serious moment; then patience is overtasked, and the boy is told his services are no longer wanted. This is his first blow, and sometimes he never rallies from it. Then comes the surprise to the parents, who too often never knew the real cause, nor where they have failed in the training of their children.

What is wanted is for every boy to have something special to do; to have some duty at a definite hour, and to learn to watch for that time to come; to be answerable for a certain portion of the routine of the household; to be trained to anticipate the time when he may enter the ranks of business, and be fortified with habits of energy, accuracy, and application, often of more importance than superficial book-learning.—Scientific American.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE SONG OF THE DYING SWAN.

When was I grieved and sad?
When full of doubts and fears?
To-day I am so glad,
There is no room for tears
Within my happy eyes;
Nor does my bosom rise
With long-drawn quivering sighs
That tell of troublous thought,
Of glad hopes come to naught.
Some mystic power has caught
The helm of thought from me,
And holds it steadily.
So my brave ship sails far
From every treacherous bar,
From all the shoals of care,
From doubts that over there,
In that far yesterday,
Drove many a hope away,
And steers her safe to sea,
Where waves roll silently,
Where breezes all blow fair,
Where sunshine, bright and rare,
Shines over every place.
I turn my happy face
From all the troubled Past,
Forget the skies' forecast
That once my soul could fright;
And, with a heart as light
As any heart that beats,
I watch the view that meets
My eager onward gaze.
Exultantly I raise
My thoughts on high, and give
Glad thanks because I live!
Because, though I have grieved,
Have suffered, disbelieved,
Have loved, lost, been deceived,
I still have much achieved!
I still have much to gain;
Joy balances each pain!
The Past, though it brought grief
That then seemed past relief,
Has grown so like a dream,
Its numerous stings but seem
Dark shadows on the wall,
Where now the sunbeams fall
Uncolored! And the Now,—
Ah, who can tell me how
These changes come to pass!
This Now is but a mass
Of glorious, golden hours,
Of culminating powers,
Of wishes, soon to be
Real things and joys for me!
The Future shines and glows;
And, on the breeze that blows
So gayly o'er the land,
Come near and close at hand
The hopes I sent away
On that sad yesterday!
My ships are coming in;
The wind and tide are fair;
And soon I shall begin
To count the treasures rare
Which they will bring to me.
What wonder that I see,
As thus I look ahead,
No clouds to fill with dread
My happy heart and soul!
Gently the billows roll;
My ships are nearing shore,
Their cargo golden ore;
And in my heart I'll store
The treasure that I wait.
The Past is but a dream,
To-day's a radiant gleam
Of sunshine, and I seem
To fear no future fate.

JRAN.

BOOTHBY, No.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 22.

Rev. L. Hamilton, $1.50; David Branson, $25; Henry Kelst, $3.20; Mr. Hallgarten, $3; O. K. Crosby, 50 cents; S. E. Hazelton, $2; Prof. W. F. Allen, $3.20; Warren Emerson, $17.20; New England News Co., $6.73; Mrs. Dr. James Hogeboom, $3.20; S. W. Sample, $1.50; W. McFarland, $7.75; D. E. Shanahan, $1; D. B. Morton, $3; Jno. S. Cox, $3.20; Nath'l Little, Jr., $10; Ferley F. Lakeman, $1.50; H. W. Moore, $2; Paul Reber, Jr., $1.50; C. E. Harkin, 10 cents; G. P. Delaplaine, $3; Dr. I. Tabor, $2; William Green, $3; H. S. Bradford, $1.50; Arnold Leo, $3; Thomas Tibbette, $1; Miss Lucy H. Balch, $1.70; E. D. Stark, $1; S. B. Coleman, $1.50; F. W. Orvis, $3.30; E. A. J. Lindsey, $5; Jason Allard, $3.25; W. H. Hamlen, $3.50; William Howland, $4.40; Mrs. Sarah F. Leighton, $1.50; O. W. Symons, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEB. 27, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postlaw of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

A FINE CHANCE TO CLUB.

We have made arrangements with the respective publishers to club THE INDEX with the following first-class magazines, for a year, at the astonishingly low rates annexed:—

Fortnightly Review..... $5.50 instead of $8.20
North American Review..... 5.75 " " "
Popular Science Monthly..... 8.00 " " "

To the subscriber, this is equivalent to getting one of these leading periodicals at the usual rate, $5.00, and THE INDEX besides at only $0.50, $0.75, or $1.00. The offer is necessarily confined to names not now on our mail list, and is made solely to increase the circulation of THE INDEX, whose friends will find it a great aid in kindly seconding our efforts to this end.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture in Paine Hall next Sunday, March 2, both forenoon and afternoon.

THE Graphic is as bad as the numerous other secular papers which are poking fun at His Lectureship: "Joseph Cook's definition of a small philosopher is quotable: 'One who guesses at half, and multiplies it by two.' And Joseph—by the way, Joseph—we think we have our eye on that man now." The reason why His Lectureship's definition is "quotable" may be found in the fact that its excellence is attested by its age.

THE CAMBRIDGE Tribune of February 21 refers very flatteringly to Mr. Stoddard: "The course of lectures on foreign travel, by John L. Stoddard, begins next Thursday, Feb. 27, at Union Hall. No lecturer now before the people has risen so rapidly to well deserved and enduring popularity. His lectures are so eloquent and interesting that they scarcely need the aid of illustrations; and his views are so fine that they almost supersede the necessity of the lecture for their explanation. The art of man in its highest development, as seen in the world-renowned statuary and paintings of Europe, the wonders and beauties of European scenery, and the vivid portrayal of the daily life of the people of the great cities of Europe and the East, together form subjects of interest and information to every class in society. But a few days more remain in which to secure tickets, which have been selling very rapidly."

CORPORATE CONSCIENCE.

Charles Sumner, who won the proudest title ever bestowed by the common people on any of their servants,—that of "The Incorruptible Senator,"—is quoted as having said: "True politics are simply morals applied to public affairs." That was a great saying, worthy of the man. It is the whole of statesmanship molten into a phrase; and it tells, with splendid simplicity, the open secret of Sumner's heroic life. His entire public career was only a commentary on that text; and his fame will wax greater from age to age, because text and commentary together put before men's eyes the supreme law of history condensed into a deathless name. The immortality of Truth cleaves to her faithful followers.

To affirm that true politics—that is, the art of administering government so as to secure the true welfare of the people—are nothing but "morals applied to public affairs," is tantamount to affirming that nations, like individuals, have consciences, and are subject to moral law. This is the fact. It does not follow, however, as is imagined by those who argue for the Christianizing of the national Constitution, that the State is a mysterious entity, with a personality of its own distinct and separate from the personalities of its citizens. This notion is an inheritance from the "Realism" of the metaphysical schoolmen who flourished in the Middle Ages, by which independent existence was attributed to general ideas or abstractions; it is exploded and defunct in modern philosophy. In a recent number of the Orange Journal, Mr. Oliver Johnson, the veteran abolitionist, thus pithily stated the modern doctrine on this subject:—

The State has no personality, but many persons; no conscience, but as many consciences as it has citizens; no soul, but a multitude of souls. Hence responsibility, in the proper sense of the word, cannot be predicated of the State, considered apart from the individuals of whom it is composed.

Mr. Johnson's excellent statement, however, leaves out one element of the truth which ought to be included. It is quite true that the State has no conscience other than the consciences of its individual citizens; but it is equally true that these individual consciences hold other than individual relations when they act together as "the State." There is a common saying that "corporations have no souls," and it is a melancholy fact that most corporations manifest none. But they all ought to have souls—as many souls as they have individual members. If, in consequence of their divided responsibility, the members infer that they have no responsibility as individuals when they act as a corporation, the real truth is, not that the corporation has no soul, but that the members who compose it despise, disobey, and ignore the souls they have. The insensibility to moral considerations which men so frequently manifest in their collective action by no means proves that in their collective action they are not under moral law; they are really just as much under it as when they act in their private capacity. The trouble comes from the division of responsibility, and the consequent ease of each man's throwing his own share of it upon his fellows. That this is ever done, and that any man should sophisticate himself into a belief of his own guiltlessness when he has joined a crowd in doing wrong, is simply a proof of his own moral and intellectual childishness. Division destroys nothing; divided responsibility is responsibility still. John Smith would think himself a swindler, if he refused to pay John Brown a debt of ten dollars; but he is a million-fold worse swindler, if he votes with a political party to repudiate a national debt which he and they owe to the multitudinous victims of the fraud. A single man seldom commits an enormous sin; but with a crowd he can easily help commit a sin of which his individual share is enormous indeed. Just in proportion to the magnitude of the power of a corporation and the magnitude of the interests which are dependent upon its action, is the magnitude of each member's responsibility for that action. He may shut his eyes to it; he often does so; but none the less is he a rascal, if the action he has sanctioned is rascally.

There is, then, such a thing as a corporate conscience; namely, the aggregated consciences of the members who actively or passively join in the corporate act. Being to all intents and purposes a corporation, the State as such has its own corporate conscience. Each citizen of the State stands in two different moral relations to his fellow-citizens—one as a private individual, one as a citizen of the State. In both relations he is equally bound by the moral law. He is bound to obey the moral law in his individual relations, in virtue of his individual conscience; he is equally bound to obey the moral law when he associates his individual conscience with other consciences in civic acts, and thereby helps to constitute the corporate conscience of the State. It is this fact of the aggregation of consciences in the performance of single actions by the corporate State—an aggregation which creates a corporate conscience distinguishable, though not separable, from the individual consciences of the citizens—which we would recognize in addition to Mr. Johnson's statement.

Join a strong intellect with a great moral nature, and you will without fail have a citizen who is as vitally interested in national morality as he is in the morality of his own private transactions, and for the reason that he is really as much implicated in the one as in the other. He will carry into all his activity as a citizen the same high principles which govern him in his private life; he will comprehend and feel his own moral responsibility, as a factor of the State's corporate conscience; he will be as anxious to understand the moral character, tendency, and results of all important public measures as of his own transactions; he will apply the moral law as rigidly to one as to the other. There is no good citizen who does otherwise. Men may be good individuals without being good citizens; but they will be good individuals on a very petty scale, limited in capacity and insignificant in public influence. All good citizens are conscious of their large relations to their countrymen and to the world, as factors of the State's corporate conscience; they add to mere individual goodness the dignity and glory of good citizenship; they enter into the mighty national life with intelligence and moral power, and do their part in the shaping of the national destiny; they scorn to busy themselves in the microscopic details of individual life, and put forth their noblest energies in "true politics"—"the application of morals to public affairs." It is not necessary to become politicians or dabble in the dirty waters of party politics. But it is necessary to shirk no public duty, to do all that opportunity permits towards forming a wise and noble public opinion, to exert one's utmost power in behalf of national righteousness. The State's corporate conscience is made up of private consciences, and its power is simply the aggregated power of these. Nothing, therefore, can atone for that fatal defect of individual character which makes so many men indifferent to the moral complexion and bearing of legislation. They, even more than the actively bad, are the prime cause of national disaster and shame. Free Religion is good for little, if it does not quicken the sense of responsibility in each one of us for the character of our own collective action—not only as factors of the corporate conscience of the State, but also of all minor associations in which we may be members. The sluggishness of the good causes a thousand times as much evil in this world as the most violent exertions of the vicious. Humanity's dreary and sad history will read far differently, when good individuals become good citizens, control the corporate conscience of the State and lesser societies, and cease to abandon all collective action to the management of selfish and unworthy schemers.

The disgrace which can be brought upon the State by permitting those to govern politics who laugh at the "application of morals to public affairs" is painfully illustrated in the passage of the anti-Chinese bill by Congress. Here is a public measure which not only commits the grossest injustice against a weaker race, in flagrant violation of the lessons taught us by the civil war which punished us so mercilessly for similar wrongs against another race, but also violates the most solemn treaty stipulations and breaks faith with China in a manner which must draw upon the United States the scorn of civilized countries throughout the world. We blame less the miscreants in Congress who have accomplished this shame than the inert good who have suffered such miscreants to represent them there. If the people themselves had more conscience in public affairs, they would require it in their servants. Politics are to-day in this country the exact reverse of what Sumner defined "true politics" to be; they are the most ingenious and successful application of immorality to public affairs.

There can be no remedy for such national humiliations except through the development of the corporate conscience of the nation; and that means that American citizens should see, feel, and act upon far nobler principles, touching their responsibility as members of political and other organizations, than they have ever hitherto done. They must come to believe that corporate conscience is a veritable fact; that each individual is a factor of it; that disregard for the morality of corporate action is every whit as disgraceful as disregard for private morality; that there is no such thing as shielding oneself from shame behind the plea of divided responsibility; that the shame of immoral corporate action belongs entire and undiminished to every one who favored it or failed to fight against it. Until this higher development of the moral sense comes to supplement the vast increase of associated activity in modern times, and to hold in check the terrible demoralization it is introducing into American society in all directions, what can be expected but wave on wave of public immorality and humiliation? It is not enough to have quick individual consciences; that is still a desideratum. But we must have, as a nation, as members of countless minor organizations, a quick and strong corporate conscience. Let us not follow up the exploded doctrine that "the King can do no wrong" with the worse absurdity that "the State can do no wrong": the State can do wrong, does do wrong, will do wrong, until we learn that conscience commands us all just as absolutely in our collective as in our private action. The moral law is the supreme power in human history, and conscripts all men, all nations, all events, all ages, into the great army of witnesses to its eternal and terrible majesty. Fool indeed is he who elicits it; he shall be ground to powder in the mills that "grind slowly, but grind exceeding small." The future of America depends on her ability to evolve a better conscience than the world has yet known; and the first betterment of it will be to make it corporate no less than private.

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

I have been so occupied the past few weeks that I have found no time to write a letter for THE INDEX. After the Syracuse Convention, following Greeley's advice, I went West. Passing over into Canada, I gave lectures at Toronto, St. Thomas, and Aylmer. I have been to Toronto many times, having given as many as twenty lectures in that city. There is quite a large liberal association there, organized some four years ago after a debate in that city between Rev. John Marples, a Presbyterian clergyman, and myself. It has done very effective work. The Freethought Journal, a very creditable liberal paper, edited by Mr. Hargraves, is still published, but I fear not very well sustained. The first time I went to St. Thomas, my arrest was seriously contemplated by the authorities; but this season nothing was said about arresting me, and the attendance was much increased. When I visited Aylmer, some five or six years ago, the Methodist minister of the place tried to produce disturbance at the first lecture, and afterwards tried to have me arrested for blasphemy. Subsequently a public debate occurred there between Prof. Burgess, President of the North-Western Christian University of Indianapolis, and myself, which was largely attended, and reported and published by Mr. Pankhurst of the Aylmer Paper. Since then I have been to Aylmer several times and addressed large and intelligent audiences.

I lectured to good audiences this season at Toledo, West Liberty, La Rue, Nevada, and Marysville, Ohio. At Toledo my lectures were under the auspices of the Turnverein. The American liberals of that city show no disposition to unite in any kind of organization. At none of the other places above mentioned is there any liberal association.

I gave lectures at La Harpe, La Salle, Minier, Carlinville, Eureka, and Bushnell, Illinois. Of all these places only the one last named has a liberal organization, and that is rather feeble; yet the liberal thought and feeling are strong, and my lectures were largely attended. Perhaps I should mention Eureka as an exception. It is a dull little town, and is known chiefly as the seat of a Disciple (Campbellite) College. My audiences there were composed principally of the professors and students. The lectures were on scientific subjects. At Minier I spoke in the Disciple Church, a church in which I have, the past two years, given thirteen lectures of the most radical sort. The trustees of the church readily granted it for these lectures. I suspect there is about as much scepticism and unbelief inside as there is outside of that society.

I gave lectures at Carthage, Pleasant Hill, Carthage, Joplin, and Hannibal, Missouri. There are Liberal Leagues at Carthage and Joplin, but neither is in a very vigorous condition. Indifference seems to be the main reason; but liberal lectures are largely attended. At Hannibal there is a small association composed of good material. I have given two courses of lectures there this season.

I lectured to large audiences at Fort Scott, Independence, and Columbus, Kansas, where the liberal element is large, although wholly unorganized.

Big Rapids, Michigan, is another city that swarms with freethinkers, and gave me excellent audiences through a course of lectures, but where there is no inclination to unite in organization.

I lectured at Brazil, Zionsville, Lebanon, and Indianapolis, Indiana. There is a liberal association at Brazil composed of intelligent, earnest freethinkers; but the general intelligence of the place is not above the average.

At Zionsville there is no organization. When I first went there some five years ago, I was hooted at, as I stepped from the cars, by the crowd that had collected at the depot to see an infidel lecturer. Arrangements had been made by a gentleman in my behalf, and by the Disciple Church on the other side, for a debate between a Rev. Mr. Jewell and myself. The churches had everything their own way. There was but one avowed freethinker in the place. The feeling against me was very bitter. The debate took place in the Disciple Church, lasting four days. Now Zionsville is a very liberal village. Some of the chief supporters of Jewell have become freethinkers. He has left the ministry and gone to publishing a daily paper in Illinois. The Disciple Church is without a pastor and has no regular service,—indeed, is virtually dead. I have been there several times since the debate, addressing audiences of from four to five hundred.

Indianapolis is a city in which the liberal element is large, although quite unorganized so far as I know. I gave two lectures there this season, one in the Grand Opera House, Sunday afternoon, with an admission fee of twenty-five cents, to an audience of over six hundred, and the other in the evening at Unity Church, which by the courtesy of the trustees was placed at our service. The morning of the same day I listened to an able, sensible, and liberal discourse by Mr. G. W. Cooke, pastor of Unity Church, who is making many friends among the freethinkers of Indianapolis.

On my way East I stopped at Irwin's Station, a town of some two thousand inhabitants, eighteen miles east of Pittsburgh, on the Pennsylvania Central. I had been engaged by a Liberal League, recently formed, to give two lectures. A Methodist bishop having been there preaching in defence of Christianity, the liberal minds thought they would offer the public an opportunity to hear something on the other side. The school-house was secured for the lectures from the president of the school-board, who had been authorized to let it when and to whom he saw fit. From the time my lectures were announced, the clergy commenced denouncing infidelity, and warning the people not to hear me. Personally I was prayed for and prayed at, and represented, I was told, as a very wicked and dangerous agent of the devil. Public sentiment was decidedly against me. After my arrival, the school-board met and passed a resolution to the effect that the building should not be used for lectures by me. But the president of the board declared he had made a contract with certain parties, and he should keep it. He accordingly authorized the county constable, in writing, to have the building opened for the lectures. About 8 P.M. I passed through a large crowd that thronged the street, and entered the building, in which I found, comfortably seated, awaiting my arrival, a hundred or more persons. An admission fee and apprehensions of trouble combined to make the audience smaller than we had been led to expect. But the audience was intelligent and appreciative. No disturbance, no interruption occurred. We were not annoyed even by the crowd outside. I gave rather a mild lecture, the subject being, "Science versus the Bible." I exposed some of the absurdities of the mosaic cosmogony, and presented as more reasonable and consistent the theory of evolution. After the lecture, I returned to the hotel. The next evening, about ten minutes before the time to commence my lecture, and before I had left the hotel for the hall, I was arrested by an officer, on a warrant charging that, with two other persons, I had forcibly entered, and for two hours or more held, the school-house for immoral purposes. The other gentlemen, William Crookston, a prominent merchant, and Mr. Boileur, county constable, were arrested at the same time. Five hundred dollars' bail in each case was required, and, this being given, we went to the hall (another place having been secured for the second lecture), where I was able to begin speaking five minutes past eight. The lecture was given, nothing unusual occurring, and the next morning I took the cars East. I am to appear for trial next May.

I do not know any of the persons who caused the arrest. They are probably religious fanatics, urged on, I was told, by some of the clergy. The charge against me is entirely false. I went to the school-house as I would to any public hall, neither meeting nor offering resistance, nor receiving any intimation from any officer that the occupation of the building was forbidden. The charge against Mr. Crookston and Mr. Boileur is, so far as I know, untrue. The poor bigots who have instigated these arrests will probably be ashamed of themselves before the matter ends. They have done more to promote freethought than I could by lecturing in Westmoreland County for months.

This case of petty spite and persecution is but a ripple on the current of events, serving to remind us of the narrowness and intolerance still to be found in small places, where the people are yet largely under the influence of the Orthodox clergy.

B. F. U.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Forty-nine million of us in 1880.

There are over one hundred Jews in Canton, Mass.

Forty-one clergymen immigrated to this country last year.

Pope Leo XIII. has created two new dioceses in this country.

London has forty-five theatres and twenty-five music halls.

England has one hundred thousand people living upon canal boats.

It looks as though the Massachusetts Agricultural College was a failure.

Moody's meetings in Baltimore are said to be crowded with listeners.

Mme. Anderson gives the credit of her walking to "her Heavenly Father."

There are eight young Chinamen attending the Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass.

The liberals of Cincinnati, Ohio, contemplate organizing a local Liberal League in that city.

Artificial teeth were manufactured in China centuries before they were produced in Europe.

Japan sells boots in the United States manufactured from leather brought from American ports.

New York State has six thousand four hundred ecclesiastical organizations of all denominations.

The Pope has accepted the resignation of Archbishop Purcell, and is casting about for a successor.

The "man in the moon" is formed by the gray plains, where once, astronomers think, an ocean spread.

The Presbyterians are petitioning the Alabama legislature to prohibit the running of railroad trains on Sunday.

Henry C. Work, the popular song-author, says, "The writer of songs doesn't generally feel much like singing."

Hayti is said to produce a narcotic plant so powerful that it will cause coma of any desired intensity and duration.

Piety has broken out in Louisville. An effort is making to keep people from enjoying themselves in that city on Sundays.

It looks as though Denis Kearney was a prophet, after all. The Chinese must go; and not only that, but they must not come.

The late Unitarian Conference in Brooklyn was thinly attended, and caused hardly a ripple upon the surface of liberal society.

The Archbishop of Paris reports to the Vatican that the French radicals will insist upon the separation of Church and State.

Carlyle, that writer of intricate English, is described as looking "very old and grizzly." It is said that he dislikes Americans.

The works of Darwin are more popular in Germany, it is said, for the purposes of university education, than in Great Britain.

Beecher says: "There was not one of the patriarchs who did not live such a life as in these days would put him in the penitentiary."

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children cared for and furnished comfortable homes to nearly seven hundred children last year.

The Pope is making a collection of the abusive, offensive, and threatening letters which he has received from socialists in all parts of Europe.

Bishop Huntington and several other distinguished clergymen of Western New York, are engaged in a movement to get rid of the Onondaga Community.

Christianity has been organized over eighteen hundred years, and can only boast to-day of including (nominally) about a quarter of the earth's inhabitants.

It is said that a Baptist church in this city puts cologne in the water used for baptismal purposes. Sinners not only get washed, but perfumed, nowadays.

The United States have more miles of telegraph wire than any country in the world; one hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and four are the figures.

It cost the State about $7,777 to decide whether the preacher of the annual sermon before the legislature should receive $50 or $100. This is "retrenchment." It costs too much to retrench!

A Washington letter sends us the following humiliating news: "Drunkenness among the members of the House continues to prevail to an injurious extent. The restaurants sell whiskey under the name of 'cold tea.'"

The President approved the act to allow women to practice before the Supreme Court. Another "right" conceded to woman. Why not grant all her rights at once, and acknowledge woman's equality with man? It has got to come.

The kindness of the many friends of THE INDEX in forwarding new subscribers to the paper encourages us in expecting more of the same sort. The best day to do anything is to-day. Now is Nature's best opportunity. We shall look for a larger number of names each week.

Rev. Mr. Murray preached recently in Plymouth Church. His views were almost opposite to those of Mr. Beecher on many questions of doctrine, and caused no little comment among his hearers. Mr. Murray does not believe in letting the sinner off so easily as does Mr. Beecher.

A correspondent of a Western paper thinks the Rev. Joseph Cook of Tremont Temple notoriety is "no more just to workmen than Kearney is to capitalists." He describes him thus: "Cook is large, obese, full of hot blood, with coarse hair and skin, and looks like a Scotch butcher."

Fossilized remains of what is reported as a gigantic prehistoric man have been found two hundred feet beneath the earth's surface in a cave recently opened in a mine near Eureka, Nevada. The lower limbs, head, and neck are said to be clearly defined and natural. Is it another "Cardiff Giant"?

Oxford Street Chapel, Lynn, was filled Sunday afternoon, Feb. 16, to hear a lecture on "Taxation of Church Property" by the minister of the Free Religious Society which holds its meetings there. A petition, asking for "the repeal of all laws exempting ecclesiastical property from taxation," was signed by a large number of people present.

Rev. Newman Hall, of England, said in his lecture at Music Hall on "Prayer as an Answer to Modern Scepticism," that "man prays because God hears prayer," and that "God both heard and answered prayers." We would like to see a single thing that man can lay his hand on and say: "This is in answer to prayer."

In China large quantities of oysters are dried, instead of being eaten in the fresh state. They are taken from the shell, plunged into boiling water, and then exposed to the rays of the sun until every particle of moisture has evaporated. In that state they will keep for any length of time, and are said to preserve all the delicacy of their flavor.

The Third Unitarian Church of New York City will be twenty years old next May. The pastor, the Rev. O. B. Frothingham, intends at that time to resign his charge and go on a year's tour in Europe. He is much exhausted by his long and arduous public labors. It is stated that on his return his society will be reorganized on a more liberal basis, so as not to be hampered by the Unitarian name or methods.

Senator Blaine, in his "Heathen Chinese" speech, said: "The Senate must choose whether it would insist upon the civilization of Christ or the civilization of Confucius." We do not want either; we want the civilization of the nineteenth century. The Declaration of Independence is not in the Old Testament, nor the Emancipation Proclamation in the New; nor have the Chinese classics furnished us with our statutes.

They had some queer titles for books in the time of Cromwell. Here are a few of them: A Most Delectable Sweet Perfumed Nose-Gay for God's Saints to Smell at; The Snuffers of Divine Love; Hooks and Eyes for Believers' Breeches; High-heeled Shoes for Dwarfs in Holiness; Crumbs of Comfort for the Chickens of the Covenant; A Sigh of Sorrow for the Sinners of Zion; The Spiritual Mustard Pot to make the Soul Sneezes with Devotion.

If the charming sketch of "Hawthorne" in the Literary World, by Thomas Wentworth Higginson, is a specimen of the "Short Studies of American Authors" which this clever writer is engaged to give the public, there is a rich treat in store for us. Among living writers no one can say things with more grace and literary nicety than Col. Higginson; nor, when necessary, have we an author who can charge language with nobler, stronger meaning than he.

Harvard Divinity School wants $135,000 to make unsectarian ministers,—that is, Unitarian ministers. Without this sum, two theological professors must leave their posts. The ministers this century needs cannot be made by theological schools. There are voices outside of the pulpit that are directing the people. Ordination is no guarantee of fitness. The truest speech is from man to man, not from priest to worshipper; the highest message comes from the soil, not from the altar. The oil that anoints comes from no visible horn. We want no more appliances to manufacture ministers, but ways to improve mankind. Men are wanted to-day, not priests.

A determined effort is making in New York to do away with the injustice of tax-exemption. Petitions are now circulated, assigning the following reasons why exemption should cease: "Because, by exempting church property and clergymen's effects from taxation, the State is assisting to support sectarian religion, which is unconstitutional; besides, it is extending charity to the clergy, a class better paid than the mechanics who are taxed, thus constituting them a privileged class." "By continued exemption from taxation, ecclesiastical corporations are enabled to amass immense wealth," etc. Liberals everywhere should take up this work, and carry it on until justice is done to all and injustice to none.

Mr. B. F. Underwood is the cause of an "Atheistical Earthquake" in the little town of Irwin Station, Pennsylvania, whither he went to lecture on the subject of "A Personal, Intelligent Deity," on the evening of Feb. 4. He was arrested for "forcibly entering" the hall, with two citizens of the place. They were held in $500 bail each. Mr. Underwood delivered his lecture, as advertised, to a large audience, notwithstanding the efforts of the Christian clergy of the town to prevent him. Such persecutions will lead to the organization of freethinkers, and the building of halls for the promulgation of their ideas and the teaching of the principles of liberalism. The persecution of the reformer is the seed of progress.

Thomas Scott, who died on Dec. 30, was in many respects a remarkable man. He had a varied and valuable experience. He had a clergyman for a father, but learned during the course of his eventful life that "superstition was the worst disease with which human nature is afflicted." He was a page at the court of Charles X. in France,—travelled in Europe with Louis Napoleon (with whom he was at one time intimate),—enjoyed the personal acquaintance of the great men in America at the time of Burr,—sported among the red Indians when Cincinnati was a village and Chicago a wigwam,—and for twenty years has been in England the centre of various circles of minds, receiving with equal hospitality Moslems, Brahmins, Buddhists, and Christians. He was the author of the English Life of Jesus, and published a large number of pamphlets by many different pens on the great questions of the age, such names as F. W. Newman, W. R. Greg, Dr. Hinds, Bishop of Norwich, Maitland, Voysey, Mrs. Besant, being among the authors. He met the world face to face, lived in it and with it, knew men for what they were worth, saw the evils in the world, and, after becoming acquainted with mankind, its sins and wants, returned home to devote his powers and his means to what he regarded as the emancipation of man from superstition. Whatever was said of his aim, nobody doubted the sincerity of his purpose or the sacrifices he made for it.

A volume of verses recently issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, is wonderful, considering its source. It is called Apple-Blossoms, and contains the poems of two children named Elaine Goodale and Dora Read Goodale. Elaine was born Oct. 9, 1863, and Dora Oct. 29, 1866. The former contributes sixty-two of the poems which the book contains, and the latter seventy-three. Portraits of both girls add to the attraction of the book. All the poems are on simple themes; they are Nature's inspirations. In reading the lines in this book, we can easily imagine the flowers, the birds, the trees, and the deep blue skies, singing through the heart of a child that loves them. Such poems are not of insight, but of sympathy. A sweet, natural poetry like that of the summer ground or the summer sky breathes through every verse. No more remarkable work is to be found in American literature. If the girl is mother of the woman, we may expect to see the names of Elaine and Dora Read Goodale written high and bright among the poets of their native land. Here is a dainty little verse on "Spring and Summer," which hints the beauty that these children have hidden in words:—

"In spring we note the breaking
Of every baby bud;
In spring we note the waking
Of wild flowers of the wood.
In summer's fuller power
In summer's deeper soul,
We watch no single flower,
We see, we breathe the whole."

The leading article in the March number of the North American Review is a symposium on negro suffrage, by Senators Blaine and Lamar, Gov. Hampton, Representatives Garfield and Stephens, Wendell Phillips, Montgomery Blair, and ex-Gov. Hendricks. Mr. Blaine opens and closes the discussion. He claims that the negro was wisely and justly enfranchised, and should not be deprived of his right to the ballot, but that he is practically disfranchised by intimidation; and he demands for him all of the privileges that have been granted him by constitutional amendments. Messrs. Lamar, Stephens, and Hampton insist that the political liberty of the negro is not seriously interfered with, and argue that if the South be let alone all of the difficulties growing out of emancipation will adjust themselves. Hampton says that a qualified suffrage would have been better for the negro, and Stephens declares that if an attempt should be made to deprive the Southern States of their present representation in Congress on the plea that the negro is not allowed to vote in accordance with his convictions, it would be the most wanton outrage that ever was undertaken in any country. Mr. Blair takes the ground that negro suffrage is and always must be a failure, and instances the trial made with the blacks in the West Indies by the English. Wendell Phillips asserts that the colored voters have exhibited as much wisdom in politics as have their white neighbors, and that the South was better governed under negro rule than it has since been under white legislation. Gen. Garfield thinks that colored suffrage has been more than fairly successful, and says that the era of peace and good feeling will come only when the negro shall be allowed to cast his ballot without interference of any kind. This discussion is followed by a paper on the Philosophy of Jonathan Edwards, by Prof. George P. Fisher, of Yale, giving a summary of the works of Edwards and an analysis of his peculiar line of thought. Gen. Nelson A. Miles treats the Indian problem at some length, stating many facts, and his reasons for believing that the Indians can be best managed under military supervision. J. R. G. Hassard, the translator of the famous cipher dispatches, presents a chapter on Cryptography, in which he explains fully the system by which secret characters are read. The closing pages of the number are devoted to a review of recent Russian novels, by S. E. Shevitch.

Communications.

COLONEL INGERSOLL ON MOSES.

BOSTON, Jan. 5, 1879.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In reading a sermon delivered by Rev. M. J. Savage, at the Church of the Unity, Dec. 29th last, entitled, "Looking Back: the Bad of It, and the Good of It," we find he is reported to have said:—

"Colonel Robert Ingersoll has made a great deal of noise through the country by talking about some mistakes of Moses. Let me say frankly and simply that, so far as the general purposes and efforts of Mr. Ingersoll are concerned, I most heartily sympathize with him; but I do not sympathize with him in the way he treats the mistakes of Moses. If he would only give his subject a new title the objection would be removed. It is not the mistakes of Moses that need to trouble us; it is the mistakes, the blunders, the puerilities, the lack of intelligence, on the part of modern men that ought to know better as to what Moses really said and did. There is where the mistake lies; it is not with Moses, it is with men who live right around us here in Boston, in Chicago and New York and London; these are the men who are making the mistakes. The work of Moses was as grand as that ever wrought by any man in all the world, and it tells on our lives and civilization to-day. Moses was not to blame because he did not know modern geology; Moses was not to blame because he did not know the constitution of the stars; Moses was not to blame because he did not know the order of the heavens; Moses was not to blame because modern tradition has assigned to him a thousand things that he never thought of, and has said that he did a thousand things that no one ever wrought. The mistakes are ours in treating the problem of creation, which naturally grows out of life-long looking, from their stand-point. And when we have blame for men, let us blame modern men for their folly, for their superstition, for their ignorance, for their lack of thought and care; not blame the past, which was noble and grand in its day."

A criticism of this kind coming from any other pulpit in the city of Boston would not be surprising; but coming from the gentleman who stands on the platform of the Church of the Unity, it is surprising.

The words of Mr. Savage are such as to imply, if nothing more, that he believed Colonel Ingersoll imagined he was really criticising the writings of Moses; yet we cannot believe that Mr. Savage actually thought the Colonel imagined anything of the kind.

The Colonel, undoubtedly, is as well aware of the fact as is Mr. Savage, that Moses did not write the Pentateuch, and therefore knew he was not criticising him, but the writings of persons who lived long after his time.

As we cannot answer for Colonel Ingersoll, we can imagine that, in answer to the Orthodox theory of the inspiration of the Scriptures, and to the claim of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, he would simply say:—

"I do not believe that Moses wrote the Pentateuch; but as you claim that he is the author of it, I will, for the sake of an argument, admit it. But if, as you say, he was an inspired penman, and everything is recorded therein 'just as though God himself had held the pen,' and if, as you say, 'Every scientific statement is infallibly correct, and all its history and narrations of every kind are without any inaccuracy' (Baylies' Verbal Inspiration, p. 62), then it should be able to stand the most searching criticism. I propose, therefore, to search these 'inspired words,' and to criticise them, and to show you, in spite of what you claim, that there are 'some mistakes made by Moses.'"

He then shows some of the mistakes in geology, astronomy, etc., which are to be found in the books attributed to Moses.

If we are not very much mistaken, it is not long since Mr. Savage himself did the very same thing. We think that he too delivered a lecture on "some mistakes of Moses," the only difference being that he entitled his "Moses and Evolution." We believe also that he has done the same thing many times before his own people.

Having heard both lectures, and not drawing our conclusions from "titles," we venture to say that, if Colonel Ingersoll deserves to be criticised for delivering his lecture on "Some Mistakes of Moses," Mr. Savage also deserves to be criticised for delivering his lecture on "Moses and Evolution," and that in criticising Colonel Ingersoll he is criticising himself at the same time.

Perhaps Mr. Savage thought of this when he said: "If he would only give his subject a new title, the objection would be removed." If such is the case, we would advise Colonel Ingersoll to do so at once, and call his lecture, "Some Mistakes of the Elohistic and Jehovistic Writers."

If the Colonel should object to this, and say that the mass of the people are better acquainted with Moses than they are with these other two gentlemen, then he would continue to be open to criticism; but before we criticise him again, let us criticise, as Mr. Savage has said, "carefully and with thought."

CHARLES M. BARSTOW.

THE CHELSEA LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

At the annual meeting of the Chelsea Liberal League, held February 9, the following resolutions, introduced by J. A. J. Wilcox, were, after some discussion, unanimously adopted:—

"Whereas, At the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, held at Syracuse last October, a faction organized for that purpose, representing but an insignificant minority of the full membership of the League, succeeded in committing the League to an attitude inconsistent with its declared principles and purposes, thereby compelling the minority of the members of the Congress, in fealty to the animating spirit which brought the League into existence, and confident of the sympathy and approval of a greater part of its membership, to make emphatic protest against this practical subversion of a noble enterprise; and

"Whereas, This protest took the form of a new organization upon the original basis of the National Liberal League, called the National Liberal League of America; it is therefore

"Resolved, That the Chelsea Liberal League hereby severs its connection with the National Liberal League, and declares itself in affiliation with the National Liberal League of America."

Also, by a unanimous vote, the Chelsea Liberal League amended its constitution by inserting the words "of America" after the words "National Liberal League," wherever they occur in that document.

It is a significant fact, Mr. Editor, that of our total membership (about forty) but three are known to dissent from the above action.

The President, D. G. Crandon, introduced the following resolution, which was heartily seconded by Mr. Hamlen, and unanimously adopted by the League:—

"Resolved, That the action of the Chelsea Liberal League, in withdrawing from the National Liberal League, shall not be construed as any disrespect to the Hon. Elizur Wright, its President, for whom personally we have the most unqualified respect and regard, and we so declare."

D. G. Crandon, having served the League two years as its presiding officer, declined a reelection. The Committee on Nominations reported the following list of officers for the ensuing year:—

President.—J. A. J. WILCOX.

Vice President.—D. G. CRANDON.

Secretary and Treasurer.—B. H. CRANDON.

Counselors.—HOWARD MARSTON, E. B. MOORE,

BEN TURK, A. V. LINCOLN.

These officers were elected.

After passing a vote of thanks to the retiring officers, and instructing the President and Secretary to apply for a charter to the National Liberal League of America, the meeting adjourned.

BENJ. H. CRANDON, Sec'y.

A CASE OF "LIBERTINISM."

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Your recent editorial on true and false liberalism, and also Mrs. Spencer's admirable lecture treating the same subject, have fitting illustration and enforcement in an article published in the Truth Seeker of Feb. 15, with this title:—

"(From the Sunday-school Register.)

"Young Ladies' Bible Class."

Whether there is any such paper as the Sunday-school Register, I do not know; but it is given to understand that the article is copied from a Sunday-school paper of that name. But that pretence is given up at the close, for it purports to be written by "The Ungodly Woman of the Nineteenth Century." That it was written by a woman I very much doubt; but of the ungodliness there is no question. Between the falsehood in the caption and the self-accusing truth of the signature, the intervening space of nearly two columns is continuous and unmitigated filthiness. I suppose the attempt is to show that consistency requires the abandonment of all claims of infallibility and sacredness for the Bible, or that such passages as are considered indecent should have equal prominence in public and private teaching with others.

The right to hold and express such an opinion is not denied; but to express, enforce, and illustrate it in the manner of the "ungodly woman" could be done only by one whose habits and associations had killed out every native instinct of modesty, and no person or paper of high moral tone would consent to its publication.

A Sunday-school superintendent selects one of those passages which are usually skipped, amplifies it, enlarges and comments upon it to a class of young ladies, with all the disgusting suggestions and applications which a foul imagination can supply. And this is printed in large type, in a paper which claims to be devoted to "science" and "morals." It is not to be wondered at that liberalism languishes while made to carry the burden of such exponents.

This same number contains two other articles of a similar character, one of them by the same "ungodly woman"; and among its faceties are jokes which one would expect to hear only among those who delight in lewdness of thought and speech.

Multitudes of people of progressive inclinations, still nominally classed among the Orthodox, honestly entertain the opinion that liberalism goes hand in hand with "vile affections" and practical immorality, and that the freedom which it demands is freedom from these restraining influences and laws which make society possible. This opinion is not without justification in the character of men and publications which take the liberal name, and it is not surprising that many shrink from sharing the odium which the cause suffers through such uncleanly advocacy.

But such things must needs be, as a glance at the history of reforms will show, and we need not falter in our courage; for the true reform, though it may be retarded, will still go on, against the attacks of declared enemies or pretended friends.

J. A. J. WILCOX.

COOKIANA.

TIPPECANOE CITY, O., January, 1879.

MR. ABBOT:—

I am pleased that you gave us Mr. Cook's defence for calling the majority of the Liberal League assembled at Syracuse the Free Religious Association, and for no better reason than that some who belong to the Liberal League do also belong to the Free Religious Association! Such reasoning will prove the Church to be Freemasonry. And since sometimes Freemasons belong to a thief gang, therefore the Church is a gang of thieves! I will let Mr. Cook stand alone in such reasoning. Mr. Cook has a great facility in calling "infidel" everything that does not square with his belief. He has "infidel editors," "editors of infidel papers," "infidel majorities," and "infidel minorities."

It appears to me that if he was called upon for a definition of infidel it would be, "An infidel is any one who disputes as truth anything I affirm." I am acquainted with many Free Religionists and Liberal Leaguers, and I don't know of one who does not believe in a Supreme Power which governs this world in all of its ramifications, and does it with all the wisdom and design they (each for himself) can see manifested in the way it is governed. Is this infidelity? That this Power so governs that every word, thought, and action of each individual will receive a just recompense of reward, and by a mind that could grasp the whole would so be seen,—is this infidelity? They don't believe that there is any interference with general laws, so as to make a railroad bridge either stronger or weaker than established laws have made it, in order to hold up a train or plunge it to destruction. Is this infidelity? They don't believe faith in a single proposition, however truthful or absurd the proposition may be, will save a man from the evils of a long life of iniquity. Is this infidelity? Freethinkers, so far as I know them, believe all things are divine, having but one origin; i.e., there is but One Power from which all things, all changes spring, the Power and matter having an eternal existence. Thus it is seen (if I am correct as to what freethinkers believe) that liberals believe, not only in the divinity of the Bible, Hebrew Scriptures, and Christian religion, but also in the divinity of all other bibles, scriptures, and religions.

Once admitted the existence of an Infinite Power, all of the above conclusions necessarily follow. Is there only One Supreme Infinite Power governing all things? or are there two such powers? or are there two or more such powers, equally potent but neither supreme? I shall be much obliged to Mr. Cook or any one else who will state some one or more propositions, a disbelief in which is infidelity. I don't believe that the way in which Mr. Cook proves the Liberal League and the Free Religious Association are one and the same thing is sound logic. Is this infidelity? If to believe that Mr. Cook, by slang insinuation and perversion, is endeavoring to misrepresent and injure Liberal Leagues and the Free Religious Association and the ideas they teach, is infidelity, we will all plead guilty, or at least I will.

E. L. CRANE.

"THE DOUBLE OR THE SINGLE STANDARD."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—In your last number I notice some remarks, under the above heading, by Mr. E. D. Stark, of Cleveland, Ohio. While Mr. Stark clearly proves (what is but a truism to all who know anything about monetary science) that the extremes of fluctuation would be less under a double standard than under a single one, yet he seems entirely to have overlooked the very important question, whether such a thing as a double standard is possible. His statement to the contrary notwithstanding, I think it can be shown that such a thing as a double standard never has been in practical operation in any country for any considerable length of time, and in the very nature of things never can be. For a very complete discussion of the subject, see Money and the Mechanism of Exchange, by Professor W. Stanley Jevons, of the University College of London, Eng.

Suppose that to-day there were established in the United States what is called a double standard,—that is, that the relative value of gold and silver were fixed as nearly as possible, and then their coinage left free, so that any one might take either gold or silver bullion to the mint and receive in exchange an equal weight of coined gold or silver, as the case might be; what would be the result? If from any cause it should happen that silver could be produced at a less cost than formerly, then, of course, unless the demand for silver should be increased, the price of this bullion must become less. But it will pay a debt just as well now as before. The tendency will be, then, to take silver bullion to the mint instead of gold; and, in time, the channel of circulation will be completely filled with silver coin, to the exclusion of the gold coin, which will then be more valuable as bullion than as coined money. The gold will be exported; the silver will be left. On the other hand, if gold becomes cheaper, relatively, than silver, it will become the sole coin. The silver will be exported. This country has had experiences of this kind. After the discovery of gold in California, gold became cheaper, relatively, than silver, and tended to drive that metal out of the circulation. If our present law is kept in force, our cheap silver dollar will, some day, drive our gold coin out of the circulation.

Sir Thomas Gresham clearly comprehended this truth three centuries ago, and embodied it in that well-known law which has since come to be known by his name. The substance of the law is this: That cheap money will always drive out good money, but that good money can never drive out cheap money.

What is called a double standard is, therefore, seen to be utterly impossible in practice. A "double standard" means a single standard, constantly shifting from one metal to the other, and subjecting the people to all the inconveniences attending such frequent changes.

Most respectfully,

CHARLES J. BUELL.

ROSENDALE, N. Y., Feb. 17, 1879.

"LIBERALISM AND LIBERTINISM."

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

The spirit moveth me to say that your unswerving devotion to the cause of moral purity is above and beyond all praise. I have just finished reading your editorial article entitled "Liberalism and Libertinism," and, with heart all aglow with appreciation of its merit, I am irresistibly impelled to offer you the congratulation born of intense sympathy. If the avowed expounders of Liberalism all stood upon the same exalted plane as yourself, how powerless would be the Orthodox attacks upon it! What other reply would be needed to their aspersions than the silent but eloquent act of pointing to the lives and teachings of those expounders? Alas, that many of those lives will not bear inspection, and that much of their teaching is fit subject for criticism! Alas, too, that it should be found necessary to again and again disclaim for liberalism fellowship with libertinism! But while confessing with shame that such disclaimer is vitally necessary, it is matter for rejoicing that so earnest, so able, and so fearless a spokesman as the editor of THE INDEX has thrown down the gage, and stands armed and ready for aggressive combat with the foes of human liberty and purity, wherever harbored. If any man thinks the attitude uncalled for, or the mission Quixotic, let him but consider, no matter how briefly, the moral status of the civilized world to-day, and I think he will admit that for the gospel of honor and purity there is a crying need. If the boasted liberty of this age is not to be sunken in beastial license, then it behooves all lovers of the good and true to work for the cause they love; and because the cause is dear to me I cannot refrain from extending to you in spirit the right hand of fellowship.

Yours most truly,

CHARLES E. PERKINS.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Feb. 14, 1879.

NOT NOTICING some travellers, a Colorado farmer went on loading and discharging a double-barrelled gun, always aiming at some crevice or opening in the rocks, which lay in great profusion around. Firmly convinced that he was a lunatic, the travellers determined to treat him as such, and that was, as is carefully explained, "mighty darned civil." "Good-day, stranger," they said. The man looked up, but said nothing. "Plenty o' shooting around here, I s'pose?" Still no answer. "Why, what d'ye find to kill there?" was asked, as the man let off another shot. "Kill be darned!" said the man. "I'm plantin' wheat. Don't you see that all the sile in this darned section is between the cracks o' the rocks, and I have to shoot in the seeds!"

MAMMA: "Papa dear, the children have been asked to the Willoughby Robinsons on the 11th, the Howard Jones's on the 15th, and the Talbot Brownes on the 21st. They'll be dreadfully disappointed if you don't let them go! May I write and accept, dear papa?" Dear Papa (savagely): "Oh, just as you please! But, as juvenile parties should always be taken in time, you had better write to Dr. Squills too, and tell him to call on the 12th, 16th, and 22d."—Punch.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 20 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STUBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Chetrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keechib Oundar Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laeker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Oscar Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.50
New Poems.....	2.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBAUGH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Preier.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 16 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 2 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Bobby Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESHAIRIES (HANK). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 8 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Novels, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Miss Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Name. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	8.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Maynard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Kleist's Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 1 vol.....	2.50
Hermann and Dorothea. Translated by Helen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREEN'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. in England. Book II. in Scotland. Book III. in France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown Rival.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.50
Suburban Sketches.....	2.50
Venetian Life.....	2.50
Italian Journeys.....	2.50
A Chance Acquaintance.....	2.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.50
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.50
On the Origin of Species.....	1.50
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke.....	1.00
VII. The Consciousness. By Samuel four Stewart, with an Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Satires, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (DORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origins in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HUBAUE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Collected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.25
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILKE (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	2.00
Bouscass, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Hickies from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	1.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PEEL'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Redged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 34 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnet, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	6.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SOLIMON PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Moscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SOOTH'S Waverley Novels. 26 vols.....	11.25
SOOTH'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 3 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Bloom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Roggerly Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Drival, &c.....	1.25
4. Poor Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.00
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	6.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.00
Lectures on a Mode of Motion.....	1.00
On Sound.....	1.00
Radiant Heat.....	1.00
Forms of Water.....	1.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITLEY (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	5.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Series and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Lochie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FOR TEN DOLLARS CASH

we will insert a seven-line advertisement one week in a list of 289 weekly newspapers, or four lines in a different list of 337 papers, or ten lines in a choice of either of four separate and distinct lists containing from 70 to 100 papers each, or four lines one week in all four of the small lists, or one line one week in all six lists combined, being more than 1,000 papers. We also have lists of papers by States throughout the United States and Canada. Send 10 cents for our 100-page pamphlet. Address

G. P. ROWELL & CO.,

Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce Street, New York.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marples. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Secularism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 60 cents.

II. Burgess-Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 60 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by savants of the highest authority.

Prominent attention will also be given to those various sciences which help to a better understanding of the nature of man, to the bearings of science upon the questions of society and government, to scientific education, and to the conflicts which spring from the progressive nature of scientific knowledge.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.

A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 90 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on live issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tollenache, ural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 80 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-Existing Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
...THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. R. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
JHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Koenig. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 285 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION; with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 364 pages. Price $1.50.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingewell (the latest lectures). 232 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 263 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1879.

WHOLE No. 480.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SMOULDER REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized, public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

IN THE STATE of Maryland, witnesses are still held incompetent to give testimony in court, if they do not believe in the existence of God and a future state of rewards and punishments. This was decided in the Baltimore Court of Common Pleas, February 13, as reported in the Baltimore Sun of next day.

PROFESSOR JEVONS points out in Nature that "commercial crises fall into a series having an average period of about 10.446 years"; that this period coincides almost perfectly with Mr. J. A. Brown's estimate of the sun-spot period, 10.45 years; and that this coincidence "is by itself strong evidence that the phenomena are causally connected."

RELIGIOUS IMPERTINENCE meets a deserved rebuke in the Literary World's notice of a misnamed book by James Simson. Mr. Simson sneers at James Mill, for "giving vent to all his spitefulness against religion of every kind"; and he says of Franklin (whom he vulgarly calls "Ben"): "There is a good deal of the 'Red Indian' in Franklin's ideas about religion." The editor justly remarks that "the author is very intolerant and even impudent in his allusions to others."

PROTESTANTISM, which never abandons the hopeless attempt to reconcile dogma with mental freedom, may point the moral of this affecting tale: "Old R—, who died not long since, was a famous member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Corps. One day, when marching through Beacon Street in column of review before the Governor, his steps were very irregular. 'Uncle R—,' said a friend, 'you must have been taking too much "tangle foot." ' 'Not a bit of it,' said R—. 'There was a band both before and behind our company, and I was trying to march to two tunes! ' "

THE FRANKLIN, Pa. Press gives the following ironical advice in answer to the question, "How to make times good: " "Curse the capitalists; frighten them all you can. Do not let them go into business. If they show any disposition to do so, call a meeting; get up a set of rules and regulations for managing the business so to break them up as soon as possible, and threaten those who will not go in under the rules until they gather up their money and leave the country, as they have already begun to do. Nothing helps times so much as to let men know that, if they get more by working hard than you do by idleness, you will compel them to divide. They will work all the harder for such encouragement. Go right ahead with your communistic speeches; they are doing a great deal of good. All that is necessary is to follow it up, and we will all soon be on the ground floor, all equal,—all poor, all idle, all worthless."

PRINCE BISMARCK is credited with telling this curious story, illustrating the beauties of red-tape: "One day I was walking with the Emperor of Russia in the summer garden of St. Petersburg, when, coming upon a sentinel in the centre of a lawn, I took the liberty of inquiring why the man was placed there. The Emperor did not know. The adjutant did not know. The sentinel did not know, except that he had been ordered there. The adjutant was then dispatched to ask the officer of the watch, whose reply tallied with the sentinel's—'Ordered.' Curiosity awakened, military records were searched without yielding any satisfactory solution. At last an old serving-man was rooted out who remembered hearing his father relate that the Empress Catherine II., one hundred years ago, had found a snowdrop on that particular spot, and given orders to protect it from being plucked. No other device could be thought of than guarding it by a sentinel. The order once issued was left in force for a century."

THE Christian Register, which ought to be ashamed of making fun of religion in this reprehensible way, relates that in one of the churches of Essex County the people recently grew tired of their own religious talky-talk in the Friday evening prayer-meeting, and the pastor urged them to attempt some work for the Lord during the week, and make it the subject of a report at the next meeting. The seed fell into good ground. On the next Friday evening, the first brother called upon was ready with his report, which ran on this wise: "Brethren, when our pastor exhorted us to do something, I resolved that I would talk with some unconverted person about religion. I began by inviting a man to come to meeting. 'Why should I go to meeting?' said he; and I told him he might learn something worth knowing. 'What should I learn?' he asked; and I told him he would learn that he was a sinner. 'But how do you know that I am a sinner?' said he, and I told him that the Bible said so. 'But I don't believe the Bible!' was his answer. Then we disputed about it; and, brethren, I got so mad that I could have kicked him! "

LAND in the United Kingdom is very unequally distributed, according to a recent statement: "England and Wales (leaving out the metropolis) have an area of 37,243,857 acres. Of this amount, 66 persons own 1,917,076 acres; 100 persons own 3,917,641 acres; less than 280 persons own 5,425,784 acres; and 874 persons own 9,267,031 acres. Ireland has 20,159,878 acres in all. One person here owns 170,119 acres, and 744 persons own an aggregate of 9,612,728 acres, or nearly one-half of the island. In Scotland the case is still worse. One man has 1,326,000 acres, besides 82,096 acres more in England, or a total of 1,358,548 acres. A second owner has 431,000 acres in Scotland; a third, 424,000 acres; a fourth, 373,000; and a fifth, 306,000 acres. Scotland has 18,946,894 acres in all. Twenty-four owners have more than one-fourth of the whole area; and seventy owners have 9,400,000 acres, or about one-half of Scotland. Considering the land of the whole kingdom, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland together own 1,358,548 acres; the Duke of Buccleugh and Queensbury, 469,280; Sir James Matheson, 424,580; Earl of Breadalbane, 372,728; Earl of Seaford, 306,891; Duke of Richmond, 286,407; Earl of Fife, 257,652; Alexander Matheson, 220,438; Duke of Athol, 194,640; Duke of Devonshire, 183,321; Duke of Northumberland, 185,515; and the Duke of Argyll, 175,114 acres."

LAST SUNDAY forenoon, Mr. B. F. Underwood made a brave and much-needed address at Paine Hall on "Liberalism—the Genuine and the Spurious." He insisted on the necessity of making a broad distinction between liberalism and the various crude, loose, and licentious theories which shelter themselves behind its name. He was especially plain-spoken with regard to "free love," and the attempts of its advocates to force it under false pretences upon the liberals as a body, and to make them responsible for their own demoralizing utterances. While very carefully abstaining from all reflections upon individuals, he read extracts from two prominent exponents of "free love" which exposed the sickening and abominable character of their teachings. This courageous protest against vile tendencies which must soon make the very name of liberalism a stench in the land, unless these tendencies are stoutly and openly repudiated by all those to whom that name stands for a higher individual and social morality, entitles Mr. Underwood to the profound gratitude of every decent liberal throughout the country. The struggle is only begun; it must go on. The result will be either indignant repudiation of this "free love" iniquity by the liberals as a whole, or else their meek submission to it and their unprotesting endurance of public representatives whose lives are too often as infamous as their principles. The battle thickens, and THE INDEX calls upon all who love the liberal cause to speak and act undauntedly in its defence against treason that would betray it with a kiss.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NA THANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irelington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PASTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUBENMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PATTEN.....Providence, R. I.
 HON. M. J. SAVAGE.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BEOTH.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....Tenny, N. Y.
 MRS. CALLIE HOLLY.....Lottsburg, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....121 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BAILE, Grand.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Milledgeville.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galveston.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHELS, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARRIS, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Hillsboro.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. E. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTTELL, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. GIFFORD, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNTON, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL OOLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. BUNNELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....J. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. FORTNE.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....117 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Gale.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Lucifer's Lawsuit against Jesus.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH OF ALBERT REVILLE, "REVUE MODERNE," VOL. XXXIX. PARIS, 1868.

BY MISS ARETHUSA HALL.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

PART III.

Not to put the patience of our readers to too severe a test, we shall pass over a lot of formalities, the object of whose minute exposition is, in the mind of the author, to show how it is necessary to proceed, regularly, from a first to a second trial.

We pass abruptly to the 4th of November, 33, and here we find Moses and Belial appearing before Joseph at On, his residence. It appears that the second trial was not conducted as the first. The attorneys of the two parties present by turns the recs, in which the one attacks, and the other defends, the judgment of Solomon. It is a contest of grand judicial fencing. Belial makes large use of the subtleties of his art, but they are each time exposed by Moses, who laughs till he gets hoarse and coughs convulsively.

During these debates, Lucifer summoned an old devil whom he reproached himself for not having consulted sooner. This was Hébel-furck, the special tempter of the Jewish people. This old devil gave him circumstantial information concerning Jesus, the Jews, the Christians, the legal condition of the Israelites under the Roman Empire, etc. His whole recital manifests a passionate animosity against the Jews. Hébel-furck relates to Lucifer all the fables concerning Jesus which, in the course of events, the rabbis had invented as to his origin and his character. Among others, he assured him that Jesus had been able to work miracles only because in his childhood he had discovered the secret of Schemamphorasch, a magic name of God, which gave to him who possessed it all kinds of supernatural power. This furnished Lucifer with an unhoped-for light. He flattered himself that he should be able to destroy entirely the ground on which the first judge had founded the divinity of Jesus; and prepared, in concert with his new counsellor, a list of witnesses who could certify to the accusations formulated by Hébel-furck. These witnesses were: Annas, the high-priest; Calaphas, his son-in-law; Rabam, Rosnuphin, Pudipharas, and Diarabaa, all four members of the Sanhedrim; Dismas, the impenitent thief; Barabbas, King Saul, and Judas Iscariot. Hébel-furck added to these Longinus, who with his spear pierced Jesus as he hung upon the cross, Lucius and Emor, two of the soldiers who scourged him by order of Pilate.

Moses exclaimed loudly against such witnesses. He had against each of them legitimate objections which ought to debar them from testifying. He accused Longinus, who pierced Jesus with his spear, of having committed a battery upon him. But it was especially against Judas that he objected, in virtue of a principle admitted by all good authors, according to which: Proditor non potest esse testis.

However, the court of appeal did not find these exceptions sufficient. It must be acknowledged that they did the wrong of assuming as a fact that which was in question; the objections of Moses against these witnesses falling of themselves, if the course of debate should prove that Jesus wrongfully pretended to the title of Son of God. This obliged Moses to draw up on his side a list of witnesses more numerous and more imposing still. It was composed of the following names: The prophet Isaiah; the archangels, Gabriel and Michael; the three kings, Jaspas, Melchior, and Balthazar; the two shepherds of Bethlehem, Jeron and Phillon; Ananias, an officer at Jerusalem; the Apostle Paul; Nicodemus; Joseph of Arimathea; Gamaliel; the four evangelists; Jemas, the penitent thief; Lazarus of Bethany; Mary Magdalen and Martha, his sisters; the deacon, Stephen; the young man of Nain and his mother; Jairus, the superior of the schools; the Legion of Gadara; Dionysius, the Areopagite; old Simeon; and Anna, the prophetess.

Belial had returned to hell, delighted to announce that all his witnesses had been accepted by the court. "He licked his chops," observes Mrs. Ayer, "like a bear who has found honey." The joy was great, when the news was heard. Satan alone shook his head. Though little expert in law, with his usual cunning he smelt out the weak point of the system of attack adopted by Lucifer and his attorney. "All comes to this," said he; "to determine whether Jesus is, or is not, the Son of God. But how? You have begun by challenging his father as judge; have you not, by this step, yourselves recognized his divinity?" However, they had gone too far to retract, and they thought that Satan did not understand anything about it.

Yet his distrust was but too well founded. The depositions of the witnesses cited by Moses were overwhelming; on the contrary, those of the witnesses of Lucifer were either insignificant, ambiguous, or even diametrically opposed to what the infernal party expected. But, as in the first instance, we will confine ourselves to two or three samples of the testimony, reproduced in extenso, and with all the repetitions imaginable, of the original.

Here, for instance, is the deposition of Dismas, the impenitent thief on Calvary: the witness declared that he was about thirty-two years old, that he had no education, that he was a Pagan in religion, that he was neither a friend nor an enemy of Jesus, never having seen him before the 25th of last March, when he was crucified with him. It is true that he was a murderer, that he was imprisoned for this, then condemned to death and crucified; but he did not understand wherein this could interest Belial, who knew it all well. As to his opinion of Jesus, it was neither good nor bad, except that he was crucified with him. He never received either good or evil from him. If the miracles which took place at the moment of his death occurred on account of it, he was certainly more than an ordinary man. As to the rest, he did not know either whence he came or what God was. Q.—Is Jesus the Messiah and Savior of the human race?

A.—The witness is not a clergyman, and does not know anything about it. He has heard that Jesus was raised from the dead; as to his ascension, he does not believe it, having never seen a man fly away; and as to his ministry as a Messiah, again he says it is a subject he knows nothing about.

Q.—Was the mother of Jesus a virgin?

A.—He cannot say anything about it, not knowing her nor her family. It is very true that this Jesus descended into hell, broke open its gates, put the devils in chains, and took away with him the most of the devil's captives, and everything he pleased.

Q.—For what end, and by what means?

A.—The witness did not know. The devils were greatly frightened at the sight of Jesus, and no one dared to make any resistance. As to the rest, the witness has been asked many questions that surpass his understanding, inasmuch as he has never had much time nor taste for the study of the Holy Scriptures. Silencium impositum.

Deposition of Balthazar, one of the three kings:—

The witness declared his name was Balthazar, that he was an astronomer by profession, and the governor of his country. He was a native of the East, and was seventy years old at that time. In religion, he was a neophyte Christian; formerly he was a Pagan. He did not know exactly how long he had known Jesus; it might have been thirty-two or thirty-three years. He believed, truly, that Jesus was the Son of God. This was because he had called him and his neighbors, in a miraculous manner, from heathen darkness to his eternal light. Formerly, a Pagan as he was, he did not believe in God; but about the time aforesaid, he and his two neighbors discovered in the East, by virtue of their art, a supernatural star which showed them that the King of the Jews, the true Messiah and Son of God, had really come into the world, born of a virgin. They, therefore, immediately packed up their things and set out, guided by the star, which showed them the way to Bethlehem, where it stopped over the house where the little child was. They then entered and prostrated themselves before him; but, knowing that he was God, King of Kings, and, besides, a priest according to the order of Melchizedek, and that by his suffering and death he would deliver the world from sin, they offered him gold, incense, and myrrh, which his virgin mother accepted with much modesty and respect, carefully shutting up in her heart all which she heard said of her little child. Afterward God, who directs all things, made them to return by another way, and guarded them graciously from the cunning fox, Herod, who wished to destroy them. It was thus that he and his two companions became Christians.

His two companions, Jaspas and Melchior, made similar depositions. After which, silencium impositum.

Deposition of the Legion of Gadara:—

The witness declared that his name was Legion, that he was a poor man, about sixty years old, a native of Gadara beyond the sea; in religion, a Christian. He knew little of the affair pending. All that he could say was, that for a long time he had been possessed by an evil spirit. He did not remember at all what he had done during that time; for the said evil spirit tormented him everywhere to such a degree that no bands, no chains, nor any man could subdue him. Beating and rending himself, he led a miserable life, in deserts, in mountains, and in sepulchres. He had never seen Jesus when he landed upon the coast of Gadara, "but the evil spirit which was in me," continued the witness, "made me fall at his feet, crying with a loud voice in my own tongue, 'Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God, what have I to do with thee? I conjure thee, in the name of God, not to torment me.'" Then Jesus asked him what was his name. He answered that his name was Legion, since he had with him many companions. Jesus then ordered him to come out; but he besought him not to drive him away from those parts (for he had opportunity for a good business there), and, as there were in that quarter many swine feeding, Jesus permitted them to enter into these animals. The result was that two thousand swine were drowned at once in the midst of the sea.

"It was then that I learned to know Jesus. I never saw him afterwards, though I would gladly have followed him, and have been his servant. But Jesus did not wish it, and sent me away among my friends to relate the blessing of God towards me." Being interrogated as to the doctrine of the justification of man by the death of Jesus, the witness answered that he must think about it,—that he did not know very well what it meant. The great gratitude that he felt towards Jesus would not prevent his speaking the truth. He could affirm, upon the testimony of his eyes, that Jesus was a real man, and, by the involuntary testimony of the devil that was in him, that he is truly the Son of God. Silencium impositum.

It is seen how all the witnesses called by Moses came, one after the other, to confirm again all the pretensions of orthodox theology. In hell, when they read the depositions, of which Belial brought a copy, they were greatly cast down. That of Judas, especially, on which the most sanguine hopes had been placed, confounded the devils. Wretched man, had he not expressed his repentance and his grief! Also, nothing important had been alleged in support of the supposition that Jesus had worked all his miracles by the magic virtue of the Schemamphorach. There was, therefore, a scene of desolation in the infernal regions. The devils began to howl so loud that Belial was afraid Jesus would hear them in paradise. At length calmness was restored, and Belial, making use of all the resources of chicanery, drew up a "memorial of exceptions, probations, and uncertain conclusions," destined to invalidate the depositions hostile to his cause. Moses, on his part, drew up his memorial for contrary ends, and the 14th of March was fixed for pronouncing judgment.

Joseph and his associates devoted the interval to preparing this with all possible care. The opinion of all of them was that the former judgment ought to be confirmed. Yet, and as it were to cheer the unfortunate litigants for suing for an appeal after a previous defeat, the court presided over by Joseph added a clause founded upon the fact, attested by the debates, that Jesus had left in hell some men; namely, Cain, Judas, and the impenitent thief. It was decided that they should remain in hell, and that they should be joined by those who would not believe in Jesus, and who hardened themselves in their sins.

Now Belial was very anxious to know what the court thought. Joseph had bound his associates to the strictest secrecy. Belial made them visits, sent them presents, invited them to dinner, and succeeded so well that one of them, having done too much honor to the capital wines which were served to him, divulged, at the dessert, what he ought to have said nothing about. Belial left immediately to go back to hell. But how abashed and humbled he returned! He looked like a great scapegrace who had come home after having been long away.

PART IV.

How can be described the tumult and the horrible cries of the diabolical crowd, when, gathered around Lucifer, they learned what the judgment was that was about to be pronounced! It was such a noise that Proserpine, the wife of the Devil Pluto, rushed out with dishevelled hair, crying, without knowing why, only through sympathy for her Schatz und Liebling, her treasure and her beloved, Pluto, whom she saw howling with the rest. This brought upon her a rebuff from Lucifer, who sent her away, saying that women didn't understand anything about business, and they ought not to meddle with it. But a ray of hope still sustained the unhappy devils. As they knew in advance that they were condemned, it seemed to them it would be wise to ask the adverse party, before judgment was given, to enter into a compromise. They sought for a jurisconsult of acknowledged ability, to conduct this new project. By the advice of Pluto and Dagon, it was decided that Cicero, the Roman, should be charged with this delicate function. Lucifer explained the matter to his subordinates, in a discourse that ended with prayer for the prosperity of the infernal republic; and all the assembly of demons separated, shouting Amen! Amen!

Cicero did not know the way to paradise, and Belial conducted him thither; but he preferred to leave him alone as soon as they arrived. Cicero made a humble obeisance to Moses, and spoke to him in his most graceful manner, giving him all his titles. He told him that he did not yet know what the judgment of the court would be; that an appeal to the supreme court might yet be lodged; that this would not end it, and it would cost a great deal. He therefore proposed to him to enter into an arrangement. Each of the two parties should choose two arbitrators, and should engage to abide by their decision.

"Hochgelehrter gütiger Herr Cicero," answered Moses, "I strongly suspect Belial of having scented out the bad turn which the suit has taken for him. Since my Master Jesus is eternal, and a thousand years are in his eyes as one day, and, besides, as he is in possession, Belial can lengthen out the thing as long as he has a mind to, it is all the same to us. However, I will submit your demand to my Lord Jesus."

Cicero would have been glad to penetrate farther into paradise, and especially to see this Lord Jesus, of whom he had heard so much for a year past. But Moses was very rigid upon the letter of the law, and would not allow that a stranger to the law should enter the celestial abode. He, therefore, went alone to find Jesus, who answered Moses that he told him nothing new; that he knew in advance, as did God his father, all the practices of Belial and his companions; that, certain no decision contrary to his cause would ever be made, he consented to enter into an arrangement, and that he chose for his arbitrators the Emperor Augustus and the Evangelist John, counselling Belial to choose on his side a layman and a clergyman. The presidency of the board of arbitrators should be given to Joseph, who should have a casting vote.

Moses related these words to Cicero, who reported them in hell, where he was received by the devils with marks of the highest distinction, "to which he was not insensible." The choice of Lucifer fell upon the high-priest Caiaphas and the philosopher Aristotle.

The arbitrators met in the palace of Jerusalem, where Jesus ate the passover with his disciples, and applied themselves to examining carefully the briefs which were brought to them; to which were added a repetitio pro informatione of Belial, and a paper of the same nature from Moses, in regard to which, more merciful than our counsellor of Nuremberg, we shall deserve the thanks of our readers. Seneca, the clerk of Joseph, was appointed secretary.

Caiaphas was the only one who supported entirely the views of the infernal party. Aristotle, though avowing that he ill understood Jewish theology, was struck with the fact that the devil at the outset challenged God as judge. Caiaphas had said that Jesus, being born of Mary, could not be God, and had adduced the axiom:—

*Von keinem Weib noch keinem Mann
Kein Gott sein Ursprung nehmen kann;*

that is: no God can derive his origin either from a man or from a woman. "But this is not very conclusive," observed Aristotle; "for with us we regard as gods Hercules, Esculapius, Castor, Pollux, and many others who were born of women. Besides, the God of the Jews is almighty, and can do anything he will. He can, therefore, if he pleases, have one or many sons."

The Evangelist John then explained to Aristotle the mysteries of the Athanasian Creed and the theosophy of the Word. Caiaphas replied, accusing him of bias and tritheism. John rebutted him by the comparison of the sun, which is, at the same time, the sun, light, and heat,—the sun begetting the light, the heat proceeding from the two, and all forming but one sun. Then he spoke of the miracles of the resurrection and the works of Jesus, which proved clearly his divinity.

"Your Jesus has done all this by sorcery," retorted Caiaphas.

"Not at all," answered John, "for sorcerers are in hell, the property of the devil; and it is far from him to give up what he possesses."

Augustus declared that the reasonings of John were very powerful. But, distrusting his knowledge and that of Aristotle in these matters, and Joseph being as good a Jew as John and Caiaphas, he referred the subject to the president for the most ample light.

Joseph answered, modestly, that, for a long time, he had believed with Caiaphas that God, being sole, could not have a son; but at present he saw better how it was. For he had perceived that the mystery of the Trinity was taught in the two Testaments. And he enumerated a great number of Bible passages which appeared to him to prove it. The error of the Jews concerning Jesus proceeded from their belief that the Messiah was to be a great lord who should deliver them from all their troubles, instead of comprehending that the special end of redemption was the deliverance of the human race from the claws of the devil. Jesus had, therefore, only performed a legitimate act in retaking from the devil what had, in reality, always belonged to himself. Besides, Jesus did not intend to take from him the wicked and the impious, and, henceforth, the devil ought to be satisfied with acting the part of executioner of the high acts of divine justice.

Having come to the end of his speech, Joseph perceived that it was the hour for dinner, and proposed that they should close the meeting. But the parties had still some papers to submit to the commission. Belial presented to him a Schlussschrift, a final memorial, in which he attacked the dogma of the divinity of Jesus Christ with the arguments which the Socinians had used in the seventeenth century. To this was opposed the Replique cum annexa conclusionem drawn up by Moses.

The next day, when the commission had resumed its deliberations, the Emperor Augustus was disposed, still more than the day before, to give in to the opinion that Jesus was the Son of God; he astonished by the subtlety of his reasoning the priest Caiaphas, who exclaimed: "Ach Gott! We Jews do not reflect so much upon spiritual things, and when our rabbis tell us anything we believe them without inquiring farther." Yet he must acknowledge that the arguments in favor of the divinity of Christ appeared to him irrefutable. Aristotle, even, was gained over. He found that, all things considered, there were close relations between his philosophy and the evangelical doctrine; and he insisted, as an empirical philosopher, upon the fact, of which he had been a witness, of the irresistible ascendancy which Jesus exercised over the devils at the time of his descent into hell.

The judgment of the arbitrators was at length rendered. It consisted, first, in the full and entire approbation of the judgment rendered in the first instance; second, in setting at naught the appeal; third, in recognizing the divinity of Christ and his absolute right over humanity; fourth, in acknowledging the power of the devil to retain those whom Jesus had left in hell on account of their wickedness, and those who, until the last judgment, should, by their unbelief and hardness of heart, place themselves beyond the reach of divine mercy.

This was drawn up in good and due form, and terminated by the regular formula: Actum at Jerusalem, Friday, the 25th of March, of the year 34. Signed: Octavianus, Caiaphas, Johannes, Aristoteles, Joseph.

Belial made an indescribable grimace when he heard the judgment of the arbitrators, and a worse one still when he had to pay the costs and charges. If he had not been in the presence of the judge, he would have beaten Moses to powder. But he was obliged to restrain himself.

Moses ascended to heaven, and delivered the judgment to his Lord Jesus, who was pleased to read it to his redeemed ones to complete their tranquillity. The elect in their delight sung hymns of rejoicing; at first, the sixteenth Psalm, afterwards that which is written in the book of Isaiah the prophet, chapter twenty-sixth.

Belial returned to hell with slow steps, dragging his tail, and with his ears hanging down, so that Lucifer and Hébelfurck, unable to restrain their impatience, dispatched Ozé to him in order to get his report sooner. He, seeing Belial's long face, divined that he did not wish to say anything, and returned, saying, simply, that he brought no good news.

Then Lucifer convoked the ban and the rear-ban of hell, and in truth Mrs. Jacobus Ayer needed to invoke the pencil of a Callot to aid him in describing the astonishing crowd of devils, male and female, who ran at the call of their prince. Baal, who commanded four hundred thirty-nine thousand nine hundred fifty-six evil spirits, was seen coming; Marbas, with a lion's body; Banaa, the spirit of murder; Aaman, with the belly of a dragon and the jaws of a wolf; Glosin, the cynocephalus; Otis, with black lips, great voracious teeth, and enormous horns; Barthimabibi, the prince of the treasury, with the body of a serpent, mounted upon a yellowish horse; Ourzan, riding upon a bear, with the head of a lion; Elligor, who has the form of a wild boar, the demon of quarrels and war; Merax, who has the body of an ox; Queros, with the feet of a goose; Cerberus, the corrupter of churchmen; Oasimolar, with dragons' wings, who has the art of rendering men invisible; Bébal and Abalon, each with three dragons' heads; Fornion, resembling a sea monster, the demon of eloquence and fleeting pleasures; Foream, a great giant who teaches men ethics and logic; Fururum, with the body of a stag, the inspirer of flight and of guilty loves, and who can transform himself into an angel of light; Sydeonius, who joins to a human face the forehead of a bull; and a crowd of others, whose fantastic forms and ill-omened functions are described so graphically and minutely that one would truly think the author saw them all pass before his eyes; such as Androalphus, who has the form of a peacock and especially haunts star-gazers; Andras, with the body of a raven, who stirs up strife between superiors and inferiors; Ozé, who resembles a leopard and turns men's heads, making them think they are kings and emperors; Haagenti, a winged ox; and Zalees, riding upon a crocodile, etc., etc. I pass by these and many others.

It was in the midst of this formidable assembly that Belial, much cast down, advanced to put in the hands of Lucifer a duplicate of the final judgment. It was read in a loud voice. When they heard it grief gave place to joy. Nothing was lost. Belphégor was the first to observe that, in the upshot, hell would not remain long empty, and that, to refill it, there were in the world a plenty of Jews, Turks, Pagans, popes, clergymen, monks, and prelates, anabaptists, illuminati, blasphemers, usurers, drunkards, adulterers, etc. This being understood, Belial received the sincere thanks of the whole assembly for his services, and they asked Lucifer to give him the command of eighty new legions, in addition to the eighty he already commanded. Lucifer graciously complied with this request, and, at the same time, invited all the devils to a grand banquet he wished to celebrate that same evening, in honor of Belial, by installing him in his new dignities; and there never was such a grand festival in hell as on that night.

Here finishes the history related in eight hundred and thirty-eight pages in quarto, by Mrs. Jacobus Ayer, doctor at Nuremberg, utriusque juris.

PART V.

Dr. Ayer, when he had finished his great book, imagined, perhaps, that he had valiantly contributed to the glory of Christ among men. What is certain is, that the moral of his work is this: that, though the cause is wrong, recourse must be had to the good offices of advocates and attorneys; if the case is lost, there is still a chance of picking up some crumbs of the contested cake. We will leave him to the complacency of his triumph, and direct our attention to the theological teaching which, unwittingly, is shown in this heavy work.

It may, perhaps, have been remarked that, in all this history, there reigns a profound ignorance of the Orthodox dogma of redemption, as official theology had already settled it a long time before the epoch in which Ayer wrote, and as it is understood at the present day in the traditional school. In reality, such an ignorance is equivalent to a denial; for, in regard to certain subjects, ignoring facts is the same as denying them. According to the Orthodox dogma of to-day, it is not proper to speak of the claws of Satan; it is from the inexorable justice of God that the death of Jesus saves men. The devil would not exist if this dogma was held intact, and continued to affirm that divine justice, requiring the punishment of guilty humanity, and divine love, desiring its salvation, are reconciled by the bloody expiation accomplished by the Man-God. In satisfying justice by his sufferings, he has left free the course of mercy. On the contrary, the interpretation by which the counsellor of Nuremberg, and those to whom his book was addressed, understood the work of redemption, could not get along without the devil. Divine justice enters into the infernal drama only passively; it exists simply in the act of legitimate recovery accomplished by Jesus. How is it, then, that, in the seventeenth century, an enlightened layman, desirous of remaining within the limits of Orthodoxy, understands redemption so differently from the view for a long time adopted in the school?

The history of dogma gives us the key of this enigma. In fact, the doctrine developed by Ayer had, in a higher degree than the Orthodox doctrine, the sanction of the ages. The idea that redemption delivers us from Satan, rather than from the punishments inflicted by the justice of God, is, without contradiction, the most ancient one in the Church. It is traced to the second century, and serves as the point of departure of the successive evolutions of dogma.

The mystic teaching of the Apostle Paul, according to which, by virtue of partaking of the moral life of Christ, the faithful suffered, died, and spiritually rose again, to become in him a new creature,—this teaching, being early misunderstood, left few traces in the primitive Church. Scarcely is the echo of it found except in two or three obscure writers. The preponderating Judeo-Christian view considered Christianity a revelation more complete and a law more perfect still than the revelation and the law of the Old Testament; it confined itself generally to assimblating the death of Christ to a sacrifice, without ever fully explaining what was meant by it. At bottom, the catastrophe of Calvary was embarrassing. It had to be admitted, since it was incontestable; but very quickly thought was turned upon the resurrection.

The gnosticism of the second century, which saw in the history the unfolding of a tragedy of which the Divine Being was at once the scene, the victim, and the hero, came, more quickly than the Orthodox Church, to assign to the work of Jesus the value of a deliverance, of a redemption from the power of evil under the yoke of which man was bending. A little later, the Church entered into a similar way of thinking, and the more it exalted Jesus, the more it identified him with absolute divinity; so much the more also it felt the need of attributing to his death an end proportionate to the immensity of the sacrifice.

To Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons (177-202), belongs the first Catholic theory of redemption, and in this the devil holds a very large place. By succeeding in the fall of our first parents, said Irenæus, he conquered humanity by violence, and unjustly held it in his power. The incarnate Word, after having in effect destroyed this power by presenting to the devil a man inaccessible to his temptations, gently persuaded him, secundum suadellam, to accept his blood as a ransom for captive humanity. Satan accepted, and thus Jesus delivered men without Satan's having any cause of complaint of being wronged in his rights over them.

It is seen that the idea of justice, even of judicial justice, already occupied the minds of the Christian doctors. Redemption, to be just, must not do violence to any one, not even the devil. But dogma, whatever may be said of it, has its own logic,—a logic the more inexorable because it does not shrink from drawing from its premises all the contradictions which they embrace. There is nothing more undaunted than Orthodox dogma; and even if not believed, its merits must be recognized. On the theory of Irenæus, a question instantly arises. How could the devil accept as a ransom, in the place of humanity, the blood, the life, of Christ, who was not to remain in his hands?

Origen (185-254) answered that the devil was deceived in his calculations, that he thought he should be able to hold Christ in his power, who, in himself alone, was equal in value to all humanity, but that he saw his error too late. Did not Origen see that, according to this hypothesis, redemption was only a divine cheat, a ruse of God, most subtly playing with Satan? Or, indeed, should his declarations on this point be classed with the popular part of his teaching, which was often very esoteric? This question should be premised, since Origen elsewhere expresses himself in a way much more rational upon the real significance of the sufferings and death of Jesus. He sees in it, like the serious modern thought of to-day, the most tragic, the most august, application of that mysterious law which orders that the good shall not triumph over the evil of humanity but on condition of the suffering of those who proclaim and establish it. But this was not the view which predominated so early. The previous view of a contest, even a contest of artifice with the devil, received much more readily the sympathies of the Church. The doctors of the fourth and fifth centuries were fond even of refining upon it, without shrinking from the scandalous consequences which were unfolded, however they qualified the terms. Gregory of Nyssa, about 394, even goes so far as to say that God did well thus to deceive the devil. It was the law of retaliation. Did not the devil begin by deceiving the human race in Eden? The humanity of the Lord, said he, is the bait which allured Satan, who did not see the hook; that is, the divinity concealed in human flesh. The popes, Leo the Great (440-461) and Gregory the Great (590-604), shared the same sentiment; and the comparisons they employed were not less realistic. In 1164, Peter Lombard did not fear to compare the cross of Christ to a mouse-trap into which the devil had been heedlessly lured. Before this time, Ambrose, Augustine, Theodoret, John of Damascus, etc., had announced similar ideas, though under a form less gross. Augustine, however, had the tact not to insist upon the idea of deception exercised at the expense of the devil. He preferred to think that it was in subjugating Satan by his superior force, and in obliging him to accept an equitable ransom, that Jesus triumphed over him. When, in the twelfth century, Abelard wished to banish the devil from the redemptive drama, Bernard of Clairvaux was so angry he declared that a mouth uttering such blasphemies ought to be shut up by blows.

Still there was more than one protest in the Church previous to the twelfth century, against this explanation of the end attained by the suffering and death of Christ. Gregory Nazianzen was especially remarkable for the keenness of his criticisms. However, he stood alone; and it was not till the twelfth century that Christian theology began to shake off that perpetual obsession of the devil which weighed so heavily upon its first dogmatics. Anselm of Canterbury taught positively that God owed nothing to the devil, while man owed everything to God, and that the ransom of our deliverance was paid; not to the devil, but to God. This theory, which in his time was bold and new, being developed by the great doctors of scholasticism, Bonaventura and Thomas Aquinas, and adopted in its essential features by the principal reformers, easily supplanted its predecessor in official teaching.

But it could not be speedily eliminated from the popular conscience. During all the Middle Ages, Satan held too large a place in the beliefs of the people to have them disenchanted from the idea of his defeat or ruin accomplished by Christ in person in the depths of his dark empire. The remembrance of the decisive victory of the Church over Paganism, often engrafted upon some myth symbolizing the triumph of the forces of beneficent Nature over its destructive forces,—this remembrance was, in a multitude of instances, expressed by the victory of an archangel or a saint over a monster vomited forth from hell. Christ, the conqueror of Satan, reproduced the same conflict in a much higher degree. By a strange contradiction, a power nearly unlimited was accorded to the devil. Everywhere were seen the marks of his claws, the flash of his terrible eyes, and yet he was believed to have been completely vanquished by Christ since the blessed day of the resurrection. Nothing pleased people more than the legends in which the devil was derided or mocked. How well the idea of divine cunning tallied with this popular sentiment! It was an august farce, a mystery as amusing as it was dramatic, and this tragicomic intrigue was unfolded with a thousand variations in the public representations of the Passion and its consequences. It is not probable that the people troubled themselves much about what had formerly disturbed the first doctors of the Church; namely, the right Jesus had to take away from the devil what he might consider his own.

But there was a superior class of the population, enough enlightened to perceive the contradiction inherent in the popular idea, and not theological enough to follow the clergy in their adhesion to the theory of Anselm. These were the legists. For them, the difficulty of reconciling the redemption with justice was a very grave affair, and there were many attempts in which the apology of Christianity was undertaken on the basis of Roman law. The most ancient of these apologies known to us was in the fifteenth century. Its author was James of Thérèse, and it was entitled thus: Reverendi Patris domini Jacobi de Thérèse compendium perbreve Consolatio Peccatorum nuncupatum et apud nonnullos Bellal vocitatum, ad papam Urbanum sextum conscriptum. In 1508, there appeared in Strasbourg, an amplified German version under the title: "Bellal: A Judicial Debate between Bellal, the administrator of hell on the one part, and Jesus Christ, chargé d'affaires of God on the other part; to wit, whether the said Jesus has legally destroyed the hell of the infernal prince, and has had a right to put him in chains; all set forth with the complaint, the reply, the rebuttal, the appeal, and the decision." An analogous work is mentioned by M. Hagenbach, in his History of Dogma, under the title of Extractio animarum ab inferno. There exists also a Processus Satanae contra D. Virginem among the works of Bartolo, and still another book, printed at Cleves, in 1625, having for its author a certain Dr. Pell, which is entitled: Tabula processus seu ordinem ultimi delicti et criminalis iudicii exhibens.

It will be seen that Dr. Ayer, of Nuremberg, far from doing a new thing when he undertook his singular work, on the contrary followed the steps of numerous predecessors, and confined himself to accommodating their work to the exigencies of his age and country. The unorthodoxy of his views escaped his own eyes, as it did those of ecclesiastical authority, thanks to the prestige of its prescription. How could a point of view be proscribed which, for so long a time, had been that of the Christian multitude? Besides, Ayer was a Lutheran; this appears indirectly from his whole book, and directly from one passage, otherwise of no interest. Now, of all the reformers, Luther is the one who has most abounded in the old idea of deliverance from the hands of the devil by the superior power of Jesus. Let it be added, however, that, the more time went on, the more the religious interest which had inspired the composition of such works gave place to purely judicial interests; persons were glad to have such a framework on which to display their legal knowledge, and to familiarize the mind with the forms of civil justice.

This does not prevent one from seeing in the republication of such a work, at the beginning of the eighteenth century, an evident proof of the importance still attached to the part acted by the devil in redemption; and if this history, with many others, proves that dogmas die out, it shows not less clearly that it takes them a long time to die.

PART VI.

Before sending this article to press, I was seized with a scruple. It seemed to me that I was treating my old Moser unjustly and selfishly, and I wished to disburden my mind. Passing again through L., I showed him my manuscript and read to him all that concerned himself.

"Do you wish, or even choose, that I should omit all this?"

"How! Omit it? No, sir! It is an excellent advertisement for me. I would pay very dear for it. Publish, sir, publish; you will do me a true pleasure." And this put me under obligation to buy a few more of his "knick-knacks."

WHEN BURNS was first invited to dine at Dunlop House, a west country dame, who acted as house-keeper, appeared to doubt the propriety of her mistress entertaining a mere ploughman who made rhymes, as if he were a gentleman of old descent. By way of convincing her of the bard's right to such a distinction, Mrs. Dunlop gave her the "Cotter's Saturday Night" to read. This she soon did, and, returning the volume with a strong shake of the head, said: "Nae doubt ladies and gentlemen think muckle o' this, but for me it's naething but what I saw i' my father's house every day, and I dinna see how he could hae tould it any other way."

THERE IS BELIEVED to be only one thing slower than molasses in January, and that is a lady making room for another lady in a street car.—Chicago Herald.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

It never rains in Peru.

Col. Ingersoll is going to lecture on Job.

Crime made the prison, not the prison crime.

Shere Ali had three hundred and sixty wives.

Nebraska has forty-two Presbyterian churches.

In Florida they are making wine from oranges.

Revivals are largely prevalent throughout Ohio.

There is a marble mountain near Salzburg, Austria.

There are over six hundred finger-nail doctors in Paris.

Thirty millions of dollars invested in sewing machines.

Saukey is reported as holding crowded meetings in England.

Over three hundred different uses are made of the palm tree.

Animals die if their vital temperature is increased one-twelfth.

Of the forty-five hotels in Boston in 1836, only three remain.

One pound of egg is equal to one pound of beef in making flesh.

The shekel of Scripture is estimated at fifty-six cents in value.

America uses seven hundred million postage stamps in a year.

A rich gold mine has been discovered on Mount Lazarasco, Mexico.

The church-going element in Washington is said to be largely Catholic.

A daughter of Hawthorne will soon issue her first novel, in serial form.

Jay Gould made over $4,000,000 in one day on the sale of railroad stock.

Some physicians say diphtheria is caused by excessive use of the potato.

A species of grass grows in Mongolia whose juices have an intoxicating effect.

The Pope has forbidden priests to wear lay attire or attend theatres in Rome.

Senator Bruce, a citizen of African descent, presided over the Senate recently.

Water that has stood over night in an open vessel should not be used for cooking.

Fruit, eaten at seasonable hours, furnishes all the acid which the system requires.

The total amount of silver coin now used in the world is estimated at $3,250,000,000.

Bishop Simpson regards proselytizing from one church to another as a species of piracy.

Of all classes that habitually employ the brain, men of science are said to live the longest.

The revision of the New Testament will be ready in a year, and of the Old in about two years.

Four million five hundred thousand acres of land are used in fruit culture in the United States.

There was twenty-seven per cent. truancy in 1877 among children of legal school age in this State.

The first railroad locomotive ran on the 5th day of October, 1829, between Liverpool and Manchester.

There are fifty-three thousand one hundred and fourteen Unitarians in Hungary and Transylvania.

A Viennese lady has been admitted to the degree of doctor of philosophy by the University of Zurich.

A yellow blind drawn over the window in cases of small-pox will, it is said, prevent permanent pitting.

The death rate is greater in Russia than in any European country, and less in Norway and Sweden.

The United States have one hundred and ninety-six thousand six hundred and fifty square miles of coal.

Bishop Cox, of the Episcopal Church, has written a letter in denunciation of the new translation of the Bible.

The effort to have churches taxed that allow lotteries is a step towards having all church property taxed.

There are five hundred and thirty women-doctors and sixty-eight women-preachers in the United States.

Public schools have been established in Costa Rica. The American leaven will leaven the whole lump yet.

The United States sends four hundred and sixty missionaries to foreign lands, and Great Britain one thousand.

Ralph Waldo Emerson's figure is still erect and firm, and he still holds his faith in the future of humanity.

On Feb. 24, it was just two hundred and forty-five years since the first colony of Catholics landed in Maryland.

The very liberal offer made by the Index Association to new subscribers places THE INDEX within the reach of all.

In the retail dry-goods stores of Berlin, only young girls are employed behind the counters to display and sell goods.

There are more illiterate whites than blacks at the South, according to colored Congressman Cain of South Carolina.

Machinery Hall, the second biggest of the centennial buildings, has been sold at auction for $24,000. It cost $634,867.

At the meeting of the Chestnut Street Club, Feb. 18, at Rev. Dr. Bartol's, the subject was "The Problems of Theism."

The bread eaten by the people in this country last year cost two hundred million dollars, and the tobacco nearly twice as much.

Yellow fever in the South was due to disregard of the laws of health, the filthy, ill-drained streets, and poisoned drinking-water.

Kimball, the church-debt lifter, claims to have lightened the burden in the churches during the past two years nearly $2,500,000.

A pint of water is equal to about twenty-seven cubic inches, or a square box three inches long, three inches wide, and three inches deep.

There are more than one hundred thousand Mormons in Utah. The increase in membership for the past ten years exceeds forty thousand.

Geologists report that there is in Japan enough workable coal to produce a yearly yield equal to that in Great Britain for one thousand years.

In Pekin, as soon as night falls, each householder, be he rich or poor, mandarin or mechanic, must light the lantern which stands at his door.

Dr. Prince, formerly Superintendent of the Northampton Lunatic Asylum, says that nearly half the patients at that institution came there from the use of tobacco.

Fifty thousand tea plants have been distributed in the Middle and Southern States, and in from three to four years they will have attained a size to permit a full picking.

There were five thousand three hundred and fourteen books published in England last year, of which number three thousand seven hundred and thirty are wholly new.

In six centuries meat has nearly trebled in price, and wages have increased more than seven-fold. Wages during the thirteenth century were about fifty cents a week.

The first silver-plated table service ever seen in America was presented to John Hancock by the Colonial Legislature in 1794. It is owned by a gentleman in Lawrence, Mass.

The White Hart, the public house wherein Thomas Paine, when a young exciseman, gathered around him the village radicals, still stands in Lewes, a short distance from Brighton, England.

London contains more Roman Catholics than Rome, more Jews than the whole of Palestine, more Irish than Belfast, more Scotchmen than Aberdeen, and more Welshmen than Cardiff.

The exiled editor of the suppressed German socialist paper, the Tocsin of the German Empire, has founded in Switzerland an association for the protection and aid of the politically persecuted.

There are twenty-eight thousand schools in France which have gardens attached to them, each one under the care of a master capable of imparting a practical knowledge of the principles of horticulture.

Cyrus W. Field, the father of the Atlantic cable, will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the birth of that great enterprise on March 10, by a reception at his Gramercy-Park home in New York.

Another Governor of Massachusetts has gone through the farce of appointing a fast day. This year the time set for our people to dishonor the custom of fasting is April 3. "How long, O Lord, how long?"

If a weight of seven hundred and seventy-two pounds falls through a space of one foot, the amount of heat generated by that force is able to raise a pound of water through one degree of Fahrenheit's thermometer.

Professor E. S. Morse, formerly of Salem, Massachusetts, now of the Imperial College at Tokio, has discovered and recorded evidence of cannibalism in the early prehistoric races of Japan. It is believed to be the first traces of such a practice.

Hon. Thomas Russell, in his lecture on the "Life and Character of Washington," says some rather derogatory things of the "Father of his Country." He tells us that Washington paid bills after his election for liquors furnished to his constituents.

A new fruit has been introduced into California, from Japan, which is said in its native country to have as many varieties as are grown in this country of our apple. It is known as the Japanese Persimmon, and is equal to a good pear or peach.

Doll & Richards have a new engraving of Ralph Waldo Emerson by the well-known engraver, S. A. Schoff. It is Emerson as those associated with him in his prime love to remember him, with his kindly and dreamy, yet penetrating, glance and smile.

In the Himalayas, trees grow at an elevation of eleven thousand eight hundred feet above the sea. In the Alps, the growth of trees ends at six thousand four hundred feet. In Tibet, the pasture grounds extend above an elevation of fifteen thousand feet.

When Thomas Jefferson was asked respecting his religion, his answer was: "It is known to God and myself alone. Its evidence is to be sought in my life: if that has been honest and dutiful to society, the religion which has regulated it cannot be a bad one."

Turkish Proverbs: Never a sigh falls to the ground; God makes the blind bird's nest; A smile answers every tear; Where there is a soul, there is a hope; Alms are a silent prayer; Every accident gives advice; Man without judgment, ship without anchor.

Mr. Oliver Johnson retires from the Orange (N. J.) Journal, in order to devote himself for a time to other literary work. Mr. Johnson is one of our oldest abolitionists, and no one is better fitted to write the history of the anti-slavery band, of which he was one of the original members.

From 1848 to 1876 there were two hundred and thirty-three thousand one hundred and thirty-six Chinese who came to this country, and among this large number there were less than seven thousand women. There is hardly, in the entire Chinese population of the Pacific coast, one family to be found.

President Grévy dresses modestly, and is quite a large property holder. He delights in music, but his favorite pastime is to play billiards and to smoke cigars while making his carroms. He is also a keen sportsman and an able agriculturist. He speaks forcibly and frankly and never loses his temper.

"THE INDEX mildly censures the Herald for alluding to Paine Hall as the 'Infidel Temple.' The Herald rather thought THE INDEX and Investigator folks gloried in the epithet."—Herald. We expressed our regrets that such a liberal paper as the Herald should speak of Thomas Paine as "Tom Paine," and the Herald tried to tickle our irreligious vanity in return.

Invention is the way to wealth. The inventor of the cast-steel plough made fifty thousand dollars out of it. Twenty thousand dollars were paid the inventor of a little wire fastener for bottle stoppers. The copper-toed shoe paid the man who devised it nearly seventy thousand dollars, while the profits of a horse-shoe machine, during the term of the original patent, approximated a million dollars.

The plan for the "Concord Summer School of Philosophy and Literature" has been completed. The school will be held at the Orchard House of Mr. Alcott, on the hill-side next to Hawthorne's "Wayside" in Concord. There are to be five regular professors, each one to give ten conversations or lectures on his special subject. The school is to continue five weeks, from July 15 to August 20, with two lectures each day.

G. W. Foote has commenced the publication of a monthly magazine, called The Liberal, in London. In the introduction the editor says that "the chief business of the magazine will be to help on as far as possible the formation of liberal ideas on all subjects." "No subject is too sacred for discussion, though some may be too unclean." The first two numbers, for January and February, are filled with good articles.

The annual convention of Hebrew congregations at Cincinnati last summer referred the subject of forming Jewish colonies in the South or West to a committee, whose report is just published. They are decidedly in favor of the plan, especially for their brethren in Eastern and Southern Europe. The board of delegates on civil and religious rights is instructed to take steps to cooperate with sister societies in Europe, to encourage the Jews there in the pursuit of agriculture and to settle lands in the southern and western part of the United States.

Appletons' Journal talks thus sensibly about "The Nude in Art": "The feelings that a beautiful form excite in the artist are certain to be different from those which spring up in the breast of the ordinary observer, who is sure not to be occupied with questions of execution or artistic scholarship, but with the emotions that take possession of him. The affirmation so often made that nudity in art is to be accepted because 'to the pure all things are pure' seems to us very foolish. It is just because we are not in this sense pure that the propriety of nude art is questioned. Sexual passion is implanted in all healthy natures, which it behooves us to keep under subjection; and in order to do this it is only wise to avoid temptation in every form."

EARLY THOUGHTS OF PROFESSOR TYNDALL.

From Professor Tyndall's article on "Virchow and Evolution," in the Nineteenth Century for November, I extract the following interesting passage on the early development of freethought:—

"Looking backwards from my present stand-point over the earliest past, a boyhood fond of play and physical action, but averse to school-work, lies before me. The aversion did not arise from intellectual apathy or want of appetite for knowledge, but mainly from the fact that my earliest teachers lacked the power of imparting vitality to what they taught. Athwart all play and amusement, however, a thread of seriousness ran through my character; and many a sleepless night of my childhood has been passed fretted by the question, 'Who made God?' I was well versed in Scripture, for I loved the Bible, and was prompted by that love to commit large portions of it to memory. Later on, I became adroit in turning my scriptural knowledge against the Church of Rome, but the characteristic doctrines of that Church marked only for a time the limits of inquiry. The eternal sonship of Christ, for example, as enunciated in the Athanasian Creed, perplexed me. The resurrection of the body was also a thorn in my mind; and here I remember that a passage on Blair's grave gave me momentary rest:—

"Sure the same power
That reared the piece at first, and took it down,
Can reassemble the loose, scattered parts,
And put them as they were."

"The conclusion seemed for the moment entirely fair, but with further thought my difficulties came back to me. I had seen cows and sheep browsing upon church-yard grass which sprang from the decaying mould of dead men. The flesh of these animals was undoubtedly a modification of human flesh, and the persons who fed upon them were as undoubtedly, in part, a more remote modification of the same substance. I figured the self-same molecules as belonging first to one body and afterwards to a different one, and asked myself how two bodies so related could possibly arrange their claims at the day of resurrection. The scattered parts of each were to be reassembled, and set as they were. But if handed over to the one, how could they possibly enter in the composition of the other? Omnipotence itself, I concluded, could not reconcile the contradiction. Thus the plank which Blair's mechanical theory of the resurrection brought momentarily into sight disappeared, and I was again cast abroad on the waste ocean of speculation.

"At the same time, I could by no means get rid of the idea that the aspect of Nature and the consciousness of man implied the operations of a power altogether beyond my grasp,—an energy the thought of which raised the temperature of the mind, though it refused to accept shape, personal or otherwise, from the intellect. Perhaps the able critics of the Saturday Review are justified in speaking as they sometimes do of Mr. Carlyle. They owe him nothing, and have a right to announce the fact in their own way. I, on the other hand, owe him a great deal, and am also in honor bound to acknowledge the debt. Few, perhaps, who are privileged to come into contact with that illustrious man have shown him a sturdier front than I have, or in discussing modern science have more frequently withstood him. But I could see that his contention at bottom always was that the human soul has claims and yearnings which physical science cannot satisfy." If one would like to have these yearnings defined,—the sense of the infinite, says one; the sense of dependence, says another; no, the sense of freedom, exclaims a third,—and so on; but I will not discuss that here. H. G. A.

—National Reformer, Dec. 8.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 1.

J. T. Brookway, $3.50; C. F. Woods, $3; M. H. McKay, $1.50; A. M. Lee, $1.50; M. W. Dodge, $1.50; A. A. Becker, $1.50; E. D. Burleigh, $3.20; A. J. Griffin, $5.50; Charles Garrison, $6; Nathl. Allen, $3.20; Wm. A. Butler, $3.20; George Lewis, $2; M. D. Conway, $4.04; Luther Woods, $3; A. B. Latty, $3; J. N. Lombard, $4.70; J. L. Stodard, $1.50; D. P. Lennihan, $3.25; William Foster, $4; Meyer Jonasson, $3.75; John Riker, $2; E. North, $1.50; A. C. Erickson, $6.40; Dr. S. M. Whistler, $1; Mrs. F. G. Lorendo, $1.50; Mrs. Mary E. Spencer, $1.50; A. J. Becknap, $1; M. J. Perry, $1.60; C. M. Cuyler, $3.20; J. C. Owen, $2; B. F. Hastings, $3; Chas. E. Haskin, $1.70; L. B. Farrar, $1; John D. Frost, $18.70; Jane E. Curtis, $3.20; Rev. J. S. Thomson, $3.20; Wiley Britton, $2; F. Schmitt, 75 cents; Mrs. Mary N. Adams, $3.25; Hon. G. F. Talbot, $3.20; Miss Hattie Woods, $1.50; Jason Allard, 50 cents; J. Rummell, $11; E. F. Blaisdell, 50 cents; Mrs. Clara Blaisdell, $1.70; Dr. L. P. Bebb, $1; D. D. Holmes, $5; J. L. Angle, $7.20; F. M. Lamb, $2.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 6, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBET, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE BUREAU, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

A FINE CHANCE TO CLUB.

We have made arrangements with the respective publishers to club THE INDEX with the following first-class magazines, for a year, at the astonishingly low rates annexed:—

Fortnightly Review..... $5.50 instead of $8.20
North American Review..... 5.75 " " "
Popular Science Monthly..... 6.00 " " "

To the subscriber, this is equivalent to getting one of these leading periodicals at the usual rate, $5.00, and THE INDEX besides at only $0.50, $0.75, or $1.00. The offer is necessarily confined to names not now on our mail list, and is made solely to increase the circulation of THE INDEX, whose friends will find it a great aid in kindly seconding our efforts to this end.

ANOTHER VOICE FOR PUBLIC MORALITY.

The following admirably expressed letter, addressed to the Secretary of the First Liberal League of Boston by the high-minded and learned author of Oriental Religions, in response to an invitation to lecture before this League, is laid before our readers with the consent of writer and recipient, and will carry great weight with the many who know Mr. Johnson's long and distinguished services in the cause of the universal religion:—

NORTH ANDOVER, Feb. 21, 1879.

MY DEAR MISS TITCOMB:—

I have received from you a request, as Secretary of a new Liberty League, for a reading before it at the next meeting. I believe you must excuse me, for several reasons; one of which is the difficulty of leaving home, and another the fact that, as I do not belong to any leagues or clubs, and have no calls to the lecture platform, my attention is, as you know, mainly given to other forms of communication with the public mind, and I have little leisure at present for the kind of work proposed.

But, having declined the invitation, I ought not to withhold my opinion on the point just now of most importance to your society. I have no hesitation in saying that those who have refused to join in relieving the State of all moral responsibility in its circulation of printed matter through the mails, seem to me to have consulted their own self-respect and the rights of civilization. On them, at least, the slanderous attempt of so-called "religious" platforms and presses to identify "infidelity" with vice must fall harmless.

I am sincerely your friend,

SAMUEL JOHNSON.

"THE FINAL APPEAL IN MORALS."

On the catholic and kind invitation of the students of the Divinity School of Harvard University, acting independently as a "Debating Club" by permission of the Faculty, we delivered an extempore address on the above subject in the chapel of Divinity Hall, Monday evening, February 24. The importance of the topic, which was suggested by a very evident necessity of the times, induces us to write out the substance of this address for THE INDEX from the meagre notes which constituted the only preparation we were able to make at the time. We can give only a condensed abstract here, but shall follow closely the general line of thought then presented.

PRIVATE JUDGMENT AND UNIVERSAL REASON.

What is the Final Appeal in Morals?

What answers have been made to this question in the past? And what answer must be given to it now, in the light of modern thought?

Let us first understand what we mean by "final appeal." All questions are forever open to him who can open them; no matter how effectually closed they may be in the opinion of mankind, genius or superior knowledge or the discovery of new facts may at any time compel a reconsideration of them. The recognition of a "final appeal" implies no denial of this indisputable truth; it implies only that human life is short, that controversy on practical points must sooner or later come practically to an end, and that, since all moral questions relate to moral action, these questions must be definitely settled before action is possible. Purely speculative problems may remain unsolved indefinitely; but practical problems cannot. The necessity of ultimate decision on all problems of duty (which are always practical problems) creates the necessity of some ultimate or "final appeal." If the individual has to act alone, he decides how to act by some standard which he has adopted individually; if society has to act collectively, it must decide how to act by reference to some standard mutually agreed upon. In either case, private reflection or public discussion must at last terminate by acting on the recognized authority of some "final appeal"; otherwise action can never supervene.

By the "final appeal in morals," therefore, we understand some ultimate standard, criterion, or tribunal, by which such a decision may be arrived at as is indispensable to action, whether by the individual or by society.

Now the essential problem of our inquiry is: how to reconcile private judgment with universal reason—how to secure that entire liberty of individual thought which is the fundamental principle of progress, yet secure also that unity of conclusion which is the fundamental principle of social order? Without the former, the result is blind conservatism and social stagnation; without the latter, the result is reckless radicalism, license, and social anarchy. The only valid solution of the problem must be such as shall recognize each principle to the full in its legitimate scope, and thereby ensure both progress and order—that is, healthy social evolution. All offered solutions must be examined from this point of view, and brought to this decisive test.

THE FOUR ANSWERS.

To the question, "What is the Final Appeal in Morals?" four leading answers can be briefly stated as follows:—

I. Roman Catholicism offers the Authority of the Church, represented by the Pope and the Consensus of Councils.

II. Protestantism offers the Authority of the Bible, represented by the private judgment of the believer and the Consensus of Creeds.

III. Individualism offers the Authority of Private Judgment, represented by the individual in utter independence of all Consensus.

IV. Science offers the Authority of Universal Reason, represented by the private judgment of the inquirer and the Consensus of the Competent.

Let us look at these four answers a little more in detail.

THE CONSENSUS OF COUNCILS.

Rome plants herself on the absolute truth of revelation and the absolute infallibility of her own interpretation of it. God is assumed to reveal all needed truth of "faith and morals" to the Church, unmixed with error, and to preserve her from all error in receiving it by means of the perpetual inspiration of his Holy Spirit. There was an awkward hitch in her logic, however, until the infallibility of the Pope was declared in 1870. The majority vote of an Ecumenical cal Council was held to be divinely and infallibly inspired, although the individual members of it were not held to be thus inspired. The Council was assumed to represent the universal reason of the faithful, as directly illumined by Divine inspiration; and the vote of minorities against majority decisions was a very embarrassing fact for her theory. If all the members were inspired to vote right, how could any member vote wrong? If no one was inspired to vote right, how could the vote of the majority be any more inspired than that of the minority? But if some members were inspired and others not, how was it certain that the inspiration did not go with the minority, after all? There was thus an inherent logical necessity in the Catholic theory to get rid of this inconsistency, and to vest the infallibility of Divine revelation in the Pope, who could not be split up into majority and minority. The Pope is considered as representing the undivided mind of the Church, the universal reason of all the faithful, as guided and inspired by God himself. Assuming it to be inspired by him, Catholicism has always recognized the supremacy of universal reason. Being compelled by her own theory of revelation, however, to conceive of this universal reason as also infallible, the Church has found herself obliged to suppress all differences of opinion, and therefore to extinguish utterly the right of private judgment, so far as it contravenes her own decisions. Thus it is very clear that Rome, in her zeal to uphold the universality and at the same time the infallibility of reason, when Divinely inspired, has found it logically impossible to leave any room for private judgment, and has consequently stamped it out of existence with an iron heel, whenever it dared to raise its head. As a direct result of this total sacrifice of private judgment to universal reason, in order to vindicate the latter as infallibly inspired, Rome stands in history as the most intensely conservative institution ever created by man. She has even made a boast of her own absolute and eternal unprogressiveness, and chosen for her motto the proud words "Semper Eadem"—"Always the Same."

THE CONSENSUS OF CREEDS.

Protestantism also plants herself on the absolute truth of revelation; but, unlike Catholicism, she does not claim absolute infallibility for her own interpretation of it. To vindicate this, she would be obliged to imitate Rome, and reproduce that very ecclesiastical absolutism which she sprang into being to deny. Not to vindicate it, however, while yet she claims absolute truth for her revelation, has been to doom herself to logical absurdity and consequent practical impotence. She has proved herself utterly unable to resist the disintegrating effect of her own principles, and has seen herself paralyzed by the sectarianism which those principles inevitably engender. To offset this fatal tendency, she has found herself obliged to resort to shifts and expedients utterly at variance with the original spirit of the Protestant movement. Devoted to the principle of private judgment, yet unwilling to relinquish the claim of possessing an absolute revelation, she has compromised the matter as best she could, and created semi-authoritative creeds as a dyke against the waves of private judgment and free thought. These creeds she cannot enforce as infallible, since they are confessedly not such; yet she has practically enforced them as if they were. What is the result of this vacillation and inconsistency? This—that she half recognizes private judgment by surrendering the claim of infallible interpretation, and half recognizes universal reason by insisting on her indefinite Consensus of Creeds. It is her very nature to do everything by half, and nothing wholly—to lay down a principle and deny it in the same breath. Halting between two minds, she proclaims in terms the right of private judgment, and immediately, fearing (with cause) she has endangered her infallible revelation, proceeds to force upon this private judgment the arbitrary symbols of her own confessedly fallible making. She has no "final appeal" either in faith or morals but her Consensus of Creeds, which in morals is rather a vague "Christian consciousness," a heterogeneous compound of sentiments, precepts, and prejudices, than a clear-cut dogmatic statement. To this very indefiniteness and inconsistency, however, and to this half-recognition of both private judgment and universal reason, Protestantism owes her progressiveness, as compared with Catholicism. But her progress has always been disorderly and intermittent, alternating with retrogression and winning no permanent victory except as the consequence of long and bitter contention. The two congenital tendencies she constantly manifests, one towards the extinction of private judgment in favor of universal reason, and one towards the extinction of universal reason in favor of private judgment, ripen on the one hand into Ritualism and on the other hand into Individualism; they can never unite in a continuous progress, or lead to a true social equilibrium. Her "final appeal" both in faith and morals is simply the fallible interpretation of an infallible revelation. And that can settle no vexed question to the satisfaction of anybody.

PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

Individualism repudiates all claims of absolute revelation or infallible interpretation of moral truth, and plants herself on the absolute personal sovereignty of the individual, both in the determination and the practice of it. She might adopt, as her motto, this stanza by Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton:—

"Honor to him who, self-complete, alone,
Carves to the grave one pathway all his own,
And, heeding naught that men may think or say,
Asks but his soul, if doubtful of the way."

Protestantism challenged the despotic authority of Rome in the name of that principle which Rome especially proscribed; namely, the private judgment of the individual. But she has nevertheless always retained a consciousness of the necessity of recognizing also the principle of universal reason, which Rome had exalted to sole sovereignty. In attempting to recognize both of these principles, however, Protestantism lacks clear comprehension of either; her feeble and inconsequent compromise has had the effect of creating a protest against herself in the form of Individualism, which ignores the principle of universal reason as totally as Rome had ignored the principle of private judgment, and which exalts the latter principle to sole sovereignty in defiance both of Rome and Geneva. The very essence of Individualism is the denial of any authority in faith or morals which is superior to the private judgment of the individual; it is the unqualified affirmation of the right of the individual, not only in belief but also in conduct, to be absolute judge both of the law and the fact, and to deny the right of society to exercise any control over him in either respect. The concurrent moral sense and the concurrent intellectual conviction of mankind are equally set at naught; nothing is entitled to weight, influence, or control, as against the individual's private judgment or "intuition." The universal reason has no meaning or existence for Individualism, as a principle which is coördinate with that of private judgment and entitled to equal regard. Hence Individualism, utterly lacking the element of universality, leads just as naturally to incorrigible egotism in belief and reckless antinomianism in morals as to sublime insight or superlative excellence; it is the inspiration of absurdity, lawlessness, and social anarchy, as well as of individual achievements of the highest class; it stimulates social progress to a certain point, and then checks it by destroying intellectual and social order, without which no continuous progress is possible. The wildest vagaries, the most vicious extravagances, the most widespread and ruinous demoralization of society, encounter no hindrance in the philosophy of Individualism, since it contains nothing by which the thoughts, purposes, or practices of one individual can be declared or even deemed better than those of another.

Thus Catholicism establishes the principle of universal reason on the destruction of private judgment, and becomes utter despotism; Individualism establishes the principle of private judgment on the destruction of universal reason, and becomes utter anarchy; Protestantism half establishes both principles, but leaves them totally unreconciled and waging a war to the knife for supremacy, and becomes the mere battle-ground for their fierce contention. That is the record of the past, with its three answers to our question, "What is the Final Appeal in Morals?" Has the future no better answer, already heard, even if faintly, amidst the tumultuous uproar and conflicting battle-cries of the present?

THE CONSENSUS OF THE COMPETENT.

Science, even now, gives the answer that will certainly stand unshaken, when its import has been once fully comprehended. She plants herself on a frank abandonment of all pretences of absolute revelations or infallible interpretations; she holds all truth to be relative to man's natural faculties, so far as it is known at all, and to stand simply on the warrant of those faculties. The claim of infallibility, made avowedly by Catholicism and Protestantism, and lurking half-concealed even in the "intuition" of Individualism, Science unreservedly surrenders. She holds all questions to be open until closed by evidence, and forever subject to re-opening if new evidence is discovered; and the answers in all cases depend on the weight of evidence, the preponderance of probabilities. So far as morals are concerned, individual and social experience takes the place of absolute revelation, in the philosophy of Science; and correct reasoning on this experience takes the place of infallible interpretation. The truths of morals, like those of every other particular science, rest primarily on observation—observation of the moral facts and relations of all human life, both individual and social; and the true meaning of all these facts can only be elicited by the same scientific method which is applied constantly and successfully in all other sciences.

Now Science recognizes the right of private judgment, in morals as in geology or physics, in the most unqualified and unrestricted way. She possesses neither the machinery nor the spirit of repression. All individuals without exception are equally at liberty to observe, to experiment, to reflect, to theorize, to proclaim; their freedom is not only conceded, but encouraged and rewarded according to the value of their results. But Science exacts positive value in these results, as their only title to attention or reward. Individuals are not permitted to establish their results as scientific on any merely individual insight or declaration or claim of their own; there is no such reverence for Individualism on the part of Science. All results of the individual, however obtained, are subjected to the most rigorous and merciless examination by the supreme tribunal of Science; namely, the entire body of the able, the qualified, the well-informed. No fact, no proposition, no theory, no law, no discovery, is ever elevated to the rank of an established scientific truth, until it has silenced all opposition among those to whom the scientific world are wont to listen with respect; it must run the gauntlet of opposition, and conquer its "right to be" at the sword's-point of reason. No assumption is tolerated; no reputation is conclusive; no confidence is demonstration. Entire unanimity of all who are entitled to an independent opinion must be won in its favor, before any man's insight or genius can secure for his thought the stamp and seal of truth from this supreme tribunal.

Thus Science recognizes to the fullest imaginable extent the private judgment of the individual, and encourages the utmost and freest play of all individual minds. But she also recognizes to the fullest possible extent the authority of universal reason, and corrects all individual results by that enlightened public opinion, that aggregated wisdom of the whole, that CONSENSUS OF THE COMPETENT, which is her "final appeal in morals," as in every other department. That this Consensus of the Competent is infallible, nobody pretends or imagines; its decisions have been too often reversed on fuller knowledge of the facts or on sounder exposition of their bearings, to permit any pretence of infallibility or unchangeableness. But no individual has ever been able to reverse its decisions except by the presentation of a better case, either in point of facts or of reasonings. Science is inexorable here. She guarantees absolute liberty of private judgment to the individual; but she binds him rigorously to reason by her demand for evidence. She, and she alone, has solved this difficult problem—how to respect both private judgment and universal reason at the same time, to the fullest and most absolute extent.

THE ORDEAL OF LAUGHTER.

"Who are 'the Competent'?" That question needs no answer. Competency is its own attestation; it needs no credentials from anybody. The world discovers, it knows not how, but none the less satisfactorily, who are "the Competent"; their title to office as members of the supreme tribunal of the universal reason is derived from the involuntary and utterly informal suffrage of mankind. The Consensus of the Competent is the nearest possible approach to absolute truth which is permitted to the human mind; and the conclusiveness of its verdict, for the time being, is called in question by the ignorant alone. Sooner or later, Science establishes general agreement through the universality of reason and the involuntary unanimity of the reasonable. The very word "science" is the name of that great body of established truths which it is simply ignorance to doubt and madness to deny. And nothing ever gains admission into that category until it has first received the stamp and seal of universal reason through the Consensus of the Competent.

The "final appeal in morals," which Science offers in this tribunal of universal reason, it is obvious, possesses no means of enforcing its decisions. Crack-brained individuals occasionally break forth in open rebellion against it. What happens? No disability of any kind is incurred by these rebels against reason; but they are at last silenced by the ORDEAL OF LAUGHTER. That is the Holy Inquisition of Science—the only Inquisition it ever established. But it is infinitely more effective than the Inquisition of the Roman Church; for the latter never suppressed heresy, while the former suppresses it most effectively by ridicule. Every fool crawls into his hole when the whole world laughs at him; and Science thus, and only thus, protects mankind from moral folly. But criminal laws may and must, in order to be reasonable, be based on the results of Science; and those laws even fools must be made to obey in practice. Although left forever free to air their folly on platform or in type, they must be made to obey the laws, notwithstanding. Civil society justly claims the right to enact such laws for its own protection as the common conscience demands; it cannot wait for absolute unanimity, but has to make its moral decisions according to the vote of the majority, the best representative of universal reason which the nature of the case permits. The vote of the majority, however, imperfectly represents that Consensus of the Competent which Science establishes as the "final appeal in morals"; and the laws constantly need to be reformed in accordance with the rulings of this supreme tribunal. Thus Science not only lays the foundations of true republican democracy, but supplies the necessary principles for perfecting it by the gradual and only satisfactory process of evolution.

VEXED QUESTIONS.

How, then, are vexed moral questions to be solved?

Catholicism solves them absolutely, dogmatically, and despotically. But her solutions are often frightful blunders, because she builds them wholly on the sand of dogmatic revelation; and her blunders are remediless and eternal, because she can never confess them to be such.

Protestantism only half solves her questions, because she relies half on dogma and half on reason. Hence in morals, as in theology, she is forever the prey of division and contention. Nothing can be permanently settled by the fallible interpretation of an infallible revelation.

Individualism solves vexed moral questions absolutely enough for the individual; but she cannot solve them at all for society, when individuals differ. Individual differences lead to a hopeless social deadlock. By the fundamental theory of Individualism, one man's opinion is just as good as another's; she has no common appeal, no ground of preference, no basis of mutual obligation. Liberalism is to-day in a pitiable condition because it is still so largely in the individualistic stage, and has not yet learned to acknowledge the two principles of universal reason and of private judgment as of equal necessity, validity, and value. It is painfully evident that some better philosophy than that of Individualism must be the groundwork of liberalism, if liberalism is to effect anything towards the true evolution of human society.

Science solves vexed moral questions neither absolutely nor infallibly, but approximately; she decides on the facts so far as known, and always reserves the right to reconsider her decisions in the light of fresh facts or fresh knowledge of old facts; she leaves all individuals at perfect liberty to exercise their private judgment to the full, but compels them to recognize the supreme authority of universal reason, as represented by the Consensus of the Competent. If they rebel, and insanely put forth the pretence of their individual independence of this supreme authority, she subjects them to the Ordeal of Laughter, and silences them by ridicule. The conclusiveness of the verdicts rendered by this supreme tribunal will be disputed only by the densely ignorant or by the sublimely gifted—the former because they do not know enough to understand the authority they despise, and the latter because they know how to instruct and overrule it by the force of superior attainment. But there are few Darwins, strong enough to conquer and reverse the conviction of the scientific world in one brief generation. Genius of the highest order can alone afford to despise the supremacy of universal reason over the private judgment of the individual; but genius of the highest order, instead of despising it, reverences it, and conquers by this reverence in the end.

Such was the substance of our address; and we know of no other subject which just now challenges so irresistibly the thought of all who have learned to think.

FUNERAL CEREMONIES.

The editorial contribution by "J. L. S." in THE INDEX for February 20, on the question, "How shall we be buried?" suggests to me to follow up the subject with some thoughts on burial ceremonies in general. That article treated the question very apologetically and strongly with reference to freethinkers. But from another point of view, and with a wider application, the same question may be asked.

It is, indeed, becoming a practical question of serious importance to many American families, to find some simpler and less expensive method than that now in vogue for rendering those last honors to the dead which are intended in funeral ceremonies. With the general tendencies to luxury and extravagance that have appeared in American society during the last generation, there has grown up a costly funeral custom which has become to many people an onerous burden. Statistics have been published in New York of the cost of funerals in that city, and even in the case of families of moderate means the expenditure is appalling. The extravagant richness of the burial caskets, the luxuriant robes for the dead, the new mourning garments required by fashion for the living, the excessive floral decorations, the long procession of carriages to the grave,—these added to other incidental ways of expense, some of them necessary and some not, bring up the aggregate cost to an amount almost fabulous.

Rich people, of course, set the standard, and, it may be said, that they are able to bear the cost. But people in moderate circumstances, and even the poor, do not wish to seem mean at such a time, and so they follow as closely as they can the standard of the rich. The evil result is that the standard of expense is raised for all classes of society, and it presses most heavily upon those who are least able to bear it. The members of a family among whom death has come shrink from the thought of appearing to be wanting in affection to the one who is lost to them. Their bereaved hearts do not stop to take counsel with prudence. Nothing seems too costly to be lavished, at this last opportunity, upon the departed. And so they are led into expenditures beyond all reason, and for which the living will have to be pinched, perhaps, in the very necessities of life for months to come. It behooves, therefore, the rich to ask themselves, even though they may be abundantly able to bear the cost in their own case, whether in this matter they do not owe it as a duty to society to set the example of greater moderation and simplicity. It was reported a short time ago that a wealthy lady of one of the old families in New York, who recently died, was carried to the grave, by her request, in a plain pine coffin on the shoulders of the bearers, and that all the other appointments of the occasion were in keeping with this simplicity. This was a return to the standard of Puritan days. And it is an example that deserves to be considered, and in its substance followed. The needed reform may not be judiciously pushed to just this extent, which would in many cases, of course, be impracticable. The exact copy of what was simplicity in another age is not necessarily simplicity to-day. What is wanted is the spirit of simplicity and moderation and sobriety, which shall make the fitting standard for our times.

There are, moreover, other considerations more spiritual than those to which I have referred, which urge the adoption of a more simple burial custom. When death enters our homes, the natural impulse of the wounded heart is to privacy and quiet, to self-communion, to silent intercourse with the pure domestic memories that flock to the vacant places. The natural service and ceremony would be something as nearly as possible harmonious with this mood of mind, something that is the farthest possible remove from the ostentatious display which invites the public eye and is eager for a newspaper paragraph. Sincerity, not conventional fashion, should rule the occasion. The precious hours when memory and hope are striving together to uplift the sorrowful heart into the unseen realms of a life which is more than any forms of matter, should not be disturbed by questions of decoration and millinery and precedence. The natural feeling of the heart, not warped by conventional demands, would be for some ceremony in which there should be nothing for ceremony's sake, but which should in the simplest way express the best aspirations and impulses of the hour: the coming together of the nearest friends and kindred, the quiet interchange of sympathy, a few flowers brought and arranged by loving hands, a few moments spent in garnering into a sheaf some of the life-lessons left by the dead to be kept as fruitful seed in the memory of the living, and then a few of the nearest and dearest going together to the last resting-place of the body, and there, with joining of hands and communion of hearts, closing up their thinned ranks in renewed consecration to life's duties, and the better to bear its burdens.

And by and by perhaps even those who are not "freethinkers" will learn that the professional service of a clergyman is not so essential to the occasion as is now generally supposed, especially if he be a stranger and hence not able to join the circle as a sympathizing friend; that even, if need be, without any one to speak for them, friends can come together to take leave of their common friend, and to take each other by the hand, and look into each others' eyes, and speak to each other in whispered tones, or by a silence often more expressive than words, of their common loss and their common sorrow, and thus help each other to meet it more bravely and calmly, as well as to await more courageously the inevitable hour of bereavement which sooner or later must come to every home.

W. J. P.

Communications.

LIBERALISM THAT IS NOT LIBERALISM.

What is the good of a liberalism that is as bigoted as Christianity itself? I have often asked myself such a question in the light of the performances of some of our radical friends; and while, of course, my inclinations would lead me clear over to the field of materialism, my heart has often warmed against those in our cause who so readily lose sight of their principle in the mean and unfair pushing of an opponent. I have been forced to this feeling reluctantly, as one is frequently pushed to an unpleasant truth, and I have regretted it the more because of the hearty affection I hold for radicalism, and the warm regard that I cherish for its friends. I act as no "guide" or "philosopher" in this matter,—I am only plain "friend," and what I write is in no sense meant in other than a friendly spirit.

I argue that it reflects no credit upon a liberal that he should too harshly or narrowly criticize the religion from which he has broken loose. The "philosophy of extremes" may to a degree palliate it, but has it really an excuse? a reason that will free it from tarlish? To me the question answers itself, for as surely as he can afford an investment that yields him a handsome profit, can a radical stand above defects of that kind. It is a great mistake to imagine that real liberalism and narrowness can become partners; between two qualities so unlike there is in the nature of things an incessant repulsion. Narrowness may attract its like, but can never marry itself to breadth. Many of our friends, in their hopes for the future, forget that there is something due the past for what it has brought us. The mission of liberalism must be twofold or nothing,—must glean the good from the past and blend it with the history it is founding for the future, or must drift about as of no more worth than the simple conservatism of our day. I see no way by which the ages can be divorced. We might with as good judgment talk of going back to barbarism and starting on the path to civilization over again, as of wishing to cast aside all that the past has written for our edification. To argue in that manner is to place upon the experience of the ages the charge of worthlessness; and a greater error than this could not be made. It is a piece of logic that inevitably reacts upon its maker, inasmuch as it plays directly into the hands of the power against which it is pleading.

In the case of the Bible I hope there are but few of our friends but have the right idea; but there are some who have gone grossly wrong, and are in continual hot water because of their intemperate zeal. They reply to the Christians' worship of the book with their hate, and are thus always acting the antipodes. One's presumption leads to the other's contempt. The fulsome reverence of Christians for the volume, and the monstrous assumptions for which they make it responsible, drive many radicals to a short-sighted denunciation of it. I grant the fallacy of these positions, but that they are held as I have indicated needs no proof from me. Frequently in Biblical discussions the assumptions are mistaken for the book, which as tacit matter is fearfully tortured from its plain meaning by those who revere it. "The Book," says the Christian. "No, a worthless book," replies the radical. "Mine is the grandest house in the world," says one. "No," says his friend who is angry at the conceit; "no, 'tis a mere nothing,—a worthless pile of brick." There is a narrowness in such argument that is hurtful in two very important respects: 1st, to such as hold it; and 2d, to the cause to which the holders are attached. It is a disease in the person holding it to the extent that bigotry is always injurious; and it is detrimental to the principle in whose behalf it is used in that proportion in which wholesale denunciation is always repellent to those of unlike opinions. To call a man a fool and then argue with him, is equally an insult to the man's intelligence and a sarcasm upon your own action.

Unfortunately, a great many liberals, in ostensibly judging the Bible, are in reality judging others' constructions of part of that work. The error here takes an unfortunate color. I have thought that the best tendency of the growth of knowledge in ages, as well as in men, is that it broadens the sweep of the intellect. From this point of view, the practices of some of our friends are disappointing. Judging the Bible by the assumptions the usual Christian credits to it, they still fight the volume instead of the mere theological theories upon it. The minister says the Bible is holy, and they say it is devilish. And this is of no avail. When a radical reads the tales of military massacre in the book, his heart revolts at the cruelty, and he stamps the history as an evil one, as the source of much spiritual and bodily tyranny, imagining within himself that it would have been better had the book never been written. To a degree this is not false, and yet it is only absolute blindness that would separate the book from the subject and condemn the treatise and not that which is treated; for I conceive it can at least be allowed to the Bible that it tells a certain part of the trials and deeds, and customs and methods of thought of ages gone,—this, even granting that there is much in it utterly worthless as history. And instantly the objectors I allude to think thus, they must as quickly concede that it is no worse (but better) that the book should have existed than that man should have given by his sad experience the materials for its writing, since, if the volume is ill, the described is ill; and as men were made to travel a weary road, to object to a chart—even if a doubtful one—of the turns of that pathway is nothing if not captious and unwise. It is not wise for men who so heartily talk about progress to urge that we could have commenced as we are to-day. There is no historical evidence to warrant such a presumption. The knowledge we have is of one long march upward, step by step, and the heart-burnings as well as the joys were a matter of seemingly necessary experience. If radicals sincerely believe that religions are all man-made, they should not so despise the efforts of the past to grasp religious truth. Their very wish for the future to look well upon their attempts in that direction contradicts their position in regard to past generations. The one age offers the other its grain of truth, and unfortunate indeed are such as refuse the generous gift and sustenance. So, also, when Homer describes the cruel customs of ancient war, we never hesitate in expressing our abhorrence of them. Our modern education makes the repugnance rise by a sort of instinct. But because the Homeric age practiced war in a way brutal to our perceptions, is there any reason that we should throw aside entirely the chronicles of that age? If in those days people had their vices, we must remember that in this day vice is still a power in human affairs; and if they had their virtues,—as what people have not?—we ought to study them and make acknowledgment for what they have taught us, and not grant merely sneers to their offering. We may in one view regret the past, but future thought may equally regret our age; for we, also, are but a step forward to an end we cannot know. This alone should teach us modesty. We are forging a link now, and the future can no more afford to absolutely cast us adrift than we can to entirely ignore our parent ages.

The belief of some radicals is so much a matter of mere passion that the very name of Christian is gall to them. If we tell them the Christian believes so-and-so, they take it as a matter of course that their rejection of this so-and-so is demanded. The merit of the case is not weighed; being Christian, it is necessarily iniquitous, for, "Really, my friend, the Christian scheme being reasonless, it must be true that all that is part of it is foolish." Occasionally, one of them will blubber out some such superficiality as that "the Bible is a ridiculous and obscene book," in total blindness to the fact that a volume aged by such a career as that of the Bible must, by very reason of that career, have some not entirely valuable quality. Christendom is not precisely imbecile, if it is weak in certain prime respects. A kindred error to this is the readiness with which some fling the charge of hypocrisy or insanity in the face of the believer. To estimate the astounding arrogance of the last claim, it is only necessary to measure it in its proper proportions. "You believe this and I don't,—wherefore you are either a fool or a knave. Your alternatives are pitiful." Where such argument is stated directly, there is excessive dullness in it. Yet it is legitimate, and many radicals stoop to its use.

To our minds the Christian scheme skillfully argues against itself, but there are minds constituted differently from our own that honestly see nothing but reason in that mechanism. Why not acknowledge so much, and be done with that part of the great issue? It is an unhappy weapon that is continually pointing to the attention of Christians the frequent hypocrisy of their fellow-believers; it is even as unclean a thing as it is for the Christian to be everlastingly directing the atheist's gaze to the quotation concerning what the "fool" hath said in his heart. Our friends, to show that they are liberal by virtue of something more than mere name, should never stoop to such meannesses. Those are the weapons of the sophist. Liberalism has a superb ease without them. Weak causes may choose doubtful instruments of the kind, but for strong ones to do so is to knowingly select that which is suicidal. Jesus cannot be proved to be a man by a recitation of the crimes of Christians, nor can the human origin of Christianity be proved by a sneer at the wrong-doings of some who profess to teach that religion. Argument of that sort is but allowable on protest. If it were wholly a fair one, the anti-slavery cause, for instance, could be disproved by some one's merely pointing to an adherent who practiced injustice to his working-men. Liberals complain much because their antagonists have made synonyms of freethought and immorality; and yet these same radicals in many cases attempt to make a similar partnership of reverence and hypocrisy, or Orthodoxy and insanity. These are mistakes of the same kind, and the radical at least can afford to drop them.

I can sympathize with the liberal who falls into errors of the kind I have pointed out. If one is hated, he is apt to be merciless in his own hour. The flesh is weak. Thought becomes less fierce as it is less tyrannized. The reformer himself speaks less bitterly as he is less harshly treated by the conservative world. It is anathema that angers the man who knows he searches for truth as honestly and nobly as he can, and finds himself for this very act scorned and cursed. The fault lies in greater part with those who taunt, and not with the retorters; but the taunted were wiser, did they go no further than to regret the unworthy spirit of their antagonists. I grant all this and much more. I grant that when an independent mind starts out to express its beliefs, and its negations, in its way, there arises a chorus of Orthodox voices that would have it express their beliefs, and their negations, in their way, or not to express any belief at all; I grant that the Church is arrogant as it has ever been; I grant that the Church does not like to tolerate other loves than its own; I grant that the clergy slander freethought, and mistakenly hold that all truth is today in their possession; I grant that movement and progress rarely if ever find an aid in theologians,—and simply because I grant so much, and even that all this may be the honest endeavor of a pure mind to suppress what it regards as immorality, I would have radical present their case unspotted by the means familiar to the cause from which they revolt. It is false to argue that we have as much right to use such weapons as the Christian. An error is an error, though the whole world act up to it. Our radicalism can only appear to a just advantage by evidencing itself as better and broader visioned than Christianity. If it falls in this duty, it falls short of possessing the real heart of progress. In outer guise merely would it, in such event, differ from the current Orthodoxy.

Some liberals, in their sneers at the unfairness of their opponents, seem like a man on a river's bank who is so intent on warning his neighbor of the danger that he does not see that he is himself walking into the water. Unselfish this, certainly! but withal how wise? It is proper that at least one of the fruits of the radical belief should be a wider view of the intellectual cravings of men. This age ought to accept nothing less. "The dream is dead! long live the dream!" we may well cry; but to what good, if the words are the all-in-all of the matter? The vain dogmatism of our time should die, but only as the make-way for something better than itself. Bigoted liberalism is an incongruity that would be amusing, were it not of serious effect. On the whole I say, Let me have none of it. HORACE L. TRAUBEL.

THE SUBJECTIVE IN ETHICS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—When, a few weeks ago, a happy chance threw in my way your exhaustive and symmetrical essay on "Scientific Ethics," published in THE INDEX for March 12, 1874, I was compelled to admit that there was but a single part of the whole fabric of your system to which I could take objection; it seemed to me that the line between the subjective and the objective in ethics should be a little differently drawn. In showing the objectivity of moral obligation, you stated that science had to do only with the objective and universal, and that the moral intuition, being subjective and individual in its nature, could not properly become an object of scientific study.

Now if we keep out of metaphysics, i.e., if we do not speak of the infinite, of a cosmic mind (and it would be irrelevant to do so), then we should probably agree that the objective is whatever is external to an individual thinking Ego. Now the moral intuitions of others, i.e., their power of perceiving objective moral obligation, are certainly external to each individual thinking Ego, and in this sense objective. But as to these intuitions not being universal, it is evident that, when it was stated that science has only to do with the universal, it was meant that the phenomena with which science deals need not be absolutely unlimited in number, need not even occur in vast numbers, but must only be capable of some sort of connection with the universal. The sun spots are unique as far as our knowledge goes; but then the spectroscopic has given us such information of the gaseous condition of the sun that we are certain that these spots can in time be brought within known and universal laws. Now why are not the moral intuitions of such men as Jesus, Buddha, Confucius, and Zoroaster, for example, like these sun-spots, unique, and yet at the same time universal, in that the moral progress of the race reveals that many of their intuitions are actually, even if slowly, becoming intelligible and universal; e.g., their doctrine that men should do unto others as they would wish to be done by? In other words, admitting, as we must, that moral intuition is as much based on the nature of things as external moral obligation, dare we say that the moral intuitions (or observing and deciding faculties) of a number of the best and most delicately-balanced organizations that grow up out of the nature of things are not universal in the sense that they are intimately connected with other men's intuitions, and are, as it were, the prophecy and foreshadowing of the after-intuitions of the race? And if we find that a large number of these delicate and perfect organizations of Nature, although living separated by ages of time and by great differences of environment, are found to agree upon any number of moral principles, can we say that those principles are not accurately correlated and coordinate with the external moral obligation? Is there not good-faith in Nature? Is there not some parallelism and sympathy between the highest ideas and material objects? If, then, the moral intuitions of these rare and delicate minds are objective, universal, and correspondent to the objective moral obligation, I do not see why they are not both proper objects of scientific classification and generalization, and as worthy of our respect as the objective moral obligation. Indeed, they are objective themselves, from the point of view of the individual, which is all that we are concerned with in such a question. Why should we not let these classified intuitions of the few highest and purest minds of Nature form a wing at least of the fabric of scientific ethics? Or rather, why may not these ideas (or Platonic types) be admitted as fragmentary sketches of the very architect's plan, to be constantly referred to as helps in discovering the proportions of the building itself?

In looking over Körner's Natur Ethik, to which reference is made in the lecture on "Scientific Ethics," I find that he gives great credit to the highly enlightened individual conscience. After defining conscience as "the I [das Ich] which, as a perceiving or feeling agent, in its decisions as to the justness of an action looks to its own feeling, willing, and acting," and remarking that "the sound and normal man is himself a coworker and at the same time a living result of the commanding natural laws which arise out of the All of Nature, and has therefore in himself a native perception [Natur-Gefühl] of these laws," only they must be cultivated and made clear cut and decisive by knowledge," he then goes on to say, "The moral conscience in the form of virtue is duty becoming living or active by facility and habit; and in this duty inclination and custom appear as the satisfaction of a life-instinct. Here the conscience can immediately declare what is to be sanctioned and striven for, and what is to be opposed and rejected; and just as the cultivated taste immediately determines the shapely and the misshapen, the beautiful and the ugly in objects of a similar kind, so the moral conscience immediately determines that which man by the method of reflection would mediate deduce from his own knowledge." [Vol. I., p. 249.] Körner thus gives high honor to the moral decisions of a single rare and delicate mind. My position is different from his, in that I would in every case compare and classify the moral decisions of a number of the rarest and purest minds. W. S. K.

DIVINITY SCHOOL, H. U.

[The moral intuitions of highly gifted individuals may very properly, as the writer of the above thoughtful letter suggests, be included among the objective data which science investigates; but they must be in some way objectively expressed, either by speech or literature, before other individuals can in any way take cognizance of them. We never intended to exclude such objectively expressed intuitions from scientific consideration; on the contrary, all the thoughts of individuals which take the permanent and objective form of literature at once cease to be merely subjective in the objectionable sense. In studying the moral nature of man (an essential part of the higher psychology), literature, art, religious institutions and customs, etc., etc., are the chief facts to be studied; and all that we intended to avoid was the a priori decision of moral questions by mere incursions into the individual consciousness. That great respect is due to the moral decisions arrived at by the most highly gifted natures, and in proportion to the degree of their unanimity, is unquestionable; their unanimity gives to such decisions that kind of authority which science substitutes for the authority of dogma.—ED.]

"A STITCH IN TIME."

The older individuals among those who now hold and value a rational faith remember the Sunday-schools of their childhood as very stupid affairs, and sometimes think that their own children can be indulged, without harm, in the natural wish to go with their school-mates and playmates to the Sunday-schools of the Orthodox type to which they resort, and from which they bring home such pretty illuminated cards and such handsomely illustrated books. There are also other ways of making these schools attractive, and many children really enjoy going to them. Some parents give their boys and girls this indulgence from mere thoughtlessness, as they occasionally wink at injurious gratifications of other sorts. Some also assume that the absurdities of creed and catechism, and other Orthodox formulas, will pass in (as we say) at one ear and out at the other, with no particular effect. But this is a mistaken idea. As constant dropping wears a stone, so the frequent repetition of the stock phrases of Orthodoxy, from sticking in the memory, get rooted in the mind, and are played upon successfully by the revivalist in after life. Where this liability exists (and hardly any part of our country is free from it), parents and guardians who themselves hold and prize a rational faith should begin early to counteract this miseducation of their children, and use the opportunities which naturally arise to turn the course of juvenile thought in a right direction.

These reflections were brought to my mind by the following incident, which lately occurred. A boy of ten years old, fond of athletic sports, but fond also of reading, applies himself eagerly to Sunday-school books and hymns, and also to various other kinds of books to which he has access. Meeting lately, for the first time, with the story of Little Red Riding-Hood, he volunteered the remark that he did not believe a wolf could speak. Reading, soon after, a life of George Washington, the boy was much impressed with the fact that George, when a young man, could throw a stone across the Potomac River. He wanted to know how wide the river was at that place, and, awhile after, inquired whether Washington was as strong as Samson, of whom his Sunday-school books had spoken.

I thought this a good opportunity to begin to lead his mind to a perception of the difference between legend and history. I asked him if he could lift the gate from the fence in our own back-yard. He thought he could not. I then recalled to his mind the great double gate he had been accustomed to see at the rear entrance of a great railroad station, and asked whether he thought any man was strong enough to lift one leaf of that. He admitted that it would take a good many men to lift it. I then told him that one of the stories related of Samson was, that he took both doors of the gate of a fortified city, and the two posts which held them, and the top bar across the two posts, and put them all upon his shoulders, and carried them up to the top of a hill five or six miles distant. Did he think that a likely story? No; it didn't seem likely. Then I told him that that story, and also the story of Little Red Riding-Hood, were written so long ago that nobody knew either when they were written or who wrote either of them; and that when stories of such great age and such uncertain origin were also so very improbable, we had better apply our reason to them than take for granted they were true. C. K. W.

THE MORAL RESPONSIBILITY OF LIBERALISM.

Some liberals object to the discussion of the moral aspects of certain questions now interesting the public, as though morality were something foreign to the objects of liberalism. There is a latent sentiment far too prevalent among liberals, that ideas of morality, like those of religion, are soon to become private questions, and that we are about entering a reign of individual sovereignty when every one will be "a law unto himself." It is not surprising that in the present disintegration of religious authority, when the sentiment of the age is rebelling against the most venerable power of the past, that the standards of morality, which heretofore have been associated with the doctrines of the Church, should be called in question, and the vicious theory of lawless individualism advocated in the name of liberty.

But there is no escaping the authority of public standards of morality while society exists. The Utopia of individual sovereignty in ethics, which some reformers dream of, will never be realized while a vestige of present civilization remains. Society is bound together by a common conscience, and "private standards" of right will always be rigidly judged by this integral sense of justice. The universal experience and wisdom of mankind, as far as these can be collected from their innumerable sources, are centered in this common conscience; and before this august judge of human actions each individual must give an account of his life. This public conscience is, and always will be, defective and fallible; but, imperfect as it must of necessity be, it is still the world's safest guide and ruler. We cannot get beyond the jurisdiction of this common judge of right, unless we get entirely outside of all social relations; and the more we comprehend the nature and tendency of civilization, the more will we be inclined to respect this great arbiter of conduct. Society can no more exist without this public standard of morality than a government can exist without an executive power. The theory of "private standards" is the road to social disintegration. If the future has any higher civilization for the world than the present, the advancement that awaits the human race will demonstrate the necessity of a moral standard by which the most private life of the individual shall be judged. It will then be found that nothing of any interest to mankind is foreign to morality. Every act of life is either moral or immoral, if it have any bearing on the lives of others; and to talk of divorcing morality from liberalism, politics, or any other subject of public interest, is to talk like one who is ignorant of every principle of social science.

Liberalism, like every other system of ideas, must be judged by its relation to public morality, and those of its advocates who think that they can ignore the world's demand to know what the standard of conduct is to be when freethought prevails are the most deluded class of persons that ever donned the garb of reform. H. CLAY NEVILLE.

MRS. LYON HUNTER: "How do you do, Mr. Brown? Let me present you to the Duchess of Stilton. Your Grace, permit me to present to you Mr. Brown, the distinguished scholar." Her Grace (affably): "Charmed to make your acquaintance—er—Mr. Brown." Mr. Brown (with effusion): "Your Grace is really too kind. This is the ninth time I've enjoyed the distinction of being presented to your Grace within the last twelve months; but it's a distinction I value so highly that, without trespassing too much on your Grace's indulgence, I hope I may be occasionally permitted to enjoy it again." (Bows and absquatulates.)—Punch.

A MICHIGAN tramp called at a house and asked for dinner. "No food to spare," was the reply. "Can't you give me an old coat?" "No." "Or a pair of old boots?" "No." "Can't you spare me even a pair of old socks?" "No." "Nor a piece of bread?" "No." The fellow's chin fell as he fumbled in his pocket, and his voice had a lonesome sound as he pulled out a small autograph album and said, "Well, if you can't do any better, I'll have to be satisfied with your ottergrass. Please use blue ink."

AN OLD HAT that once belonged to Napoleon I. was recently sold for $35, which is a good price when we consider that both the Nap and crown are gone.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 15 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 16 " 25 " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEARNS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $4.50 for one year, including postage, or $6 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thompson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains various reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Chadwick, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laeker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Humanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AURIBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.50
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 12 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Maasson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols. Illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUARTES (HENRI). Discourse on the Method of rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Miss Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Name. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (H. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FRUENBAUH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.50
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.50
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
GRIG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	1.00
creed of Christendom.....	7.50
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMESTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Feters.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	15.00
HUMES (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Agassiz.....	1.00
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses from a Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (MOBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, &c.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, M.A.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.00
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Glanville's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analytical Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annals Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volumes. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Omne from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kisses from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Economy, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	1.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
ROHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 28 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Broom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Pate.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Memoranda, and Love's Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Walden.....	1.50
Open God.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SAMUEL) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religions.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	1.50
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS!

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished on order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 8,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $2.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL,

Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker. —London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marple. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Secularism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 60 cents.

II. Burgess-Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 60 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE Popular Science Monthly.

CONDUCTED BY

E. L. and W. J. YOUNG.

Containing instructive and interesting articles and abstracts of articles, original, selected, and illustrated, from the pens of the leading scientific men of different countries; accounts of important scientific discoveries; the application of science to the practical arts; the latest views put forth concerning natural phenomena, by experts of the highest authority.

It is an instructive and valuable monthly, and, as a consequence, is continually increasing in circulation and influence.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY is now a large octavo of 128 pages, and will be considerably enlarged, beginning with the issue for January, 1879. It is handsomely printed on clear type, and, when necessary to further convey the ideas of the writer, fully illustrated.

TERMS: Five dollars per annum; or, fifty cents per number.
A Club of five will be sent to any address for $20.00 per annum.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY and APPLETON'S JOURNAL, together, $7.00 per annum (full price, $8.00).

The volumes begin May and November of each year.

Subscriptions may begin at any time. We will be glad to send our Periodical Catalogue, free, upon application.

D. APPLETON & CO., PUBLISHERS,
549 & 551 Broadway, New York.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues of the day, with a promptitude unequalled. The contents of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair,	Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone,	Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. T. Tallemache,	Prof. Clifford,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Author of Supernatural Religion ,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Sir John Lubbock,
Leslie Stephen,	Anthony Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor),	T. Adolphus Trollope,
G. H. Lewes,	Sir H. S. Maine,
	Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the BOSTON BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-Existing Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $1.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77. Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykass, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $1.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 233 pages. Price $1.50.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 255 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 351 pages. Price $1.35.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 232 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 233 pages. Price $1.35.

THE ORBED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. Rathbone Greg, author of the Enigmas of Life, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unabridged, with Index not in other editions. $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of inestimable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.50. Half calf, $6.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It is no doubt the strongest rival in Mr. Greg's Orbed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. Both are far ahead of anything else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is manly and respectably argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature." —London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Malden Lane, New York.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONS—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.B. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit." —Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. ... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style." —Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST ORBED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.50.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old." —Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child." —Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1879.

WHOLE No. 481.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

HERE is a wall of woe which will find an echo in the souls of many a disconsolate theorist:—

"Now the world is a dreffle mean place, for our sins, Where ther' ollus is critters about with long pins A-prickin' the globes we've blowed up with sech care, An' provin' ther' 's nothin' inside but bad air."

THE FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE of Boston will meet next Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, in the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street. F. E. Abbot will read a paper on the question, "What is Truth?" and Miss J. P. Titcomb kindly promises to furnish music for the occasion. All friends of this League are invited to attend.

REV. JOHN WEISS died in this city last Sunday noon, and was to be buried on Wednesday at eleven o'clock. One of the pioneers of the Free Religious movement, remarkable for his literary genius and attainments, has gone to his rest. On the eve of going to press, we can barely mention the sad event this week, and must postpone to our next issue a fuller notice of it.

THE NEW YORK Tribune publishes this as "an odd clause in a will," but we should like to see such "oddity" cease to be such by becoming fashionable: "A man died near Baltimore recently, who wished no funeral honors should be paid him, and in his will made a special request of that nature. He wished a plain shroud; no flowers; 'no mock display'; no services in a church; no mark where he was buried unless some child or children should be moved to place one there; no mourning garments for his family, as he was 'persuaded this has become a solemn mockery'; and no eulogies over his remains. 'If there was one trait of my character,' he said, 'worthy of imitation, then imitate it, and with the last look bury all my imperfections and infirmities with my remains.' These requests he directed to have read at his funeral. It is said that the leading traits of the man's character were honesty and truthfulness."

THE PRINCIPLE of the second plank of the Rochester platform is steadily, even if slowly, forcing its way into the public mind. The Penn Monthly sees in the resolutions of the Virginia Legislature and those of the Democratic minority in the United States Senate this meaning: that "no restraints are to be put upon the ex-slaveholders when they see fit to stop their former chattels from fooling with politics"; and it sees no possible protection for the political rights guaranteed to the freedmen by the Constitution, unless the North shall "consolidate this time to some purpose, and give the national courts the right of appellate jurisdiction in every case where the court is satisfied that the courts of the States will not give speedy and just judgment." As things now stand "the rights of an American citizen can only be protected against foreign invasion or outrage. The worst extremities may be inflicted on him at home, in retaliation for the conscientious discharge of his duties as a citizen, and it seems without redress."

THE Scientific American quotes this "Original Advice for Drinkers" from a lecture by C. T. Campbell, at Mayville, Kentucky: "Bar-keepers in this city pay on an average $2 per gallon for whiskey. One gallon contains an average of sixty-five drinks, and at ten cents a drink the poor man pays $6.50 per gallon for his whiskey. In other words, he pays $2 for the whiskey and $4.50 to a man for handing it over the bar. Make your wife your bar-keeper. Lend her two dollars to buy a gallon of whiskey for a beginning, and every time you want a drink go to her and pay ten cents for it. By the time you have drunk a gallon she will have $6.50, or enough money to refund the $2 borrowed of you, to pay for another gallon of liquor, and have a balance of $2.50. She will be able to conduct future operations on her own capital, and when you become an inebriate, unable to support yourself, shunned and despised by all respectable persons, your wife will have enough money to keep you until you get ready to fill a drunkard's grave."

THE VINELAND Independent is on the side of true liberalism: "The Free Religious Association of the United States lately held a special convention at Providence, R. I., at which the President, Prof. Felix Adler, the celebrated liberal Jew, sounded the following moral watchword: 'But there is a religion which admits of no choice, where we will be as dogmatic as you will, severe as you will, yea, intolerant as you will: it is the religion of morality. Liberalism must stand on virtue. Radicalism has one plank where it tolerates no difference of belief: that plank is purity.' This declaration has raised a howl most unearthly from the ranks of the irresponsibles, who believe that free is a word which signifies a sort of chaotic devilishness, an utter disregard and disbelief in obligations, an allegiance to nothing, a belief in nobody, a performance of nothing except what is determined by the loose law of attraction and repulsion, which operates in their sentimental constitutions. They consider that the freedom more divine than any other, the right more individual and precious, is that freedom and that right which allows them the privilege to 'slop over' in a moral sense whenever they please. Mr. Adler's declaration puts him uncompromisingly on the right side. Creeds may rise or creeds may fall, sects may multiply or diminish, yet while there is a common reverence and respect for the proved and established moral laws of the world, public virtue will thrive and wax strong. There is a tendency to bridge over the speculative chasms which have divided the moral workers in the world so long, to cease to quarrel over the non-essentials of creed and dogma, and to come up on the common level of a common endeavor in behalf of that truth, the embodiment of a practical virtue which alone makes free."

THIS ASTONISHING paragraph is from the Boston Herald of March 7: "An old man died in this city a few months ago, a man loved and respected. THE INDEX, which can't bear to hear about 'Bob' Ingersoll, and even takes talk about 'Ben' Franklin as an affront to its higher culture, tells a story about 'old R—,' as it calls him, and hints that the man disgraced himself on a public occasion. Everybody knows to whom THE INDEX refers, and everybody sees how much honesty there is in its complaints when a paper happens to speak of 'Tom' Paine, and they are complaints loud and prolonged." The anecdote which we found floating in the Boston papers about "old R—" was quoted in our last issue, with the proper quotation marks; and the Herald knows well we did not father that story, as it more than suggests that we did. We had not then, and have not now, the slightest guess as to "old R—"s identity, and supposed him to be probably a mythical personage, invented for the purpose of telling a good joke with a delusive flavor of history. The story itself does not at all, in our judgment, "hint that the man disgraced himself on a public occasion," but only shows the wit with which he parried a merely jocose accusation of drunkenness. If there was really any such person as "old R—," and if anybody took the anecdote (quoted by us as a mere illustration) to be a reflection on his character, we disclaim all knowledge of the facts and all intention to make the reflection. But "everybody sees how much honesty there is" in the Herald's catching at a current anecdote, going the rounds of the press and merely quoted as such here, as the foundation for a frivolous charge of inconsistency against THE INDEX. The Herald's bark, however, is worse than its bite; there is no other daily in Boston which is usually so fair to heretics and free thinkers.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. ROSENEMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
MR. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSANTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
MR. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT C. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
DR. R. B. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. MALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Pa.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.	O. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California.	L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.	J. O. MICHELS, Adair.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. OLARK, Wilkesville.
Louisiana.	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	E. A. SAWYER, Boston.
Michigan.	KARL SCHENKMAN, Detroit.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.	W. E. COVELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.	O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. E. PRIGG, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	DR. A. M. DEET, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. F. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.	W. FARRISON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	187 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, FLA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Alson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Gale. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHELSEA, MASS.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Mission of Free Religion in the Realm of Morals.

BY CHARLES E. PERKINS.

Eight centuries ago a Persian poet, whose insight into the mysterious philosophy of the mind was both deep and rare, wrote these lines:—

"I sent my Soul through the invisible,
Some letter of that After-life to spell;
And by and by my Soul returned to me
And answered: 'I Myself am Heaven and Hell.'"

What transpires after we put off this garb of mortality is as much a mystery now as it was in that dim age when Omar Khayyám lived and sung. Man has filled the world with material inventions, has annihilated distances, made captive the lightning, forced all elements into his service. He has descended into the bowels of the earth and compelled from Nature a rendition of her most precious secrets. The history of creation, so long enshrouded in myth, is in a fair way of being clearly demonstrated, and it would seem at first glance as though naught could withstand the scrutiny of this prying biped. But death comes, the tireless brain ceases, the busy hands are stilled, the eloquent lips are dumb, and the life within, the divine essence, the soul which but lately animated all—who can trace its flight? Who can say whether it be dead or liveth?

The vast and indeed overwhelming weight of opinion is now and has ever been upon the side of immortality.

Few of us ever attain in full the objects of our desires; few of us, no matter to what length of days we may survive, are without some plan of future work which death is sure to interrupt. It is this fact, the knowledge that a limited existence can never satisfy, that has made mankind in every age and clime reach out appealingly after something more of life. The yearning of the heart will not be stilled by anything less than the promise of a future, and that future eternal. When theology came, and with a voice of authority gave utterance to the predominant thought of humanity, it made futurity certain. So long as faith in it remained, no doubt of immortality troubled mankind. But theology was not a science, it was not progressive; very foolishly it attempted to stay the onward march of intellect, and in the conflict that ensued found its power materially lessened. It had asserted many things and claimed unquestioned reliance upon many doctrines which were capable of being entirely undermined by argument, nay, whose falsity was clearly proven. Still it retained its hold upon great numbers of people because of its promise of immortality. Others, however, seeing in how many instances error had formed part of its teachings, began to question its proof of an after-life,—when lo! there was no proof. It was taught in a sacred book esteemed by theologians the Word of God, but of the authenticity of this claim proof was also utterly lacking. So, after many centuries of calm and untroubled faith in a hereafter, based upon the assurances of theology, mankind have in this later age found themselves occupying the same ground, and vexed with the same great questions that have ever agitated the race, and, despite their material advancement, no nearer a solution of the problem than their primitive progenitors. Nor is there any reason for supposing that more light will ever be shed upon the question. The most that can be done is to rely upon the inner consciousness which flutters with a hope of eternity. The evidence of design in all things in Nature is so overwhelming that we find it easy to say, "Our great Mother could never be satisfied that a culmination should be reached in the brief space of earthly life; and, as her capabilities are unlimited, we refuse to believe that death is more than the initial step in life. We will trust her for time and eternity."

Even so trust her for the future. It is the part of wisdom, and one of those rare instances in which faith, pure and unflinching, is altogether profitable. But let us not be unmindful that, while faith alone sees through the obscurity which enshrouds the hereafter, the great fact of present existence is unquestionable. It is with the life of the nineteenth century that our lot is cast, and in it our duties are found. It is unwise to dwell upon the great problem to an extent which interferes with the practical affairs of to day, for there is enough of interest in this world to furnish food for reflection, as well as work, for each of its inhabitants during his entire lifetime.

It is far more essential that man's daily walk should be guided by virtue and probity than that his thoughts should be trained in any special school of belief.

"Judgment should stand the monitor of faith;
So faith shall not prove recreant to her trust,
And teach her devotees to persecute
For conscience' sake. 'Tis of small moment
Whether God be God or Allah, so the heart
Be right. And though man's love of Nature for herself
Convey to him no hint of higher power,
Nor any ruler save eternal law,
'Tis unimportant. Life it is,
Not death, that most concerns us.
For if the leading thought of all the race,
Born of its woes and wrongs, its hopes and fears,
Its shattered love and tasks all incomplete,
Be true, then must it be that he
Whose path is marked by kindly deeds,
Whose record shows no blot, or stain of crime,
Nor aught that can his honesty impeach,
Is fitted best to make the journey thence."

Whether there be a continuation of existence or not, the words of the poet are of equal significance. "I myself am Heaven and Hell." Life is to a great extent what we make it. There may be instances, no doubt there are, in which a life may seem to be the sport of fate, adverse circumstances presiding at its birth and remaining with it until the grave is reached; but such cases are exceptional. Generally speaking, man is the architect of his own destiny; he may sow seeds the fruits of which shall turn to gall upon the tongue, and whose final harvest shall be death, or he may so order his conduct as to secure the greatest possible amount of earthly happiness. The reproving conscience, the ceaseless unrest, the craving for the unattainable of the one, shall make hell a sad reality to him, while the peace of mind attendant upon honor and integrity shall fill the upright man with a heavenly radiance. It is for this heaven that we would have all mankind strive. Strictly within the reach of all, it is surprising that any will rest content with less than its full fruition. But the gilded ways of vice have a strange fascination for poor mortality. Often a mere taste of vicious pleasure seems to destroy completely the moral barriers of life, and a flood of evil sweeps the wreck away upon its eddying bosom, to be stranded at last upon the gloomy confines of despair.

Until the laws can be invoked with far greater effect than is now possible in the work of suppressing the fountains of crime, the number of those who annually go down the road to ruin cannot be measurably decreased, and no better enforcement of law can be expected until public sentiment is educated to a higher moral standpoint.

Every board of excise in the land knows that, in licensing rum-shops, it is establishing schools of crime. Wherever intoxicating liquors are sold, misery, destitution, and pauperism follow as surely as the night the day. Earnest men have devoted their lives to the work of suppressing this wicked traffic, with what success we know too well. Within its bosom the Christian Church nourishes rum-drinkers, rum-sellers, and another class of persons who may fitly be termed rum-landlords. While there are many notable instances among clergymen and laymen of those who speak out fearlessly for right, and attack the monster with all the weapons at their command, the moral sentiment of the Church at large is dead to all the sin and horror of it. It is not too much to say that, if the whole power of Christianity were exerted in this direction, the most prolific source of evil would be abolished; but from a system which places its supreme reliance upon doctrine, leaving the question of morals in the category of side issues, it is idle to expect whole-souled work for the real regeneration of mankind. We are too much accustomed to looking upon past ages as the only heroic ones; too prone to settle back in comfortable indifference, as though the only battles worth fighting had been won. True, men are no longer called upon to seal their faith with blood; the stake no longer holds its writhing victim; the dungeon no more echoes the weary footfalls or listens to the groans of the prisoner for conscience' sake. But while civil and religious liberty has made such grand progress, have we nothing more to combat? Alas, all history proves that no sooner is one great obstacle to the happiness of humanity removed than another usurps its place. Every four years all patriotic Americans are called upon in the most appealing accents to save their country,—never before was it in such a strait, never before did shoals and quicksands so threaten the passage of the ship of State. Unless Brown is elected to the chief magistracy the Republic will be at an end. If haply, however, all good men and true respond to this appeal, and rally around him in sufficient numbers, the dread calamity will be averted, affairs will assume their wonted aspect, and peace and prosperity be assured.

The sovereigns rally, Brown is elected; but the millennium is as far in the distance as ever. Unforeseen difficulties confront the new officer at the beginning of his official career, and are conquered, if at all, only to expose others to view.

If there be any real force in religion, it must manifest itself by dealing with the great obstacles to morality. Science will not attempt the work. Philosophy sees the evil, but dreamily, and refuses to enlist against it. Christianity has proven itself unequal to the task. Shall we then concede that religion is baffled? No! Let it be said, to humanity's credit, there is a religion higher than Christianity, greater and grander than any established system, because it comprehends all that is lofty, pure, and noble in every creed. To searchers after truth, wherever situated, to aspirants for a higher life, to philanthropists, to lovers of virtue, it reaches out a beckoning hand.

Is there not room for this new religion,—new, yet old, because based upon eternal truths as hoary as earth itself,—is there not a work for it to do? Let the prisons, the almshouses, the blighted homes, the reeking dram-shops, the noisy brothels, the gamblers' dens, make reply. In this mammon-worshipping, time-serving age, there is ampler opportunity for heroism than ever the age of chivalry produced. Within its own bosom humanity nourishes the viper that feeds upon its vitals. The great question is, What shall be done to save man from himself—how shall he be aroused from the moral lethargy into which he has fallen? To the solution of this problem Free Religion should bring all its forces to bear. There is no longer faith in the ancient mode of regeneration prescribed by theology, and there is imminent danger that widespread pessimism will result from the exposure of its fallacies. Free Religion should teach man to have faith in himself, to work for his own salvation, to live virtuously. It should offer him a rational hope of reward in place of the untenable expectation which he had previously cherished. It should teach him that a life devoted to noble aims is his best preparation for death. It should seek to elevate all classes, and should shrink from no sacrifices in attempting to reclaim the weak and erring.

If Free Religion enters heartily into this work it will live; but if it fritters away its time in vain theorizing its death will not be long delayed. Believing that the words of the Persian poet contained a germ of priceless truth, it should be the labor of all reformers to increase the realization of heaven within their souls, and so to enlarge its boundaries by earnest, timely, and efficient work as that ultimately it will include humanity entire.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Feb. 24, 1879.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

RADICAL AND LIBERAL CONSERVATISM.

Whenever a party shall arise with patient assiduity to probe every mischief to its roots, and, amid the Babel of conflicting passions, to weigh all arguments in an equal balance, and, not too easily tantalized with novelties, to guard with jealous loyalty the precious heritage which each generation receives from the preceding one, that party will deserve the aspiring designation of the radical and liberal conservative party.

Very many of the best and wisest among men have always been wont to pay an exceedingly high deference to convention, while numbers not excelling in wisdom, but rather defective therein, have everywhere made themselves conspicuous by the ridicule and contumely which they have tried to heap upon the same. Nor is it difficult to understand why this should be the case, or what that is in convention which makes it worthy of this deference, not to say reverence. What is convention? Is it not the result of the conscientious efforts of the best and capablest submitted to unsparing criticisms and subject to continual revision, the wisest of the wisdom of the wisest of the wise? "And this," says the conservative, "this is what perhaps some maudlin tinker and pot-house oracle thinks himself competent to improve upon. Amid the inspiring fumes of German beer or French absinthe, this sage expects that he shall be able to tinker the most complex institutions with as much success as cans and kettles. This is your Red, who concludes that he must have a great wealth of ideas only because he is conscious of an exceeding poverty of material possessions and an utter bankruptcy of principles and scruples. Hand over the direction of affairs to him, and he will commence with the abolition of all rule and harmony by way of cleaning the sheet of paper; as if one should set fire to a city because some streets were crooked, and to purify the atmosphere. An empty stomach makes a philosopher. This is his view. But the wise man says: Give me neither poverty nor riches. Our amiable and sagacious Red loves to clean the sheet of paper. Let him begin with his own mind, and learn to distinguish between the fruits of laborious investigation and the floating pictures of his distempered fancy."

Such is the judgment which the conservative passes upon the Red; and then, elate with self-complacency, he goes on to aver that to prescription the world owes every good which she possesses, because without it nothing could be built upon a lasting basis. The innovative (I am forced to coin that word, the term liberal being wholly inadmissible in this connection because it begs the question in dispute, and because liberalism is not really opposed to conservatism, but to bigotry),—the innovative, even of the soberest type, proceeds the conservative, is an apostle of anarchy and chaos.

Since many more changes are proposed than made, and since, of the failures, most deserved to fail, it follows that conservatism is oftener right than wrong; and it ought to be conceded that not merely a few fanatics, but the whole innovative party, hath, in different countries and upon several occasions, been justly chargeable with that immoral recklessness which is no less injurious in its consequences than deliberate wickedness. When Mill lays down that the conservative party is the stupidest by the very law of its existence, he says what may not be applicable to the very leaders of the party for a whole generation or more. But the conservatism which gives the party most of its effective power is an instinct, a vis inertiae, a quality more animal than human. The period of the evolution of this quality in any creature marks the period of the creature's entrance upon the arena of conscious activity. The polypoid, the sea-anemone, have become conservative; they cling to the rock or anything they may lie upon. Just so do the vulgar cling to the established order. Stronger animals get rampant and aggressive, always in pursuit, like the daughters of the horse leech, crying: Give! Give! The genius of reform is originally one with the genius of revolt, being a pioneering energy hewing out a path. Thus it alarms the unawakened. Dr. Johnson said: "All Whiggism is detestable, because it is the negation of principle. The first Whig was the devil." Perhaps when he advised Mother Eve to learn the difference between good and evil! Rabaud St. Etienne said: "It becomes needful to renew. We must change ideas, laws, and manners; change men; change things; change names. . . . All must be destroyed, since all is to be recreated." This is sheer infatuation. But with time the historic sense develops, implying a loyalty to institutions. No need of returning to Nature; for, to quote Edmund Burke, "Art is man's nature." Edmund Burke accused the French convention of mapping out France with a tape and a spirit-level for sole guidance. This was a misrepresentation, but it is true that there has been and still is a disastrous tendency among some classes of theorists to commit the fatal blunder of supposing that little else is needed for the control of man in his social and industrial relations but mere mechanical regulations and adjustments. What is really needed is an acquaintance with our own nature; that is, not with human nature in the abstract, or with the nature of saints or of sages, or with the nature of the South Sea Islanders, who kill their superannuated relatives to make soup, but with our nature,—which, moreover, does not remain the same, but is perpetually changing; changing perpetually, but always gradually, and not as citizen St. Etienne would have wished. War and cannibalism were the earliest civilizers of the race. When men first learn to eat their mothers, work their wives, and bait wild-beast traps with their living children, they then for the first time display that aptitude for affairs which is the necessary precursor of the citizen virtues. Slavery, despotism, polygamy, were countenanced by the sages of antiquity. Therefore the reformer's only art is to find a method in the sequence of events, and to await and seize the fitting opportunity. Thus there is an instinct of conservatism, and there is a philosophy of conservatism. The masses are apt to be alternately swayed by fear and desire; and whether they stand still or whether they move, they are equally unreasonable, but yet never wholly unreasonable.

It would be better if the members of both parties would comport themselves with a becoming modesty, since both alike owe their successes to qualities good and bad. "O Liberty, how many crimes are committed in thy name!" said Madame Roland. So always virtue and vice tread on each other's heels. Close beside an honest zeal for justice come those angry passions which tell us of the beast. And, to our present purpose, foolhardiness is christened enterprise, and pusillanimity discretion. There is a fortitude which follows reflection, and another which precedes it. I knew a village cobbler who seemed to think that the globe would cease to turn upon its axis if he made inferior shoes. This spirit is admirable for a man in his trade, but the same partially intruded into public life becomes fatal, and one sees at once that to ask whether conservation or innovation be the better, is like asking whether blue or yellow be the better color.

To pass on to something definite. The right principle is to conserve to the utmost, which all must allow to be sufficiently conservative. Obviously some things cannot be conserved. Nothing which is unsound is capable of being conserved. Every housewife knows that. For instance, in dealing with a store of eggs or apples, regarding the whole pile in the mass, it is a distinctly conservative policy to estimate the rotten ones. Conservation is thus a sifting process. Once, when Wendell Phillips was denouncing slavery, some one threw a brick at him with excellent aim. Phillips dodged the missile and let it smash upon the wall behind him, and then, holding up a fragment of it, said with a smile, "The man who threw this brick didn't throw it at me, but at the idea which I am promulgating; but you cannot hit an idea with a brick." No, you cannot strike ideas with bricks, or wall them in or wall them out therewith, or in any fashion subjugate ideas through the instrumentality of bricks. We are not even able to suppose a hell (or heaven!) where the spirit is not free, else were the just, of all men, most miserable. But if I am right and mankind wrong, mankind by suffrage gets command of bricks, but I retain best balance in ideas. The argument of bricks has no conserving virtue in it, and conservatives ought to discard the use thereof in dealing with ideas, either to throw at people's heads or to build dungeons with wherein to incarcerate such as dissent from their opinions. Not thus can conservation be secured, but by another safeguard; namely, by teaching men, as they may be taught, and are being taught, that whenever any received theory or any institution appears to their minds to be devoid of merit or of meaning, that must needs be because they do not fully comprehend it; and that, accordingly, their business is, not to abolish it, but first of all to get to comprehend it, lest haply unhallowed hands be laid on what is holy, and repentance come too late.

"Wake Duncan with thy knocking; I would thou couldst!"

See the necessary virtue in prescription,—how time adapts and art adorns the growing institution. Consider the case of the Catholic Church. No fitter illustration could be chosen. That Church owes most of its credit and popularity to its many-sidedness, and it owes its many-sidedness to its length of standing. Its appeals are addressed to sentiments not distinctively religious. The quenchless vitality of Catholicism admits of easy explanation. Man is weak and lonely, awe-struck and oppressed, because there are three words whereat experience mocks: peace, rest, and hope. The spirit sinks beneath the power of things. Man, woman, wants somewhat to lean on and to love. Catholicism meets those needs; it stands for the ideas of authority and beauty. Behold the venerable structure, interesting, majestic, ornate, and lovely all at once! Protestantism is an insane attempt to bring harmony out of discord, and to make ignorance and folly criterions of truth; to promote man to the lordship of passion and caprice. It appeals to mental libertinism. Judge whether you have time or not; judge whether you are judges or not; judge all for yourselves, and yet judge all alike. The author of that mad revolt was a stubborn and licentious man. Does not history say that Luther was devoid of veneration and yet sunk in superstition? He had the obstinate contumacy of a bull and something like a bull's intelligence. When he threw his ink-pot at the devil, 'twas the wisest use he ever put it to. Be not deceived. Protestantism is not reformation; furor of independence is not all commendable; the fable of the belly and the members has a moral; to disregard conditions is not to conquer them; to say is not to make it so. Where is liberty? It resides in power. The Church can show a raison d'être; it works; the priest, the lay brother, the holy sister, minister to human needs.

After the close of the war of the rebellion, a company of old soldiers at a place in Tennessee invited a priest to come among them, and dispatched this card to their previous pastors: "Before the war, you told us that Catholics were capable of committing every crime; that priests and nuns were all bad alike. We went to the war. We were in hospitals, and we met with members of our own society there; but the only persons who did anything for us, or cared anything about us, were these same Catholics,—the priests and sisters that you so represented to us. We were in the prisons of the North, and it was the same."

The Protestant clergyman is forced to undertake the defence of his special sectarian system, which badly wants defending; a notable controversialist he, as full of matter as new bottles, with his fine religion of the Bible, susceptible of some three hundred diverse renderings, and always too busy to mind his business. Au contraire, the Church possesses organization, discipline, subordination of ranks. Priest is priest, and knows what he is; whereas a minister who is no priest,—what is he? What does he know? What can he do? Can he forgive sins? He hath neither privilege nor skill nor knowledge, except second-rate. His word carries no authority. He may visit the poor and tend the sick, if he will, but with no peculiar advantage. He cannot administer extreme unction. He officiates in some ceremonies, but what do they amount to? No one can attend the sacrifice of the mass at a cathedral without being moved and awed; but who ever felt anything but insupportable ennui over that play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out,—mystic worship away from the proper accessories, the holy water, incense, tapers, the quaint carvings in the lofty masonry, the curious symbols on the painted windows, the deathly chant, the dim religious light?

Leaving Catholicism to the defence of the Catholics: what is not always understood is that the philosopher and man of science is the natural advocate of conservatism; the apostle of religion, or the transcendentalist, the revolutionary. The experimentalist, who allows that Nature cannot be gainsaid, is severely obliged to use discretion; but the man of faith is not restrained by fact, but only by his fancy. Edmund Burke remarked a connection not accidental between political incendiarism and a priori metaphysics, and that philosophic statesman's rare acumen did not mislead him. The verdict of history is that the religious upheaval of the sixteenth century was attended with more and worse excesses than the partly secular movement of the eighteenth; and even in regard to that, Rousseau, much more than Voltaire or Diderot, was the apostle of the sans culottes. In fact, the movement was deeply tinged with superstition after all. Robespierre lived long enough to sentence Flébert for atheism in the true spirit of the Inquisition. Thérain de Méricourt, an abandoned woman who was the Deborah of the Parisian terrorists, the great-grandmothers of les pétroleuses, had always the Bible at her tongue's end. No Voltairian was she, no student of the Encyclopædia. To expect that human society can ever find an anchorage in the fantastical dogmas begotten of enthusiasm and delirium is to entertain a hope which sober sense disdains and history contradicts. "Be not drunk with wine, but filled with the spirit," counsels Saint Paul; but experience proves that the intoxication of religion is still more baneful than that which results from wine. For when the light is darkness, how great is that darkness!

There is one phenomenon which may seem to militate against the preceding view, but which really confirms it. The pious themselves will be the first to say that there are two things distinct and very different; namely, faith engraven on the heart and crede formulated and set down on tablets. What need to paint that curious picture of the human soul? The first is loved because it rends the tenderest ties and leads to pains and shame and death; the last is chosen as the smoothest road to wealth and fortune's favors. The establishment of crede is the decadence of faith, because, wherever faith exists, crede is futile and nonsensical. The bare act of affirmation implies room for doubt. No one affirms what no one can deny. But ere a man adores, we must suppose that he believes. To kneel in prayer, and afterwards to avouch one's faith,—why is it not a bathos? The crede for the unlettered is a magic charm, like telling the Catholic or Buddhist beads, or grinding the prayer-machine; for the lettered it is only drill. The religious element in the Bible contains no crede; it consists of feeling seeking utterance in poetic metaphor; and who does not see that contradiction, fatal in prose, is the soul of poetry, which has to do with the irrational faculties of imagination and emotion? Religion consists in a luxurious abandonment, to commune with one's spirit and be still. The need of the devotee is to get himself expressed, as in the Imitatio Christi, because words ease the burdened soul like ejaculations, cries, and tears. There is here no question of doubt, because no room for error. The truth is in the passion. As Feuerbach said: "Not the attributes of the divinity, but the divineness or deity of the attribute, is the real divine being." That is what enthalls the attention of the devotee. Now all men possess all qualities, only in different degrees. All therefore are religious; but the saint is a person religious to excess, ill-balanced, lunatic, often splendid, but always dangerous. The State Church is an insidious device for repressing the vagaries of fanaticism, squalorous enough and morally debasing, but effective for its purpose. Pure religion is opposed to compromise; but human polity is based on compromise, and State religion is nothing else but compromise. "Christ is my grammar," Saint Augustine said. That is, knowledge is vanity, godliness all in all. "No bishop, no king," said James I.

CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

NEW YORK CITY.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S ARREST.

The busy little borough of Irwin Station is now in a state of agitation. It has been shaken as if by an earthquake. An infidel, a real, live, sure-enough atheist, has polluted the village with his presence and tainted the atmosphere with his doctrines. About three months ago there was organized in the village a society known as the "Liberal League," and its progenitors claimed for it more of a political than a religious bias. A Leader reporter Saturday afternoon started to the scene of the turbulence, and after an hour's jolting was dropped off a railway train at Irwin Station. A few moments later he was in one of the hotels the village affords, and in conversation with a loquacious clerk, a young man who was just brimful of the row, and anxious for an opportunity to give vent to all he didn't know about the "free-thinkers." After relieving himself of a ten-minute's flow of words, he volunteered the most important information of his talk with a statement that if the reporter "would just step over to Bill Crookson's store, William would tell all about it." The Leader man got a map of Bill's location, and steered straight for the spot. Mr. Crookson was on hand, attending to the wants of numerous customers, but, upon discovering the mission of the quill-driver, said, "If you will publish my true statement I am ready to un-bosom myself." The reporter mounted a convenient flour barrel, waved his pencil aloft, and told Mr. Crookson to fire away. The merchant then proceeded as follows: "About three months ago a society was formed here, and was known as the 'Liberal League.' It was organized in part for political purposes, although most of its members were free-thinkers. We concluded to secure Mr. Underwood, of Boston, to deliver a series of lectures; and, with that object in view, Constable Bowser waited on President McCormick, of the school-board, and obtained the people's or school-hall for the lecture. The president said that under a resolution on the books of the school-board he could rent the hall for lectures, and consequently the hall would be secure. The constable told him that the first lecture would probably be on the theme, 'Is there a Personal, Intelligent Deity?' Two weeks ago Mr. Underwood informed the League by letter he would lecture at Irwin February 4 and 5. The lectures were then advertised in the county papers and by posters. The clergy of the borough observed the advertisements, and warned their people against attending the lectures.

"Rev. Titzel, pastor of the German Reformed Church, said the school-hall was built by Christian people, with Christian money, and the board ought not to permit it to be occupied by the unbelievers. He advised his people rather to visit the most virulent case of small-pox than hear these lectures. While there were many mutterings, no action was taken until the day when the first lecture was to be delivered, except a visit to me from the janitor of the hall, Mr. Verner, Monday last, when he said it would be necessary for me to get an order from the president, indorsed by a majority of the school-directors, before he would open the hall. I called on Mr. Fleming, of the board, and stated what the janitor had said; he answered, 'I can't conceive what authority he had for that; I suggested that I get an order from the president of the board, and he said, 'I advise you not to say anything about this, and there will be no trouble.' On the day of the lecture the school-board held a meeting and resolved not to let us use the hall. There were six members present, and all voted against us except President McCormick. After this action, the same day, I called upon the president and obtained from him a written order to the janitor; Mr. Crookson here produced the order, which read as follows: 'The hall having been rented to certain persons for to-night and to-morrow night, you will please open it or give up the key to A. M. Bowser or William Crookson.' McCormick.

"Feb. 4, 1879."

"I carried the order to the janitor, read it to him, and he informed me the keys were in the hands of the high constable of the borough, Benjamin Allsworth. The president said we were entitled to occupy the hall in spite of the board's action. Mr. Bowser went up to the school-hall, and when I went there later in the evening it was open. I suppose it was forced open, and don't know who forced the doors. A mob of about two hundred people were down on the sidewalk talking excitedly, and by their actions keeping people out of the hall. Rev. Titzel, I am told, said the meeting ought to be broken up, and Rev. Miller, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was in the crowd as a leader. The high constable said that rather than let us occupy the hall he was in favor of blowing it up. The lecture was finished, and we concluded that as a majority of the people were opposed to our using the school-hall we would secure another room. Just as the lecture was about to commence the following night at Gearing Hall, the sheriff and deputies entered and arrested Mr. Underwood, Constable Bowser, and myself for forcibly entering the school-hall. We immediately entered bail in the sum of $500 each, and the lecture went on. Most of the audience were composed of church people.

"Thursday night a public meeting was called at the Methodist Episcopal Church, and attended by about three hundred people. After organization a set of resolutions indorsing and commending the action of the school-board were brought in by a committee appointed for the purpose. Before the resolutions were adopted I arose to make a speech, and had proceeded but a moment when Rev. Titzel interrupted me, saying I had no right to speak in a meeting called by Christian people, and intended only for those in favor of Christianity. I called him to order. The people commenced to stamp and hoot so that I could not speak. The resolutions that had been all prepared before the meeting by Rev. McElree were then adopted, and the meeting adjourned."

This was Mr. Crookson's statement. In answer to further questions he said he had been a member of the church some years since, and knew the League had not circulated any obscene literature. Heywood's Cupid's Yokes was a work on marriage. A petition had been sent to Congress asking for the repeal or modification of the Comstock law against the circulation of obscene literature, because it was often used as an instrument against freethinkers, and many thought the State should have jurisdiction in such matters.

Dr. McCormick, president of the school-board, was next visited at his office, and said some time last week he was waited on for the use of the hall, and gave it because for years it had been the custom for the president of the board to rent the hall to any parties who may desire the use of it, provided they were citizens. "The members of the board, not being willing that these lectures should be delivered in the hall, invited me to call a meeting. I did so, and at that meeting it was resolved that the freethinkers shouldn't have the hall, I alone opposing the resolution. Some time after the meeting two gentlemen called upon me, down at my office, and demanded an order for the keys. I told them what the board had done, and I was no longer in authority. They insisted it was a contract with the board, which the board alone could not annul. So I gave them a request to the janitor for the keys, not as president of the school-board, but as a citizen. Of course I knew they could not get the keys on that request. Further than this, I have nothing to do with the matter. In justice to these two men, however, it is necessary to say that if they entered the building they did it because they thought they had a right to go in under the contract with me."

"Are you a member of the Liberal League?" "No, I am opposed to the propagation of unbelief. I have no sympathy whatever with that movement. I have always supported the Church. It is the upholder of truth, good morals, and social order. I am opposed to all innovations on the established order. At the same time I want to oppose infidelity by argument, and not by bulldozing. A man may rightfully, under our institutions, advocate any heterodoxy, provided he does it decently."

"Why did you give an order, even as a citizen, for the keys, after the board had refused the use of the hall?"

"Simply as one who knew the fact of the previous contract when I had authority; and in part to get rid of an importunate man, as I knew the order would be utterly disregarded. I gave them an order just as a citizen, not as president, because I had no more authority. Believe Mr. Crookson was removed from the church because he tripped the dreamy waltz. I believe these men had a right to the hall."

Rev. Titzel, represented by the opposition as the leader of the church faction, was visited at his residence. He stated that it was necessary, when the school-hall was rented, for all the board to be consulted. This time none of the board were consulted by the president. The ministers had denounced the lectures from the pulpit, and had waged a war because the school ought not to be used for ungodly purposes when it was built almost entirely by Christian money. This was the fight the ministers made, although he was not any more of a leader than anybody else. "On the night the hall was forced open I advised that all lawful means should be used to vindicate the board. I did not advise that the lecture should be disturbed. I said they, the board, ought to proceed by any lawful means to vindicate their right." This was before the lecture commenced. He didn't know much about obscene literature being circulated. Rev. Christy, of the Lutheran Church, was found at his domicile, attending to the wants of a small edition of the Christy family. He was one of the ministers who indorsed the action of the board. On the night of the first lecture after the hall had been forced open, several members of the board proceeded to the hall and demanded that the League and lecturer vacate. Constable Bowser informed the board they could come in, if they behaved themselves, at twenty-five cents a head. If they didn't want to come in they must stand away from the door. He also told Mr. Schaff, a member of the board, that he (Bowser) could throw the educational gentleman (Schaff) out of the window. He had observed but one document that he considered obscene, but many that were atheistical found circulation. The article he referred to was entitled, he believed, "The Prophet and the Widow." It told of the prophet Elisha visiting a very old widow who never had a son. He told her she would have a child, and so within the hour a son was born to her, which indicated a holy man had visited her. The violent suggestion is evident.

Constable Bowser was found with one eye on the watch for evil-doers, and the other closely surveying the enemy. He is herculean in size, and, it appears, don't hesitate to speak his piece "right out in meeting." He said he was not a member of the Liberal League, but he liked fair play. He entered that hall through a rear window, or rather a small boy did, and he thought the president's order was sufficient authority. A mob of two hundred gathered in front of the hall, led by Revs. Titzel and Miller. "When Mr. Gregg, of the board, asked me how I got in there I said it didn't make any difference how; that if he wanted to get in he could pay twenty-five cents and hear the lecture if he behaved himself; if not, he must get out."

Didn't threaten to throw anybody out of the window, but he supposed he could have done so if necessary. "I protected these men because I thought it my duty as an officer. I secured the hall for Mr. Crookson, because that gentleman and Dr. McCormick were not on good terms on that account. Dr. McCormick informed me that the board could not ignore the contract. Yesterday I met Rev. McAlnee, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church. I heard him say the meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church sustaining the board was only for people who upheld the action of the board; and I said to him, 'I am sorry I went there, then; I thought it was a public meeting.' He answered, 'Mr. Bowser, you are a law-breaker, although an officer of the law.'

"I replied, 'You are a liar.' He said I was a 'bully,' and I retorted, 'You are a heavenly aristocrat, run by a set of paupers. You are a pauper yourself, and an angelic liar.' He walked away from me very angry."

Another gentleman here said to the reporter: "Irwin is a great place, sir. We repeated an act of assembly here once, and you can't tell where we'll end if we get a good head of steam on."

The janitor, a gentleman Faletian in proportions, said the doors were forced in, he didn't know how. They forced a window and two doors. He found a pick in the hall after the lecture.

As our reporter was wending his way trainwards Mr. Crookson hailed him and remarked: "There is one little incident I forgot to relate to you. When it was definitely settled Mr. Underwood was to come here, I had handbills printed, and inserted an advertisement in the Greensburg Tribune and Herald. The Sunday after the advertisement appeared a Greensburg minister occupied one of our pulpits, and said he was sorry such an advertisement had appeared in a paper owned and edited by a Christian gentleman; but the editors of the paper had informed him that, had they known its character, the advertisement would not have appeared, but they would apologize; and the next issue contained the following": Mr. Crookson then handed our reporter a copy of the paper, containing an article headed "An Apology," and commencing thusly:—

"During the absence of the senior editor of this paper last week (the junior being principally engaged in attending to the legal business of the firm), there appeared in the local columns of that issue a notice under the caption of 'Freethought vs. Christianity.' We are free to say that we could not have been induced to insert that notice in the Tribune and Herald for either love or money, had we seen it before we inserted; for the reason that we believe such men as Mr. Underwood, who attempt to array science against the Bible, or who go about to insinuate, even, that there is no personal, intelligent Deity, are not only dangerous, but very bad members of human society."

"After seeing this, I called at the office of the paper and requested to see the proprietors. I found some one who represented them, and said: 'Since you are so conscience stricken about publishing my advertisement, perhaps you will return the money I paid for it.'

"The proprietor turned to the business manager, said he guessed that would be only fair, and the money was returned; what do you think about that way of doing business?" The reporter replied that it would perhaps beget more financial prosperity if the money had not been refunded, and in lieu of it another apology made.

While the excitement has subsided, there is still much feeling, and both sides are confident they have the bulge when it comes into the courts. In the meantime the Leader man leaves the combatants resting on their arms, with the warriors all in battle array.—Pittsburg Leader, Feb. 10.

CONVICT LABOR.

WHAT THE FIRST HONEST WORKMAN SAID TO THE SECOND HONEST WORKMAN, AND WHAT THE SECOND HONEST WORKMAN SAID IN REPLY.

First workman.—No; what I say is, that no criminal ought to be allowed to work. 'Cause if he works he works cheap, and it knocks down your wages and mine.

Second workman.—Wal, I dunno; you see—

First workman (quite warm).—There ain't no "see" about it! I tell you it degrades every human man's labor to have a State-prison bird doing the same sort of thing for a quarter of the wages. It ought to be forbid by law!

Second workman.—Wal, I dunno; you see, if—

First workman (deeply excited).—Nonsense, with your "if" and "buts" and "mebbys!" It's easy enough to see. If a lot o' chaps works for twenty cents a day, you ain't goin' to get $2 he you? Not much! Don't this bring you right into competition with degraded culprit-labor? Don't it? Say! Don't it? Why don't you speak and say something?

Second workman.—Wal, I dunno. Ain't it true that—

First workman (furious).—No, it ain't true! They ain't a word of truth in it! You know ez well ez I do that—

Second workman (bristling up and interrupting).—Look a-here! You yawp every minute. S'poe you jest shet your fly-trap tem-po-ra-ri-o-ly and give me a chance to say a word.

First workman (toning down).—Very well, ef you really think you got anything to say that amounts to anything, jest spill it.

Second workman (tuning up).—This ere: Ef prisoners don't work an' support themselves, s'ombuddy's got to work to s'port 'em.

First workman.—Wal, capital'll support 'em.

Second workman.—And who s'ports capital?

First workman.—Why—nothin'—it s'ports itself.

Second workman (laying his hand on the first workman's shoulder).—That's where you make your mistake. Labor s'ports capital.

First workman.—How do you make that out?

Second workman.—If the State's prison don't s'port itself, it is s'ported by taxes. Whenever a property-holder pays a tax, he adds to the price of what he sells enough to reimburse him. And labor eventually pays every cent.

First workman.—It seems to me that if—

Second workman (now thoroughly aroused).—"Seems!" They ain't no "if" 'bout it! Any fool can see it! Somebody's got to pay that pris'n's board. Ef he don't earn his own board, you an' I've got to pay it out'n our wages.

First workman.—P'raps you're right. Ef that's so, he might jest ez well go to work.

Second workman.—And keep to work. Seems to me labor is degraded more by 'lowing a lot of rogues to shirk for the privilege of payin' their board, then by makin' 'em work at some price or other.

First workman.—But they work for less wages than we kin.

Second workman.—But there's very few of 'em; and as they work to pay the expense of keeping of themselves shut up, I don't see ez it makes much difference whether they earn a cent a day or $5 a day, ez fur ez we are concerned.

First workman.—But they shouldn't be let out on contract.

Second workman.—Certin they should. They should be made to work, and their services should be let out to them that'll pay the most for it.

First workman.—Then s'posed they earn more'n they cost?

Second workman.—In that inpossible case, the surplus should be turned right into the State treasury.

First workman.—Ain't it demoralizin' and undignified for respectable folks to let their gov'ment be s'ported by the crim'nal classes?

Second workman.—No, sir! It ain't! What awful stuff hev you got into your head? The more work you can git out of criminals, the better! That's all they're good fer whilst they're bein' punished. Why, ef 'twas'n't fer the crim'nal classes, there wouldn't be no need of gov'ment. Did you ever think of that? They ought to s'port it!

First workman.—That does look sort o' reason'ble, after all. Why, that ain't wot that feller said down to the Union.

Second workman.—Don't let anybody fool ye! Make all prisoners work jest as much as possible. It'll do 'em good. Make 'em earn ez much ez they kin, either under the superintendent or outside contracts. And remember that every cent a prisoner earns is jest so much in the pockets of the laborin' men.—N. Y. Graphic.

PRIESTS OF THE SUN AND PRIESTS OF SCIENCE.

Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, an ex-justice of the Supreme Court, lectured Sunday evening at Martin Hall, before the Albany Liberal Association. After briefly alluding to his recent election as president of that society, the speaker took up his theme, which was entitled "The Priests of the Sun." He asserted that throughout all the ages there is not, and never has been, but one religion in the world. Intellectually, mankind was born blind. The sun receives the first attention of man as a mighty power, giving heat and life. It was natural that the first sentiments of religion should have been awakened by it, and the first teachers should have been its priests. The first names of God in all nations purported the sun, light, or fire, and led to the belief that they were of common origin. The Phœnicians were the most ancient people known, and were worshippers of the sun. They sent colonies from Sidon to Egypt. In the latter country the sun became the god Osiris. This god was the sun personified, and according to Egyptian belief had descended to the earth in human form, full of goodness and with the object to benefit mankind. Here he remained for twenty-eight years, when, being persecuted unto death, he returned and became the judge of mankind. The Greeks imported all their religion and rites from Egypt, but added much embellishment from their own fancy. The Druids of Britain, with their sacred fire, had the same origin. In this country the sun-worshippers were found in Mexico and Peru by the Spaniards. They had come to America before the age of letters or the use of iron. They possessed all the Old World myths, fables, and religious usages,—the traditions of Noah and Babel, the Jewish exodus, baptism, the emblem of the cross, immaculate conception, confession and absolution. The Roman Church inherited the same myths and doctrines of faith. They came from Greece to Rome, where Constantine established the Christian religion, the observance of Sunday (day of the sun) dating from this time. Thus Christianity, in addition to originating from Judaism, is an outgrowth of divers religions, all springing from sun-worship, and it has been said that the history of the sun is the history of Jesus Christ. Romanism and Protestantism are both modified sun-worship.

The lecturer then turned to those who inculcate the study of Nature, whom he designated, in contrast to the priests of the sun, as priests of the science. Among the earlier of these were Bacon, Bruno, Galileo, Hervey, Jenner, and Franklin, who, had they been priests of the sun, would have used their discoveries for their own advantage, and not for the benefit of mankind. The priests of the sun in all ages had grasped three-quarters of the wealth of this earth, while they kept the eyes of their deluded followers fixed upon heaven. But men of science were not dealers in mystery, nor was there ever one of them who was a foe to his race. Later arose a group of scientists teaching the development theory. Darwin was the father of this theory, and Spencer, Tyndall, Hæckel, Huxley, and others fortify the doctrine. The priests of science declare that Nature is governed by law, which cannot be changed by prayer or the observance of superstitious rites.

Morality is based upon duties to man and other animals, including the humblest forms of life. Its followers range all the earth in pursuit of morals, and borrow from all faiths, rejecting nothing that is good, but believe that no book was ever written by any god. The motto of Confucius sums up nearly all our duties, but should be made to include innocent animals. In regard to immortality, science neither asserts nor denies. He who affirms, most probably knows least. It teaches, however, the doctrine of the conservation of forces, and does not shake the belief that that power known here as mind is not destined to perish.

The lecture was attentively listened to by a densely packed assemblage. Many were obliged to stand throughout its delivery, for lack of space to accommodate seats, and a larger number were unable to gain entrance into the hall.—Albany Evening Times, Feb. 25.

CAN IT BE ABATED?

With all our hearts we thank Professor Mears, Bishops Peck and Huntington, and Chancellor Haven for calling a meeting at Syracuse to take measures looking to the suppression of the Oneida Community. So long as that disgrace to American civilization exists in the centre of the Empire State, it is always with a feeling of shame that we ask Congress or the President to take any measures to overthrow Mormonism. Oneida Communism is the most flagrantly vile system of social life ever organized. The literature issued in its explanation and defence is too foul to admit of cleanly quotation or paraphrase. Compared with it, Mormonism is eminently pure and respectable. It makes a downright assault upon the very existence of the family in the State. It gives no man a wife and no woman a husband; but every woman as many paramours as there are men in the whole community, and every man as many as there are women. It is a system of organized, systematic harlotry, the license of which is limited only by membership in the community, and the successive distribution from day to day of the committee of allotment. Our decent types would refuse to tell how, in this promiscuous lasciviousness, the birth of children is prevented. We can only add that they attempt to breed children by selection of sire and dam, like colts and calves. If it has come to be a question to be debated whether marriage should not be abolished, whether adultery is an impurity, and whether the science of political economy should not abolish the family, then and not till then will we stoop to argue with the filth of Oneida, whether or not their ethics of the barn-yard shall be accepted as a proper element of civilization and religion. As it is, we can only join with all good men and with those who took part in the Syracuse meeting in denouncing the system of the Community and calling for legislative action to extinguish it.

The efforts made thus far to abate this nuisance have failed simply because there are no laws which cover exactly the case. Then the needed laws should be enacted. We trust that the committee appointed to carry on this reform will prepare a suitable bill, and we can promise it the hearty support of all the best citizens in the State. No plea of morality in other relations should be allowed to be heard. No matter how pious, or how thrifty, or how rich, or how honest, or how hospitable the Community may be, or how it has conquered the aversion of its neighbors in the township, should have no avail [sic]. Nor should any appeal to the scientific or sanitary interest of the experiment of human stock-breeding make any one indifferent to the question of morals, which is the only one to be considered. We rest here, promiscuous adultery is an offence against every family and against the State, and must be remorselessly suppressed.—Independent.

THEOLOGY IN COURT.

COMPETENCY OF INFIDELS AS WITNESSES, ETC.

An interesting question was decided by Judge Brown in the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday, in regard to the competency of infidels as witnesses, the precise point never having been before decided in the courts of this State. An action was on trial in which J. Amling had sued Francis Arndt for damages for injury to Amling's house by the erection of a house adjoining it. The first witness called was John Sauerlein, to whom Messrs. F. C. Cook and Edgar H. Gans, counsel for Arndt, objected as an incompetent witness, because he did not believe in the existence of God and a future state of rewards and punishments. It was admitted this would be a legal objection to a witness. It was then proposed to investigate the witness as to his belief, when the counsel for Arndt further objected that if witness was not competent generally, he could not testify even as to his own belief. Argument ensued by J. Meredith Reese for the witness, and Cook and Gans against him. Judge Brown said: "This is a question of very great difficulty. The weight of the English authorities is for, and the American against, the competency of a person, objected to as such an unbeliever, to prove his own competency. But I am to decide the question as the law is in Maryland, if I can ascertain it. I have had some experience in the consideration and investigation of such questions, both while at the bar and on the bench. The custom has been to interrogate witnesses as to their competency. The only guide to the ascertainment of the state of the law in this State is found in Article 36 of the Bill of Rights of Maryland. But does it furnish a solution of the difficulty? It says: 'No person ought to be molested in person or estate on account of his religious persuasion or practice, nor any person otherwise competent or deemed incompetent as a witness or juror on account of his religious belief, provided he believes in the existence of God, and that he will be held morally accountable for his acts, and be punished therefor either in this world or the next.' This is a constitutional provision, and should not receive a narrow and technical construction.

"The same rule is applied to a witness as to a juror, and the mode of examination of each should, I think, be the same. If a juror were to tell me that he could not conscientiously serve because he had not the required belief, I think that I should not be compelled to reject his evidence and resort to that of some person who had heard him express his opinions on some previous occasion. It would be my duty to hear him, and if he testified falsely he would be guilty of perjury and subject to its penalties. I would ascertain his competency in the matter of his belief just as I would his competency as to his age or residence. I shall on the same principle afford the witness an opportunity to explain his religious belief. But his testimony shall not be conclusive, and the defendant is not precluded from showing alibis that the witness is incompetent by reason of his belief." Judge Brown then called up the witness, who, speaking in broken English, testified like a man of some intelligence. Judge Brown, after the witness was sworn to answer truly, asked him as follows: "Do you believe in the existence of God [witness answered promptly "Yes"], and that in His dispensation you will be held accountable for your acts, and will be punished therefor either in this world or in the world to come?" Answer by witness, "I do." He was declared a competent witness.

The defence took exceptions to the rulings of the court, and then asked witness if, after reading a work by Darwin, a year or so ago, he had not said to Mr. Arndt that he did not believe in a God, and if he did not talk that way in a cigar-shop before others, to all of which the witness replied he had not said so. He said he had talked as others have on different forms of religious belief, but that he was a Lutheran by birth. In reply to another question about Darwin, Judge Brown said, laughingly, "I should not exclude the witness if he did believe in the doctrine of evolution, because I should be very reluctant to decide that a man cannot believe in that doctrine and in the existence of God also." The witness then went on with his testimony.—Baltimore Sun, Feb. 14, 1879.

THE other day a little "Hub," four years old, while playing in the nursery, came across an old doll, rather the worse for wear, and being in a generous mood he took it to his mother and said: "Mamma, I deem I better div' dis to the swill man when he tums wound, an' p'aps he will take it home to the swill lady and let her fix it up all nice for the little swill children to play wis,—wouldn't you, mamma?"

MOTHER (to daughter who has just given aims to a poor tramp).—"Now, what in the world did you do that for? Suppose he should buy rum with it?" POOR TRAMP (overhearing and making a low courtesy).—"But I promise I will not, my dear madame. I prefer gin."—Old City Derrick.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE WORLD'S LEADERS.

INSPIRED TO —.

The world has leaders, self-reliant, strong,
And consecrated by a noble aim,
Or Right would yield remorselessly to Wrong,
To selfish ease, to greed, or love of fame.

The loftiest souls eschew the rabble's bays
And the cheap homage of the passing hour;
They read the prophecy of coming days,
Through present failure reaching future power.

Only the bravest spirits dare to fail
Rather than pander to the low and rude,
Counting it joy, if but the right prevail,
To bear the censures of the multitude.

Press bravely on! It is not ours to see
The issues of thy work in life's brief span:
'Twill broaden down the ages, making free
From superstition's thrall the soul of man.

ANNA GARDNER.

NANTUCKET, Feb. 23, 1879.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 8.

Marshall Pierce, $3.50; Geo. W. McKenzie, $2; G. D. Carpenter, 20 cents; G. Grove, $4.37; D. F. Wilcox, 50 cents; E. Foxandlé, $3.20; E. C. Hart, $3.20; Charles Killshaw, $3.20; Charles Collins, $3.20; James Underhill, $1.50; J. A. Winter, $1.50; C. A. W. Crosby, $10; J. C. Allen, $1; Lewis Caspar, $3.75; Elias Warbase, $6.40; L. B. Farrar, $4; Wm. A. Jenkins, $3; M. R. Warren, $6.40; J. E. Adams, $1.50; B. F. Underwood, $7.01; J. S. Shaller, $3.20; F. E. Carr, $1.50; J. C. DeLano, $33.20; J. C. Moore, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 13, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unsent Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE BURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

A FINE CHANCE TO CLUB.

We have made arrangements with the respective publishers to club THE INDEX with the following first-class magazines, for a year, at the astonishingly low rates annexed:—

Fortnightly Review.....	$5.50 instead of $8.50
North American Review.....	5.75 " " "
Popular Science Monthly.....	6.00 " " "

To the subscriber, this is equivalent to getting one of these leading periodicals at the usual rate, $5.00, and THE INDEX besides at only $0.50, $0.75, or $1.00. The offer is necessarily confined to names not now on our mail list, and is made solely to increase the circulation of THE INDEX, whose friends will find it a great aid in kindly seconding our efforts to this end.

THE EDITOR of the Jeffersonville (Indiana) Evening News publishes, with such comments as it deserves, a threatening letter from a clergyman of that town which is worth reprinting here. Humboldt would have placed it, with others of like character, in his "museum of psychological curiosities." The letter is as follows:—

JEFFERSONVILLE, JAN. 22, 1879.

MR. REUBEN DAILEY:

Sir,—When it became known in this community that you had espoused infidelity, an assurance was given that your sentiments on that subject would not appear at any time in the columns of the Evening News, which, I believe, has been faithfully observed until your issue of to-day (22d), wherein you make a very unjust criticism upon the course Rev. C. Little, of New Albany, chooses to adopt, in perfect harmony with the views and feelings of the membership of his church, in promoting the cause of Christianity, which, to all thoughtful minds, is considered as a slur upon the Christian religion. Now, let me advise you as a friend not to repeat the like as long as you have a say in that paper. This community, or the better part of it, will not submit to it, and decided steps will be taken to supersede the News altogether. You may not be sensible to the fact that you have lost caste with very many, heretofore your warm friends, by suffering yourself to be led away with the vagaries of scepticism. You have crippled your usefulness, and lost in a great measure your power as an editor upon the minds of the people; and I say to you, in all candor, that it is the general impression among the citizens here that, if the Bible and Christianity were really vulnerable to the attacks of infidelity, you are not the man to attempt to make such attacks. I trust, for your own sake, for the sake of your own family, and that you may live to a purpose, and be a real benefit to your race, that you will become an active, devoted Christian.

Yours truly, JNO. W. SULLIVAN.

REFORMED LIBERALISM.

Liberalism, as represented to-day before the people of the United States by several of its most prominent organizations, journals, and public advocates, needs to be reformed just as much as Christianity itself, as represented by the churches, in order to bring it into harmony with the demands of reason, morality, and civilization. Like everything else that attempts to change the established order of things in the name of social progress, it stands on trial before the world, and must either vindicate the propriety of its attempts at the bar of enlightened public opinion, or submit to be rejected as an impostor, if not a public enemy. The burden of proof does not rest upon its antagonists, who occupy the strong ground of prior possession and well know the enormous advantage of this position of presumptive truth, but rather upon itself. It can never make good its claims, however, if it suffers itself explicitly to approve, or even tacitly to accept, the principles, purposes, and tendencies manifested by these false representatives. So mischievous has their influence already proved, that nothing short of a radical reform of liberalism, as now too often represented, will save it from such an emphatically condemnatory popular verdict as will continue its enemies in power for generations. All the efforts of wiser and better representatives will be practically neutralized, if the people at large, seeing no effective protest of any sort made against the abuses of freedom, are permitted to retort to the liberal reformers of society: "Reform yourselves first of all! 'Physician, heal thyself.'"

It will be asked: "What reform or reforms does liberalism need?"

We answer that it needs two great reforms—distinct, yet closely affiliated.

I. Liberalism needs a great reform in its philosophy.

Seizing the principle of private judgment which Protestantism originally asserted against the ecclesiastical absolutism of Rome, and running this out to its extreme logical development in neglect of the other equally important principle of universal reason, liberalism has reaped both the advantages and the disadvantages of its extraordinary one-sidedness. This is especially true with regard to morals. Nothing could surpass the splendor of many of the characters which individualistic liberalism has produced. So long as the individual manifested a fine moral perception and felt a strong inner impulse to shape his life in accordance with it, he really recognized, albeit by a "glorious inconsistency," that universal moral law for which individualism can find no logical place in its philosophy, as binding on all individuals alike. However extreme, individualism can do no practical harm, provided all individuals are protected from it by the possession of a strong and beautiful personal nature; and it is the just boast of individualistic liberalism to have had multitudes of such representatives.

But the merit of these superb characters is far more their own than that of their philosophical principle, which in itself is morally indifferent. The essence of individualism is simply the negation of all outward restraints upon action which are imposed by man, and of all inward restraints upon it other than those which the individual freely chooses to impose upon himself. There is no room in such a philosophy of life for any moral obligation which the individual may choose to disown—no place for any moral law superior to his own choices or binding upon them. He himself is the absolute creator of all moral law for himself; and the same power which enacts may equally repeal. It cannot be claimed that he is in any sense bound by his own ideal; no other individual can even state such a claim, or presume so much as to mention the word obligation to him, without thereby violating the very first principle of individualism and constituting himself a tyrant over his equal and peer. Morally considered, therefore, individualism in all its self-consistent forms (and we have nothing to say of any others) is the absolute negation of the very idea of moral law, as that which possesses authority over the individual—the absolute negation of the very possibility of virtue or vice, in any other sense than that of mere agreeableness or disagreeableness in the eyes of others.

Now the anti-social tendencies of this self-consistent individualism would naturally lie hidden, until brought to light by teachings or characters that boldly attack the moral foundations on which society is built. To-day this denial is made in terms, and illustrated in deeds. For instance, one liberal publicly defends the "natural right to commit adultery"; another publishes to the world the fact that he habitually exercises this right, and his wife does the same; and these men, at this very moment, occupy conspicuous positions before the liberal public as acceptable and accepted representatives of liberalism! Does any liberal object to such representatives? He cannot, without violating the individualistic philosophy on which liberalism, as commonly understood, is founded. The theoretical adulterer and the practical adulterer are both individuals; they both claim to be merely exercising the "right of private judgment" in repudiating the authority of the universal reason, as interpreted by that "Consensus of the Competent" which we explained last week; and one of them has confessed in print the commission of what the State punishes as crime, as the legitimate practical exercise of this "right of private judgment"—the sole essential principle of individualism. On the premises of that philosophy, no liberal has any right to object, either publicly or privately, to the sayings or to the doings of these men. THEY ARE ABSOLUTELY JUSTIFIED IN BOTH, IF THAT PHILOSOPHY IS TRUE.

Is any further proof needed to show that liberalism needs a great reform in its philosophy?

It is no answer to say that these are merely the "extravagances" of individualism—that they are not at all indicative of the real nature of individualistic liberalism. The fact is that individualism furnishes no criterion by which such monstrous results can be declared inconsistent with its essential principle or spirit. There is an unconscious recognition of a wholly different principle, whenever they are called "extravagances." Extravagances by what test of sanity and sobriety? Only by the test of that universal reason, represented by the laws of all civilized nations and the convictions of the wisest and best men, which sustains the institution of marriage and condemns gross infractions of it as crimes. Without invoking this universal reason, whose dicta are all founded on the universal experience of mankind, these abominations cannot be pronounced extravagances at all. Individualism contains absolutely no principle by which they could be classified as such. As individualists, or as liberals planting themselves on individualism as the common and accepted philosophy of liberalism, these men may snap their fingers in the face of all their fellows, and defy them to find any pretext for protest in the principle of "private judgment." If that principle alone is sufficient, why should it not be applied to morals as well as to theology, and to practical as well as to speculative morals too? Either the philosophy of individualistic liberalism must be reformed so radically as to become scientific liberalism, recognizing universal reason as a principle just as necessary as that of private judgment, or else all the "extravagances" of the crazy and the vicious must be treated with no less respect than the acts of the wisest and most virtuous, and equally defended before the world as sanctioned by the genius of liberalism. Brought to this crucial test, individualism, despite its often splendid record in literature and life, degenerates into contempt for human experience, defiance of universal reason, and insurrection against the moral law. As a socio-moral philosophy, it is a total and irremediable failure. And liberalism, if it is inseparable from this philosophy, will prove a failure too.

II. Liberalism needs a great reform in its practical educational influence.

The necessity of this reform is an immediate consequence of the defect in philosophy which has just been pointed out. Being unconscious of the principle of universal reason, which establishes the Consensus of the Competent as the final appeal in morals, and constitutes in itself the common bond uniting all individuals into a permanent society, individualism necessarily fails in educating even the individual aright. It contributes nothing to the culture of his individual conscience as subject to law outside of his own individuality, and especially as a factor of that "Corporate Conscience" which we dwelt upon at length a fortnight ago. It busies itself solely with individuals as such, and does not concern itself in the least with their mutual relations as partners in associated activity. Hence it may point to noble representative individuals (prudently omitting all mention of those who fall into the "extravagances" above alluded to); but it cannot point to noble representative citizens, fully alive to all their social relations and ready at all times to act accordingly. The tendency of individualism is all in the other direction. It educates men to be inensible of the moral quality of collective acts; it extinguishes the sense of responsibility in all but purely individual relations; it blunts and dulls the conscience in all that relates to society as a whole. If those who are individualists in their general philosophy of life manifest (as they have sometimes done) a strong social as well as individual conscience, it is only by a "glorious inconsistency"; they never got it from their individualism, but from the fact that it is impossible for any man but an eremite to be a thoroughly consistent individualist. Just so far as liberalism remains in the individualistic stage, it tends to discourage the application of conscience to the management of collective affairs, whether in the nation or in minor organizations. National morality, corporate morality, social morality, public morality of any kind, are non-existent to individualism; it denies everything of the sort except individual morality, and if that chances to be individual immorality, it finds itself both logically and practically powerless to condemn it, since the individual's "right of private judgment" covers that case too. Hence liberalism of this type is utterly inefficient in its educational influence even over the individual, for it confines the scope of his moral life to the petty circle of his private relations. What would become of the modern world with the vast multiplication of its associated activities, were it not that the belittling effect of such an influence as this is largely counteracted by a correspondingly vast multiplication of "glorious inconsistencies"? The one crying need of the age is of more conscience, both in private and public affairs. Is the voice of liberalism to be indeed for less of it?

The question is a pertinent one. The whole movement for the repeal of the postal law of 1878 rests ultimately on the utter negation of all national morality. In the words of Mr. J. F. Pickering, one of Mr. Heywood's counsel: "We have no national or State morality, religion, or politics." That statement is the reductio ad absurdum of individualism, of all liberalism that builds upon it, and of the "repeal" movement that grew out of it. Is not good faith with the public creditors a matter of national morality? Is not the faithful observance of treaties with foreign nations a matter of national morality? Are not the administration of justice, the protection of rights, the redress of wrongs, the enactment of righteous laws, etc., matters of national morality? If the imprisonment of men by the United States courts for their opinions is not a case of national immorality, how is it a wrong at all, and for what are the "repeal" party so much exercised? Such questions need no answer. But they expose the utter imbecility of individualistic liberalism in dealing with public affairs, all of which demand public conscience in government and citizens alike,—the utter inefficiency of it as a practical educational influence.

We repeat that liberalism needs to be itself radically reformed, first of all in its philosophy, and consequently in its educational moral influence. As it now suffers itself to be represented to the world, it is behind the age. The next step in the process of its evolution is to pass from the individualistic to the scientific stage; and this step, supplementing the principle of private judgment with the principle of universal reason, will lead to a great elevation in its intellectual character and its moral influence and tone. These reforms in liberalism itself are so overshadowingly important that they crowd other things out of present consideration. They are not only possible, but inevitable, if the liberals themselves are not stolidly conservative. Their first interest to-day is a thoroughly REFORMED LIBERALISM.

RESURRECTION OF THE CATECHISM.

The Rev. Dorus Clarke, D.D., delivered on the 4th of Dec., 1878, before the New England Historical-Genealogical Society, a serio-comic address, under the title "Saying the Catechism," which is now published, and our readers will find it exceedingly amusing as well as instructive.

Said the Rev. Doctor, "I hold in my hand a very small book, which perhaps some of you, in all your researches through the large libraries in this country and in Europe, have never discovered. I know not who compiled it, but it has done more to form the New England character than any book except the Bible. Allow me, then, to introduce you to the New England Primer. Here we have, among many other things, this important information:—

"In Adam's fall
We sinned all."
"The cat doth play
And after slay."
"The dog doth bite
The thief at night."

And so on."

The Rev. Doctor then goes on to describe the grim old compend of theology drawn up by the "Westminster Assembly of Divines," who, he says, "sat more than five years, and held one thousand one hundred and sixty-three sessions," in forging the "confession of faith and the longer and shorter catechisms," the mental fetters which, in times that some of us can remember, were remorselessly applied to every infant mind, by the united power of Church and State and a vast amount of maternal spanking. He seems to think that the release of this generation from these fetters is the cause of all the troubles that now afflict or threaten the world, and the reader is left plainly to infer that the resurrection of the catechism and its compulsory infliction upon all children as it was inflicted upon those of his native town of Westhampton, in the days of his childhood, would harmonize "the unsettled relations of capital and labor," and save us from the "earthquake," "the initial heavings" of which, he says, "we feel beneath our feet." In all humility we would suggest to the reverend gentleman that it would be more effectual to that desirable end, if the churches would take their feet off the dangerous classes by honestly paying taxes on church property, and frowning a little on their rich members who take advantage of their riches to oppress the poor, and are false to their trusts. A rich pauper church cannot mend pauperism, atheism, or communism much by teaching a recalcitrant infant to say, "The covenant being made with Adam, not only for himself, but for his posterity, all mankind, descending from him by ordinary generation, sinned in him, and fell with him in his first transgression." Nor could it do more to annihilate all foundation for morality than by teaching a child to repeat and believe the catechism's creed of fatalism, which the Rev. Dorus Clarke, D.D., quotes as a "rock of truth," against which "the waves of criticism have dashed for more than two centuries, and have made no impression."

This astounding interrogatory, with the answer, in flat contradiction of every child's consciousness of freedom, is as follows:—

"Q.—What are the decrees of God?"

"A.—The decrees of God are His eternal purpose, according to the counsel of His own will, whereby, for His own glory, He hath preordained whatsoever comes to pass."

It is lucky for human society that such a doctrine is credible only by fools. The Christian Church has taught it ever since a Christian Church existed. Here is a supremely selfish God, creating souls with a consciousness of choice which is a pure sham, inasmuch as their destiny, for an eternal heaven or an eternal hell, is foreordained from all eternity by an omnipotent and irrevocable will. If such an invention, in the hands of a powerful and privileged priesthood, cannot drive men into "atheistic and destructive communism," nothing can. It is one of the causes which have been all the while doing it for nearly two thousand years. Now since men have burst the shackles of that catechism to think for themselves, and have found out that men existed long before Adam, and too low to fall in him, and that the writers of the Bible were just as ignorant of the will and purposes of the Infinite God as themselves, human society, though far from pure and perfect, has been rising faster than ever before. Any old man who had his wits about him when a boy, and happens to have them still, must know that people are about as much less selfish now than they were sixty years ago as they are less ragged. Perhaps the high thieves steal more now, but it is because there is more to steal. The low ones certainly do not, even in the absence of locks.

If the straight-laced, cold, incomprehensible catechism, with hardly a particle of humanity in it, did so much for New England character, why did New England give it to the mice in the garret, till the book is the rarest curiosity of her antique literature?—hardly to be found perhaps in Westhampton.

In his "peroration" to this very amusing peep into the ancient history of New England, Doctor Clarke falls into a paroxysm of distress and sympathy with the endangered crowned heads of Europe which is quite touching. He also says, "In the United States 'universal suffrage' seems likely to be an universal danger. . . . The formation of secret communistic and socialistic societies all over Europe and the United States, all of them atheistic and destructive, and already claiming a membership of millions, and holding that they will soon have a majority of the voters in this country, and are now biding their time for their intended attack upon the government and social order and the rights of property—are all boding more serious evils than have yet befallen our beloved land."

Well, there is too much truth in this, and it is deplorable. We have already hinted how the Church might go a little way towards a remedy, while making itself more useful. Against the threatened raids on property and social order, in this land of free speech and free press, nothing can be done by fine, imprisonment, or militia till actual violence occurs, though one sort of Christians are itching to try their hands at it. But the communists, socialists, atheists, are all men and women, and more or less susceptible of impression by logic. Of course the clergy, of the Orthodox and prevailing order, have all the logic and reason on their side. Let them then invite into their pulpits the atheistic, communist, and socialist champions, to state their arguments and have them refuted.

Science and literature have done a great deal more for Christianity than it ever did for them. All science that is worthy of the name believes in God. Not much of it, however, believes in His personality or in His special incarnation and providence. It believes in the eternity of God, as the mind side of matter; but it no more believes that God created matter out of nothing than that it created Him. In the pitiable slang of the Church this is atheistic. Corporate Christianity has very much improved in its morals since it gave the Westminster catechism to the mice, whether the mice have or not. It gives more room for justice and humanity than when it endeavored to choke female abolitionists in Massachusetts by a "Pastoral Letter." Still it might have a great deal more manhood and truthfulness. Its ministers, safe in their consecrated pulpits from all question or contradiction, still solemnly spout more or less fancy for fact, Sunday after Sunday, and too many of them either lie all unbelievers of a scientific cast into devils, as they or their fathers did the two great Thomases, Paine and Jefferson, or lie them into the Christian fold, as they have Franklin, Lincoln, Gerrit Smith, and Charles Sumner, and steal for Christianity all the credit of their virtues. E. W.

A HOPEFUL VIEW.

It was not difficult to foresee, months ago, that the protest of liberals against the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood—a protest which was most just and timely—would be unfairly construed into an indorsement by them of his social theories, and that their demand for the repeal or modification of the so-called Comstock postal-law would unjustly subject them to the charge of being in sympathy with the vendors of vile literature. It was quite as clear that zealous advocates of the free-love theory would be unusually active, and that, through the persecution of their leader, the circulation of their literature would be greatly increased; that the clergy and the religious press of the country would, to the extent of their ability, avail themselves of this state of things to identify in the public mind the cause of freethought with the theory of free love, and even with the crime of circulating obscene books and pictures to corrupt the morals of youth, and that they would not be wholly unsuccessful in causing this impression to obtain among their more ignorant and indiscriminating adherents. All this was evident months ago, and my statement of what would follow the imprisonment of Heywood and the attitude of liberals toward the Comstock law—in the last address I gave in Paine Hall last September—has been, so far, confirmed by events which have transpired,—to foresee which, however, required neither the "gift of prophecy" nor any extraordinary sagacity.

In the same address I expressed the opinion quite as confidently, that the special prominence into which the free-love movement—almost insignificant in itself—would be pushed by the imprisonment of its leader, and by the intimate affiliation of his adherents with freethinkers in protesting against that imprisonment and maintaining Heywood's right to publish his views, and by the effort of Orthodox preachers and papers to confound freethought with free love, was likely to be of short duration. I was satisfied that neither the position into which freethinkers were forced by the demands of justice and right, nor the attempts of the clergy and religious journals to make the public believe opposition to marriage a necessary or legitimate part of the liberal movement, would cause any deep or permanent impression that liberalism and free love are in any way related to each other. I entertain the same opinion now. The great mass of liberals have no sympathy whatever with the advocates of free love in the flimsy and foolish theory they present in regard to the relation of the sexes; nor has the theory either the moral power in it, or the intellectual force behind it, to gain for it adherents among intelligent, well-balanced minds, or to command for it enough importance with thinkers to make it a matter of serious discussion.

"The lowest groups of primitive men, without political organization," says Herbert Spencer, "are also without anything worthy to be called domestic organization; the relations of the sexes and those of parents to offspring are scarcely above those of brutes. Contrariwise, all civilized nations, characterized by definite, coherent, orderly social arrangements, are also characterized by definite, coherent, orderly family arrangements. Hence we cannot doubt that, spite of irregularities, the developments of the two are associated in a general way."

And "it is manifest that monogamy has long been growing innate, in civilized man; all the ideas and sentiments that have become associated with marriage having, as their necessary implication, the singleness of the union."

The free-love theory is not likely to command much attention except when it is brought into prominence in connection with some other movement, or when its leaders—who have as much right to advocate their views as I have to criticize them—are treated in a manner to elicit the sympathy and call forth the protest of just and liberty-loving men and women. The more intelligent and candid Christians are beginning to see and to admit, because they are beginning to understand, that the protest against Heywood's unjust sentence involves no indorsement of, or sympathy with, his theories, and that the criticisms by liberals of the law under which he was convicted furnish no just ground for the charge that the freethinkers of this country are in favor of obscenity. And the position taken by the majority of the Liberal League at Syracuse, even though unwise, it will be seen and admitted by the intelligent and fair-minded, involves no reflection on the character of its adherents and no sympathy with either the writers or disseminators of lewd literature.

When differences among liberals on this subject shall be forgotten, and the falsehoods of "Cook the calumniator" with their author shall have passed from the memory of men, the great cause of liberalism will continue to advance, diffusing knowledge and happiness, and the principles of the Liberal League, adopted and embodied in our government, will secure equal and exact justice to all, even to the descendants of the zealots and demagogues who slander the men and women now working for their triumph. B. F. U.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. E.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Archbishop Purcell is in debt $5,000,000.

Anthrax was first used for fuel in 1812.

Cuban planters are emancipating their slaves.

Man has the right to his own property, not to another's.

Three hundred papers and periodicals are published in Sweden.

A steamboat pilled in American waters for the first time in 1785.

Mr. Underwood will be in the West until some time in May.

Massachusetts has twenty-three thousand unemployed persons.

Paris ate eleven thousand three hundred and nineteen horses last year.

There are about six million five hundred thousand Jews in the entire world.

The screw for navigation purposes was invented in 1804 by Col. John Stevens.

England's first opera was performed in 1656. It was entitled the "Siege of Rhodes."

Six years ago there was but one Christian church in Japan. Now there are thirty-six.

Beecher says Blaine is all wrong on the Chinese question. The President has set him right.

Protestant lectures on Protestantism draw crowded and enthusiastic houses in all parts of France.

Scientific men think the bed of the Pacific was once partly above water, and was inhabited by men.

Spain has sixteen thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine students in her universities this year.

Col. Ingersoll is lecturing in the Middle States on his way out West. He speaks nearly every night.

In 1878 there were twenty-nine thousand one hundred and ninety-seven convicts in the United States.

Dr. Fabre, Bishop of Montreal, has prohibited female singers in the choir of his diocese after June 1st.

A dozen clergymen of San Francisco sent a request to the President to sign the Chinese bill, but he did not.

Cornell's "Baron de Fondrières" has the questionable honor of being the first play that ever was hissed.

The annual products of the mechanical industries of this country amount to five thousand million dollars.

It is estimated that it requires just twice the time to go to a prayer-meeting that it takes to return from it.

The government of Uri have given final orders for the demolition of Tell's Chapel on the Lake of the Four Cantons.

A project is on foot for constructing a line of telegraphic communication from end to end of the continent of Africa.

Ralph Waldo Emerson's lawn at Concord is said to be the favorite gathering place of the young people and children of that pleasant town.

The old Alexandrian library contained seven hundred thousand volumes, the largest ever brought together before the invention of printing.

The Duke of Sutherland, of England, owns one million three hundred and fifty-eight thousand four hundred and twenty-five acres of land.

A new sect of Mormons has sprung up in Southern Indiana. It is distinguished for all the superstition of Utah Mormonism, save Bible polygamy.

Dr. Schlemann exhumed in the royal palace at Troy a dagger believed to be made of meteoric steel. He has deposited it in the British Museum.

Near the site of Jacob's well in the city of Samaria, Palestine, there is a Baptist church with a congregation numbering about one hundred.

Because President Grévy did not appeal to any higher power than the people in his inaugural message, our Christian friends fear he is a free-religionist.

Prof. Barff has refused an offer of $1,250,000 for the patent rights of his process for the permanent protection of iron from rust and atmospheric influences.

It is said that the census of 1880 will show such an increase of population as will give sixty-six more representatives in Congress, most of them to the North.

Insanity at the present time bears a higher ratio to the whole number of the population, both in Europe and this country, than at any former period of history.

The Christian Union calls the Oneida Community "an organized system of animalism." There are people who think some other Christian societies come under that head.

The Suez Canal is one hundred and two miles in length, and the port of Suez is becoming increasingly influential in consequence of the extensive traffic through the canal.

Mr. S. H. Hamilton, of Bushnell, Illinois, is said to produce successful imitations of hard wood lumber out of common wheat straw, with all the effect of polish and finish.

Dr. Charcot has shown that the abnormal nervous conditions known as catalepsy and somnambulism may be easily produced in predisposed persons, more particularly females.

There is noted an extraordinary decrease in the number of students of theology in the German universities. We hope the students have chosen to study some better subject.

In 1500 the popes possessed a theatre with decorations and machinery. The paintings in this edifice were by Balthazar Peruzzi, who may be said to be the father of scene painting.

Spanish nobility is divided up as follows: ninety-two dukes, eight hundred and sixty-six marquises, six hundred and thirty-two counts, ninety-two viscounts and ninety-eight barons.

In Calcutta there are one hundred and ninety-nine Hindu temples; one hundred and seventeen Mohammedan mosques; thirty-one Christian churches; and twenty-seven Jewish synagogues.

One of our colored orators, in speaking a few years ago upon the then much-mooted question of negro emancipation, said: "Color is a mere matter of taste. They paint their devils white in Africa."

There are five thousand seven hundred and thirty public schools in this State. The number of pupils attending these schools, of all ages, is three hundred and ten thousand one hundred and eighty-one.

In the Kingdom of Great Britain there are published one thousand seven hundred and sixty-three papers and nine hundred and fifty-three magazines, of which latter publications two hundred and sixty-four are of a decidedly religious character.

A writer in one of our liberal papers says that Universalist meeting-houses stand in the State of Maine on a hundred hills, black, ghastly, seldom occupied, and many of them abandoned entirely and only occupied as habitations for the fowls of the air.

The Declaration of Independence says: "All men are created free and equal." Mr. Blaine says—all but the Chinamen. Gen. Sherman says—all but the red men. The Democratic party says—all but the black men. And the Republican party says—all but the Irishmen.

A committee of the New York Legislature has been directed to examine and report upon the expediency, equity, and justice of imposing a tax upon all property owned by churches and church corporations not absolutely used for religious, educational, and burial purposes.

Tyndall says fifty thousand typhus germs will thrive in the circumference of a pin-head or a visible globule. These germs may be desiccated and be borne, like thistle seeds, everywhere, but a water temperature of one hundred and twenty degrees boils them to death, and soap chemically poisons them.

A petition has been drawn up for presentation to the Legislature of Illinois, praying for an enactment which shall provide that in all localities in the State the sale of intoxicating drinks, including wine and beer, shall be determined by ballot, and that women, under the same conditions as men, shall be allowed to vote.

The number of religious houses suppressed in Italy from 1855 (Rome excepted) is four thousand two hundred and forty-four,—namely, three thousand and thirty-seven monasteries of friars and one thousand two hundred and seven convents for nuns. By this suppression the Italian government appropriated nearly 492,000,000 of lire.

The Liberal League of Milwaukee has issued a handsome circular, entitled "A Self-supporting Church," for distribution among the liberals of that city and members of the State Legislature at Madison. It contains the extract entire from the New York Evening Post which was recently published in THE INDEX, regarding the separation of Church and State, etc.

Dr. Vanderweyde defends Darwinism from the imputation that it leads to infidelity and atheism. He says the Darwinian theory touches only the manner of creation, and does not dispute creation itself. He also declares that Darwinism does not teach that man came from a monkey, but merely the possibility that the highest type of monkey may become developed into human form.

When Père Hyacinthe opened his new church in Paris, Feb. 9, three times as many people came as the church could hold. When the doors were opened the rush to get in was tremendous, many persons of both sexes being thrown down and walked over. Inside the chapel the scene was "scandalous, not to say sacrilegious." Women and men both used violence against the guardians of the reserved seats.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Milwaukee has arranged for a course of free popular medical lectures. The subjects announced are of an interesting and instructive character. This movement indicates that the attention of this body has at length been called to the question of physical morality. Pertinent lessons upon the laws of life and health will be a wholesome supplement to gospel readings and noon prayer-meetings.

Rev. M. J. Savage, on Sunday, March 2, preached a sensible sermon on "The Church and the Theatre." He thought "the church which harbors such men as Pond, Winslow, and Glasgow bank-robbers was not the one to attempt to reform the theatre, which honors such men as Booth and McCullough, and such women as Mrs. Barry and Mrs. Vincent. The stage cannot be raised by a church which points the finger of scorn at an impure actress, and gives her seducer a seat in the broad aisle, and accepts his money gratefully to send the gospel to the heathen."

Mr. B. F. Underwood dealt some good hard blows at spurious liberalism in Paine Hall, on Sunday, March 2. He protested against the dangerous and injurious liberalism which panders to vice and immorality, but bravely and eloquently defended true liberalism, which advocates freethought and equal rights, and which was moral in word and life. The discourse was peculiarly fitted to the times, and was delivered in the right place. Mr. Underwood also paid his honest compliments to Rev. J. Cook, in the afternoon of the same day, and showed that the Rev. Mr. Cook is not a trustworthy man, but misrepresents and falsifies facts in regard to free religion, liberals, and everything which is not Christian.

A novel method of cloud measurement is proposed by J. F. Wilke in a letter to Nature. He suggests the employment of an electric lamp sending a beam of light to the clouds. The spot where the light meets the latter will be more or less visible, and it is obvious that by this method we would be able to determine trigonometrically the height of the cloud. He thinks that by using two lamps, or a lamp and two reflectors, one may easily find also the rate at which clouds travel, by bringing the plane passing through the axes of the beams of light parallel to the direction in which the clouds move, and by noting the time it takes a cloud to travel from one beam of light to the other, having, of course, determined also the actual distance between the two spots of light on the clouds. The above refers to observations during the night only, but by making use of colored light we might probably be able to work also during daytime.

One of the greatest obstacles to the reformation or right formation of the world has been the false estimate of human nature which has obtained in the past. The first step towards having a better man is to have a better idea of man. The prevailing sentiment in regard to humanity, that vices better represent its natural character than do virtues, is a slander on human capabilities. We do not believe that a good deed is a miracle. It is the natural blossom of the human heart, the legitimate fruit of human nature. The fact that man is capable of performing a good act points out the intention of his creation. The law of evolution reigns in the world of mind as well as in the world of matter. Natural selection will preserve the strongest, truest, and fittest ideas. Faith in human ability will succeed faith in human depravity, and with this faith will come a humanity sweeter, fairer, and higher. Let us quote good facts, not bad ones. We admit bad facts, but we do not propose to surrender the world to their authority. We must deny the old notions of depravity, yea, deny them, and assert man's superiority to them.

We believe that the large majority of workingmen are sincere in their desire to work; but there is a class in our country that is ready to overturn society and plunder the nation. This movement has already shown its intention. It is a movement of idle men against workingmen; of loafers against laborers; of lawlessness against order; of the desire for property against the possession of property. Man's right to life and property must be respected. Men who are willing to work can justly urge their claim to the consideration of the world, and have a right to protest against the present hard times. We are in sympathy with the laboring classes,—as they are called,—but believe that their grievances can find redress in order, not in riot; in law, not in license; in patience, not in blows. The laborer is opposed to the idler on the street as well as to the idler in the club or parlor. It is a mistake to suppose that every idle good-for-nothing who spends his time in saloons and other public lounging places is to be counted as an abused, down-trodden man. We do not believe that laziness is to be supported by industry; and the sooner the laboring man cuts adrift from the lazy element in society, the sooner will he stand where his complaints will deserve recognition.

Communications.

CARD FROM THE ITHACA LEAGUE.

ITHACA, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1879.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your paper of the 20th inst. is a reference to the decision of the Ithaca League to retain its present affiliation with the old National League. Least our influence should count upon what we consider to be the wrong side of an important public question, I am instructed to ask for the courtesy of your columns to state to your readers the grounds of the position which we have held ever since the Syracuse Congress, as we have given them in our letters of reply to the officers of both National Leagues.

We are almost unanimously in favor of reforming, but not repealing, the Comstock postal law; and probably we shall not remain with the old League if it commits itself to repeal. But we think that it has not yet thus committed itself, and we hope that it will never do so; while it is distinctly committed to the suppression of obscene literature by all proper and constitutional means. So thinking, we cannot assent to the charges of bad faith made against the majority of the Syracuse Convention by the seceding body; and unless some action of the parent League, or of its Directors, shall tend to put us in a false position, we see no reason for leaving it, nor can we do so honorably.

By order of the Directors of the Liberal League of Tompkins County, N. Y.

W. R. LAZENBY, Sec'y.

[The local Leagues have an unquestioned and undoubted right to act for themselves independently, and to take whatever position they choose on all subjects. In order to avoid unnecessary and painful controversy, we have carefully forbore to criticise the action of any local League which has chosen to declare itself for "repeal"; and we very unwillingly find ourselves obliged to say anything now which the Ithaca League may consider criticism. For some of its leading members we have the strongest personal friendship of nearly twenty-five years' standing, and shall not permit any difference of opinion to interfere with it in any degree. But we cannot conscientiously leave the above "Card" to stand wholly without comment in these columns. Fealty to principle must be paramount to all personal considerations.

The Ithaca League is to be congratulated on being "almost unanimously in favor of reforming, but not repealing, the Comstock postal law." We wish it could also be congratulated on not suffering its "influence" to "count" on what they "consider to be the wrong side of an important public question." Unfortunately this is not the case. Notwithstanding their evident and praiseworthy desire to throw their influence on the side of "reform," their position is such as to defeat this very desire, because they still lend their public sanction to the National Liberal League, which has most unequivocally committed itself to "repeal." The general public perfectly understand this last-mentioned fact; both the majority and the minority of the Syracuse Congress perfectly understand it; only a very small number of individuals fail to understand it, who thereby show themselves very unfamiliar with the system by which public questions are uniformly settled in this country. For instance, in an unsuccessful attempt to answer Judge Hurlbut's argument, T. B. Wakeman cunningly pretends that the effect of Judge Hurlbut's address at the Syracuse Congress "was to largely increase the vote of the majority," and impudently presumes "to thank the Judge for increasing the majority for 'repeal.'" That the majority vote was practically a vote for "repeal," however, is too clear for rational doubt. It threw the entire management of the National League into the hands of the "repeal" party, and deprived the "reform" party of all voice in its executive council. How the mere omission to pass a formal resolution on the question at issue can deceive anybody, passes our comprehension. So transparent a trick would be laughed at in politics. Take a Presidential election, for instance. The people of the United States never declare their will by a formal resolution; they declare it solely by a change of administration—by voting one party out of power and another party into power. If the Democrats elect the next President of the United States, the Republicans will be utterly unable to point to any formal resolution as proof of a national change of policy; but not a sane man in America or Europe will question the fact of the change. By this most decisive of all possible expressions of the will of the majority—a sweeping change of administration—the National Liberal League publicly pledged itself to "repeal"; and the leaders of the Syracuse majority must needs laugh in their sleeves at the simplicity of the few whom they have deceived by a trick so palpable.

The resolute protest of the minority at Syracuse, expressed by withdrawal and reorganization on the original principles of the National Liberal League adopted at Philadelphia in 1876, is valid for themselves alone. All the local Leagues who omit to ratify this protest by their own independent and unequivocal action are still making their "influence count on the wrong side" of this vital question; they practically join, and are understood by the public to join, in that utter negation of all "national morality" which is the foundation of the "repeal" movement; they lend their public influence exclusively to the old National League in its unequivocal "repeal" position, and are under a woful hallucination so long as they imagine the contrary. The old and the new National Leagues represent two incompatible principles; and all the old Local Leagues give their moral support publicly to the old, unless they explicitly sustain the protest of the new. This is the unchangeable fact of the case, and time will make it clear at last to the most reluctant.—ED.]

REV. CHAS. BEECHER AND SPIRITUALISM.

I read weekly with much pleasure and profit "Notes and News," by L. K. Washburn; and, in my opinion, they are a valuable addition to THE INDEX. In the number for Feb. 20, I notice certain remarks by Mr. Washburn about Rev. Charles Beecher's new work on Spiritualism, that—unwittingly on the writer's part, no doubt—reflect somewhat unjustly upon Spiritualism and the mass of its adherents. Mr. Washburn says: "If Spiritualism is ashamed of its principles, let it abandon them, not try to disguise them with the mask of Christianity; but if it means anything distinct from the old dogmas, let it stand on its own faith honestly, or fall for lack of strength."

Were Mr. Beecher's views concerning Christian Spiritualism representative of those of Spiritualists generally, the above remarks would have full force; but such is far from the case. Mr. Beecher in his unique production, in all probability, voices the opinions of no one but himself; the views therein expressed are the outcome of his personal excogitations, and, previous to his recent publication thereof, were unknown in the world. They do not represent the views of Christian Spiritualists even, who, be it remembered, constitute but an unimportant wing of the great spiritual army. I doubt if Mr. Beecher will be able to find a dozen pronounced Spiritualists who will indorse his peculiar and outré speculations concerning preëxistence, evil spirits, personal devil, or his unscientific and purely subjective biblical exegesis. Such ideas are repudiated by the great body of Spiritualists, and scarcely a dozen pages of his book would be received as embodying the truth by any well informed Spiritualist.

Spiritualism should not be held responsible for the vagaries of Mr. Beecher. His attempt to weld together Christianity and Spiritualism will never be consummated. The two are antithetical; their genius and spirit are antipodal. A few Spiritualists, not fully emancipated from the bondage of old-time traditions, may attempt to place Spiritualism upon a Christian basis; but such efforts always ultimate in signal failure. Spiritualism does mean something "distinct from the old dogmas"; in its highest expression, it plants itself firmly upon the platform of Free Religion. Character, not faith or belief, is the test of the life with it; it has no formulated creed, but freedom of thought, speech, and action it posits as the inalienable prerogative of all humanity.

When Mr. Beecher says, "Many, perhaps most, Spiritualists would be willing to add, that the Bible is substantially true as a history, and contains the best religion yet known, and a code of morals that cannot be shown to have any defects," he is decidedly in error. Very few, if any, Spiritualists would indorse so sweeping an assertion. As a class, Spiritualists do not regard the Bible religion as the best known, nor its code of morals an indefectible one; but, on the contrary, they are not slow in freely criticising both its religion and its ethical code.

Mr. Beecher's work, I am convinced, is capable of producing much harm in the world, owing to the large preponderance of irrational and unscientific dogma therein enunciated; while, as regards the good it may be capable of compassing, I consider it infinitesimal. WILLIAM EMMETTE COLEMAN.
FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Feb. 25, 1879.

NADESCHDA.

NADESCHDA. A Poem in Nine Cantos, by Johan Ludvig Runeberg. Translated from the Swedish by Marie A. Brown.

Runeberg is by birth a Finn. He was born in 1804. About the year 1827, he began his first work, the Elk-Hunters, a poem illustrative of peasant life in Finland. After this followed at intervals lyrics, epics, and tragedies. He is called the "folk-bard" of the North, and is said to be "widely known and loved, not only in the North, but in a great part of cultivated Europe." His greatest works are written in Swedish, and the most of them have been translated into Finnish, Norwegian, Danish, and German, and separate poems have been rendered into French, English, and Russian.

The scene of Nadeschda is laid in Russia. The heroine of that name is a serf girl, living upon the banks of a brook that finally makes its way into the Volga. She comes before the vision in this wise:—

On the brooklet's flowing banks, alone,
Strolled a maiden, but fifteen in years;
She, a flower, other flowers sought,
And with flowers, flowers intertwined.

Many hours had been thus sweetly spent;
On her head already was a wreath
Of stellaria and anemones,
On her breast a freshly-opened rose,
With a rosebud that had grown beside,
And around her slender, pliant waist
She a girdle wore of violets.

Yet withal she bound a rich festoon,
This to edge her dress, and softly spoke:
"If he came, the handsome, stranger youth;
If I saw his dark eyes flash again,
Just as I have seen him in my dreams,—
Then with flowers would I cover me,
Brightly hide the serf-girl's sombre garb,
And, in hue like roses animate,
Welcome him with fragrance and with bloom;
But oh! Saint George, he cometh not,
Dream unreal is Nadeschda's love."

This serves as the key-note of the poem, whose melody, amidst the lights and shades of changing fortune, with its happiness and anguish, is tenderly and beautifully wrought out.

In rendering into English this Scandinavian poem, and at the same time endeavoring to preserve the original form and measure, Miss Brown has accomplished a task which should be duly appreciated. It is published in Boston by herself. Her post-office address is Box 900, and she, undoubtedly, would promptly respond to any orders she might receive.

A. H.

TWO LADIES, both of them a little dull in the hearing, were in church one day, when the minister had for his text, "Except you repent ye shall all likewise perish." They listened patiently enough, but when they got out the one said to the other: "Jenet, wassa yon an awfu' text the minister had the day?"—"Except we pay our rent, we're a' to be putten out o' the parish."

"WHEN I MARRIED," said ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer Lowe, "I declared, 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow,' although I hadn't a shilling in the world." "But," chimed in the wife, "you had your splendid talents." "Yes, my dear; but you know I didn't endow you with them," was the right honorable gentleman's reply.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBINS.
 Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
 THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,
 OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,
 A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"); with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "the Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1863 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shaw's Story.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BAUCON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.50
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	1.75
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.50
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.50
The Rising Faith.....	2.50
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. All volumes sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.50
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thomson: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
DOBBS (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1.50

Historical Pictures Etched, a Volume of Miscellanea. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Portraits, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DECAIERS (HENRI). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUNNING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compulsory.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Memoirs.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (R. F. P. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gethold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	4.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. in England. Book II. in Scotland. Book III. in France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GALL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.25
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.50
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.50
Suburban Sketches.....	2.50
Venetian Life.....	2.50
Italian Journeys.....	2.50
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.50
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	1.75
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mouldings of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses from a Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.5
The Ghosts, &c.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. 2. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell-Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandesley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by H. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Begun Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERB (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. E.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Disquisitions and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one volume.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	1.50
Bouffault, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISA CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
On the Science of Language. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	3.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	1.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	1.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Sketches from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	1.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.50
PELLEPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTER (EDWARD A.) Other Works than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnets, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	1.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.50
ROBBETTS (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHWELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., &c. Flexible cloth.....	.50
SOOTH'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SOOTH'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Ethics. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	4.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authoritative Translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Book Tains. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris and Irish Sketch Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Druce, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. OKLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.00
The Maine Woods.....	1.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Lectures.....	1.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.25
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.25
On Sound.....	1.25
Radiant Heat.....	1.25
Forms of Water.....	1.25
Lectures on Light.....	1.25
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITTLER (SABAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sting and the Snake. Vols. I and II, each.....	1.50
Vol. III, IV, and VI, each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIFFLES (R. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Obscure and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Panics. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA NEYMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Malden Lane, New York.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.
FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
...THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

P U B L I C A T I O N S

OF THE
NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal

League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Raymond, and others. The Grand Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

3. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 78 cts.; 100 copies, $1.56.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL.
Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N.E. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE DELEGATION OF YOUR MIND 43

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. AN ESSAY. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.
"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous writing."

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth,
$1.00.
"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A
Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel por-

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo.
With Portrait $2.00

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying:

"It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 462.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of "franchise, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE, for disinterested reasons, has withdrawn his candidature for the Tower Hamlets. But we yet hope to see him in Parliament. England has no braver or truer heart to represent her own highest interests.

THESE FORCIBLE WORDS are quoted from "a prominent Englishman": "The longer I live, the more I am certain that the difference between men, between the feeble and the powerful, the great and the insignificant, is energy—invincible determination—a purpose once fixed, and then death or victory. That quality will do anything that can be done in the world; and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunities, will make a two-legged creature a man without it."

THE FUNERAL of the Rev. John Weiss, March 12, was very impressive. The occasion itself was eloquent beyond expression, with the noble, beautiful face now motionless forever, yet consecrated with the unutterable repose and dignity of death. Dr. Bartol spoke feelingly, fittingly, sincerely, and tenderly of the departed. Rev. Edward E. Hale also said good words; but we wished he could have spared us all those ancient texts about the "Lamb" and the "Spirit and the Bride" which seemed so heathenish beside the silent yet speaking form of one whose whole life was lived in a higher atmosphere of religious thought. A great soul has passed its fire to human eyes, and sunk below our narrow horizon; but long will linger in our memories its magnificent sunset glow.

REV. DR. BARTOL published this feeling tribute to John Weiss in the Boston Advertiser, on the day after his death: "In reference to no man of this generation could it seem more absurdly untrue than of John Weiss, to say he is no more. His spirit has been a flame which we can but conceive as asking for more fuel, and, in the mortal body or not, never going out. The personal continuance, to use his own frequent phrase, he was so curious about could be more appropriate to the quality of no other person. From a centre of original force proceeded all his expression of look and tone. The style of no writer of the time we live in is more individually marked, and the moral was as deep in him as the imaginative stamp. His heroic fidelity to his convictions never flinched. Truth to what he thought, in his theology and in the hard days when the Moloch of slavery demanded and secured so many sacrifices for its shrine,—he maintained every grain and at whatsoever cost. His genius was alike rare in its critical and in its creative form, although it was for wide popular appreciation both too subtle and too deep. No shade of meaning in his own mind was beyond his power to indicate, or in another's page too latent and lurking for his sentiment to detect. He will be mourned by the constituency of an intellectual and spiritual brotherhood and sisterhood as characteristic in its endowments as was the master who, with a man's and woman's temper, refined their fancies to the utmost purity and raised their ideas of God and Nature to the loftiest pitch. It is too soon either to estimate his abilities or utter the grief we feel that his so extraordinary traits now cease on earth to be shown. We can only, in this opportunity of the single moment allowed, note the passing into that mystery of the unseen, none brooded over more wistfully than he, of an intelligence which was itself the lustre of a loving soul, as the flashes of day issue from the heat of the sun. For he too 'was a burning and a shining light.'"

SUNDAY before last we had an opportunity to see the Sunday-school of the Free Religious Society at Providence in operation. The total number of children is eighty-six, with an average attendance of seventy-two. The school meets at Barney's Hall every Sunday at one o'clock, and continues an hour and a quarter, the Society holding their own meeting at half-past two. Once a month there is a joint sociable of Society and School in the evening, and the children have also a sociable of their own every alternate Saturday afternoon. The "groups" and teachers in the school are as follows: on Comparative Religion, Messrs. F. A. Hinckley and George Adams; on Social Science, Mr. Eliza S. Aldrich; on Political Economy, Miss Fanny Palmer; on Physiology for adults, Dr. Harris (brother of Mr. W. T. Harris, of St. Louis); on Physiology for children, Miss Sarah Rarford and Miss Charlotte R. Howell; on Mineralogy, Mr. J. M. Southwick; on Botany, Mrs. J. J. Frye; on Design, Mr. Krantz; and a "little folks' group," Mrs. Elizabeth C. Hinckley. The busy hum of the room showed how much interest was taken in all these various studies, and the School was evidently prosperous, useful, and well-sustained. The Society flourishes finely under the charge of Mr. Hinckley, who is universally esteemed; the audience seemed to us larger than ever before, and a very hopeful, cheerful feeling was manifest respecting the Society's future. The present arrangement is that Mr. Hinckley lectures the first Sunday of each month, while lecturers from abroad are secured for the second and third Sundays; the fourth Sunday is devoted to a discussion meeting, with a paper by somebody, and the occasional fifth Sunday to public exercises of the School, each "group" making a report of progress orally or by a short paper, together with readings, recitations, singing, etc. The experiment of organization made by this excellent Society in 1874 seems to have resulted in a success as assured as it is well deserved; and the example thus set ought to encourage similar experiments elsewhere.

SAYS THE Christian Union of March 5: "How many of our readers realize the fact that the post-office is a Christian institution? There was never a true postal system prior to Christianity, and never has been one outside of nations that have felt the impulse of Christianity. Up to 1874, the only post in Persia was precisely that which Herodotus describes in the time of Xerxes. Royal orders were carried on horseback from the capital to the various cities of the realm, and people were allowed to send their letters in this post under limitation. An elaborate post-office system requires a larger measure of well-developed national honesty than is known in paganism. Mr. Riedener, an Austrian, was summoned into Persia by the Shah, after the latter's European tour, for the purpose of establishing a post-office system, and has achieved success so far that Persia has now obtained a regular and responsible postal establishment, and is reported to be ready to join the Postal Convention existing between other civilized nations." On this the Boston Herald of March 9 remarks: "How does THE INDEX like the claim of the Christian Union that 'the post-office is a Christian institution?' And that 'an elaborate post-office system requires a larger measure of well-developed national honesty than is known in paganism?' It is believed that there are a great many modern pagans, like those represented by THE INDEX and Investigator, with whom it would not be more unsafe to trust your letters than with the treasurer of a missionary society." A curious comment on this claim of the Christian Union is the following, taken from the same issue of the same paper, which explains the allusion in the Herald's closing words: "In the Religious News will be found a report of the final result of investigations in the case of Mr. Demond, the defuncting treasurer of the Home Missionary Society of Massachusetts. It is a sorrowful tale of flagrant fraud for a time concealed by falsehood. Nor can the Society, which allowed home missionaries to starve on the border while its treasurer was flogging from the funds contributed for their support, be adjudged wholly guiltless. The best way for a missionary society to invest is by paying the salaries of its missionaries."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. JAMES T. STON.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI E. EISENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 HANSH HAAS M. WISE.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLIER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT S. INGERHOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH W. STANTON.....Tombury, N. Y.
 MISS NELLIE HULLY.....Litchfield, Conn.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAWLEN.....321 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAWLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. S. MILLS.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALL, Selma.
 Arizona.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville.
 Florida.....D. GIDDINGS, Stargisville.
 Georgia.....DR. A. E. BELL, Milledgeville.
 Illinois.....G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
 Indiana.....DR. A. N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. NICHOLSON, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FAREWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. OLANK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....R. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....R. A. SAWYER, Boston.
 Michigan.....J. K. SCHENCKMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. S. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....W. T. THORN, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cincinnati.
 Oregon.....GEORGE LEWIS, Bismarck Basin.
 Rhode Island.....P. W. FULLER, Providence.
 South Carolina.....DR. E. H. PRICH, Chatterhouse.
 Tennessee.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Texas.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Vermont.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 Virginia.....DR. A. M. DEBT, Weston.
 West Virginia.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wisconsin.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 Wyoming.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chicago, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 MARLAN P. HYDE.....321 Washington St., Boston.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chicago, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 MARLAN P. HYDE.....321 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie O. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 JACKSONVILLE, Ill.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
 ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Hume H. Gale.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
 CHELSEA, Mass.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

Shylock, The Jew.

A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY OF CHICAGO, ILL., ON SATURDAY EVENING, DEC. 7, 1878.

BY REV. DR. K. KOHLER.

Ignorance is the mother of prejudice. Night's darkness fills the air with spectres unto the trembling child. Thus did the mediæval ages swarm with errors and superstitions, so that modern enlightenment appears to many to be merely a great dispeller of prejudices and follies. What a gloomy chapter in history forms the belief in witchcraft and the burning of witches! Yet it rested on nothing but dread of those heathen deities which the Church had extirpated by fire and sword, but not by mental culture. Still darker and by far more appalling is the chapter treating of the persecution of the Jews, the deeper cause of which was, no doubt, fear and awe of the wonderful race whose mental superiority and wealth, whose commercial success and proficiency in science, was attributed by an ignorant populace to the practice of sorcery and astrology. Hence, when the black death and other epidemics ravaged entire Europe, the Jews were charged with having poisoned the wells with Christian blood or Christian hearts while exercising their black art. When Christian children were missing, the Jews were massacred by the hundreds for having slaughtered them to use their blood for their Passover rites. And this raving madness continued until it reached its climax in the Holy Inquisition, whose victims, redounding to the great glory of the Church, amounted to about half a million of Jewish lives. Thanks to the glorious discoveries of new terrestrial and celestial worlds, the stake ceased to reflect its lurid lustre upon humanity. The thunders of the French revolution and the chimes of the bell of liberty in the City of Brotherly Love brought the obnoxious barriers between man and man to fall. The long-suppressed Jewish race was gradually raised to one level with their Christian fellow-citizens, to enjoy the same rights and opportunities of manifesting their talents on every field of life. Modern society has flung its doors wide open to admit the Jew to the bar and to Congress, or to any office of public honor and trust. Still the day of his full recognition as Jew is but slowly dawning. Prejudice, a deep-rooted heritage of the past, still bedevils his position and mars his influence in society. Lord Beaconsfield's antagonists can with all their "liberal" views forgive him anything but the fact of his having been cradled in a Jewish home. Our inquisitive age has applied its historical research to all the neglected and despised races and tribes on the globe, to do them justice, but the Jews. And if writers of eminence, like George Eliot, in England, or Prof. Schleider, in Germany, once dare break the ban, and portray a Jewish character in captivating beauty and overawing splendor, to reflect credit on the cursed nation, they are near being ostracized by the leaders and mouth-pieces of public opinion. It is of no avail to argue that their favorable opinion about Jews is due to a careful study of their brilliant history and literature; for, as the patriarch in Lessing's Nathan the Wise says, "It matters not; the Jew must be burned!"—the long-cherished common notion of beholding in a Shylock or a Fagin not a miscreant and a human wretch, but a Jew; nay, the Jew must, at any rate, be adhered to. But impartial justice demands a fair examination of the charges brought against the Jews as a class. And to this end I will now undertake to inquire first after the sources from which Shakespeare derived his Shylock, and then afterwards the causes which produced in the Christian mind this typical character of a Jewish usurer.

Before all, we must bear in mind that Shylock is as little an invention of Shakespeare as are his Hamlet, King Lear, and Othello. History and folk-lore, popular plays and fables, offered him the large store of material for his wondrously manifold masterpieces. All the plots and principal features of his dramas, to the very names of their chief persons, were, beyond question, furnished him by English authors preceding him. His great genius, however, turned these objects of popular fancy from mere phantoms into grand, awe-inspiring realities, by endowing them with human souls, deep motives, and mighty passions. Calling heaven and earth to help him display the gigantic struggle of the human heart, his magic pen created characters of unparalleled psychological truth, typical figures of everlasting value and impressiveness, as he took recourse to well-known dramatic figures.

Now, when in the year 1594 Shylock first appeared on the stage, with a huge red nose, a red wig, and a scarlet hat, as the central figure of the comic play, "The Merchant of Venice," at first also entitled "The Jew of Venice," he was intended to represent the Jewish character as conceived by the English people or entire Christendom. About five or six years previous Marlowe's "Jew of Malta," a perfect monster of a man and father by the significant name of Barabbas, had won the applause of the public. He, like Shylock, is a usurer of enormous wealth, whose only daughter Abigail flees from him horror-stricken at his rascalties. Still, to judge from the fame he attained, he far better suited the taste of the age, by showing more of the blood-thirstiness of the tiger and the madness of the demon, than does his Shakespearian copy.

Having by fraud and theft and every stratagem of reckless cunning amassed a fortune outweighing the wealth of large cities, and for mere fun's sake poisoned wells, and in many ways brought death on Christians, he is by a decree of the governor and senate compelled to leave all his possessions to the city for paying the exorbitant taxes imposed on her by the Turks, whereupon he commits a series of crimes of so horrible and revolting a nature that no fiend seems able thus to rage, until he is finally entrapped into the net-work of his own malice. "He from whom my most advantage comes, shall be my friend. This is the life we Jews are used to lead." He says:—

"We Jews can fawn like spaniels when we please;
 And when we grin, we bite; yet are our looks
 As innocent and harmless as a lamb's.
 "I learned in Florence how to kiss my hand,
 Heave up my shoulders when they call me dog,
 And duck as low as any bare-foot friar."

Such being the notion prevailing about the Jew, Shylock could but cut a comic figure on the stage, and, instead of tears of compassion, elicit an "unceremonious laughter" from his spectators by his fate.

Most likely, however, "The Jew of Venice" had been put on the stage long before Shakespeare's muse endowed him with immortality; for already in 1679 a play entitled "The Jew" is highly spoken of as "representing the greediness of worldly choosers and bloody minds of usurers." Indeed, inquiring after the sources which Shakespeare used for his "Merchant of Venice," we are only referred to Pecorone, an Italian collection of novels, written in 1578, but not printed before 1654, where the story occurs of a rich man of Venice, by the name of Ansaldo, who pledged a pound of his flesh to a Jew of the city of Meistri for ten thousand ducats borrowed in behalf of a friend going to sea to try his fortune in winning the hand of the much-adored lady of Belmont, and who would have forfeited his life but for the interference of this wise lady under the disguise of a judge at court. Only, instead of the three caskets deciding the fate of the lovers of the fair lady, another and much coarser form of trial is given there, whereas the story of the three caskets is contained in the Latin collection of fables called Gesta Romanorum. Yet, as there is no trace whatsoever found, in our poet's time, of an English translation of the Italian novel,* it seems much more probable that some author, before Shakespeare, acquainted with both the Italian and the Latin story, combined the two into a comic play, than that Shakespeare should first have done so. Even the curious name of Shylock, which can, I think, be only explained as a corruption of the German-Jewish name Selig, Selek, possessed, perhaps, by some hazardous Jew who crept into the city of London during Queen Elizabeth's reign, may have been derived by Shakespeare from that older play. That the story of "the Jew who would for his debt have a pound of flesh of a Christian" was then quite popular in England, can be learned from a ballad telling of the "cruelty of Gernutus the Jew," preserved in Percy's Reliques of English Poetry, and from a discourse alluding to the same story in The Orator, an English translation of French discourses, published in 1596.

Of course we are here only interested in the question whether the story is based on fiction or facts. Now, it is quite remarkable that from two different sides (the Italian historian Georgio Leti and the German anti-Jewish historian Schudt) we hear of a Jew by the name of Samson or Simon Ceneda (the name has a remarkable resemblance to the cruel Jew Gernutus!) having forfeited a pound of his flesh in a wager with a Christian merchant by the name of Paul Secchi, concerning the truthfulness of the report of the conquest of San Dominico by Admiral Francis Drake, in the year 1585, the Christian insisting on his bond, until Pope Sixtus V. decided the case in the following manner: The Christian is to pay two thousand scudi to the papal fisco for having attempted manslaughter, and so has the Jew for having hazarded his life, which, as a taxable property, belongs to the Pope. Here the Shylock was a Christian, and the wise judge anything but a Portia. Could not Shakespeare, nine years afterward, have learned the news and exchanged the roles of the Jew and the Christian, better to adapt the play to the taste of his audiences? It would be unfair to let the inquiry rest there. As has been mentioned before, the play which most likely served Shakespeare as a prototype is of a much older date than the event of that wager. In fact, the story has been told everywhere in different forms, and, therefore, is assumed to have occurred nowhere. The old Latin collection of novels, Gesta Romanorum, has also been found to contain the same story, but without mentioning a Jew as the cruel money-lender. And whereas several Oriental stories put a Moslem in the place of the unhappy Christian, and a Mohammedan judge in place of the fair Portia, we are told in an old Latin manuscript, written in England in the fourteenth century, of a man in Denmark, who, having by his great hospitality lost all his fortune, at last borrowed bread and wine in behalf of his guests from his brother, while pledging to him a pound of his flesh, and would have lost his life but for the contrivance of the royal prince to become the owner of the defendant's blood, and thus to forbid, under the penalty of death, the shedding of a single drop. But the pound-of-flesh story has also been detected in a series of questions of juridical casuistry among the Hindus and Romans, to leave no doubt about its original relation to the great problem of law and equity.

For, to start from the basis, primitive law built the right of possession upon might, without providing for the poor and weak ones. Hence the debtor who failed to repay the goods borrowed was, like the thief, committed, by the old Roman, Hindu, and German law, into the hands of his creditors, who could dispose of him as their property, unless he could compensate their losses. They were allowed to sell him as a slave, or to kill him; and, in case two parties laid claim on him, they could cut him into pieces to take their respective parts of his flesh, and, as the Roman twelve tables expressly state, without being held responsible for taking a larger or a smaller piece. Of course such cruelty could no longer be tolerated by an advanced culture, and the consideration of the human blood offered perhaps the best expedient to readjust an obsolete and rude law. Yet popular tradition could, in the course of time, ascribe such merciless dealings only to exceptional stipulations of single individuals. Yet who but money-lenders and usurers could be accused of such awful devices? Who but the rich Jews Selig or Shylock could be as pitiless as all that? Nothing could be easier than to lay the blame of such blood-thirstiness at the door of the Jew, whom Christian prejudice actually charged with searching after Christian blood for the sake of curing therewith leprosy and other maladies.

* According to Rolfe and Staunton, a translation of Pecorone in English was extant in Shakespeare's time.—Ed. Advance.

Having thus disposed of the pound-of-flesh story, it becomes my task to offer a historical explanation of Shylock, as the incarnation of Jewish usurers, before examining his case before a court of justice. To cast the responsibility for crimes committed by individuals upon the society which educated them, is certainly preposterous. It would disarm justice, and deprive law and morality of their soul. Still the fact remains indisputable that the Jewish usurer is the creation of the Christian Church and State. The Jewish people are from home an industrious race. Their God Himself is, unlike the ever-dreaming Brahma of the Hindus and the pleasure-seeking Olympian gods, the pattern of a great worker; and so is man made in his likeness to cultivate and improve the earth, not to roam about in idleness. It has been said usury is a kind of national propensity of the Jewish race, a hereditary sin; yet where did Abraham, whose maxim was to bless others, but to owe his own blessings only to God, betray any trace of the usurer? If Jacob's thrift, to which Shylock refers as being a "blessing if men steal it not," was far from being creditable to him, his life rather reflects the transjordanic Bedouin life of the Hebrews than that of the Israelitish nation settled in Canaan as agriculturists. There were no doubt some who might have, by the large Phœnician vessels, fraught with a world's merchandise, and the Arabian caravans trading to Egypt and Babylonia passing close by them, felt inclined to embark in commercial enterprise and financial speculations. But behold the holy wrath of the prophets, those fire-tongued advocates of mercy, against the wealthy tyrants who fed on the blood of the poor, and built their gardens and palaces of splendor upon the ruin of the needy. And so did the Mosaic law restrain commerce by forbidding usury among the Israelites and instituting Sabbatical years of release for those indebted and enslaved in consequence of poverty. Only agricultural and other really productive labor was encouraged by the Israelitish institutions. The disregard of the merchant's business led even so far as to render it one of the features of the Messianic time not to have any trader "enter the house of God." And this Hebrew love for the cultivation of the soil outlasted the State. The Jews became peace-loving agriculturists in Babylonia; and when Alexander the Great and Ptolemy, his successor, offered them large tracts of land in Africa, in reward for their military services, they proved excellent husbandmen and colonizers; and no less when they, under Roman and West Gothic rule, settled in the still uncultivated lands of Spain and Southern France.

Being, however, by the storm of destiny scattered over the wide globe, they could, of course, not attend to farming. The great centres of ancient commerce, as Babylon and Alexandria, Sidon and Antioch, offered them many inducements to turn into merchants, and to become heirs and successors to the large Phœnician and Babylonian trade, and woollen, silk, and linen manufacture. Their wide dispersion and connection with many lands and languages encouraged their endeavor and secured their success. Naturally enough, they were thenceforth, by continued persecutions and expulsions, urged along to commercial industry and financial enterprise. Thus from peaceable farmers and workmen they gradually became plucky and successful speculators in goods and money, commencing as peddlers and sutlers, and closing their career as princely merchants and envied rulers of the money market. They encompassed the world's traffic during the Middle Ages, until the rise of the great centres of European commerce. Everywhere in Spain, France, Italy, Germany, and Poland, kings and emperors, bishops and barons, offered them every possible inducement to transfer their trade and their woollen manufactures from the East to the barren West, and to import, partly on their own ships, the spices, the sugar, and other products of the far-off Orient, as well as the slaves, then quite indispensable to European industry. By their Mohammedan rulers, and also by their Christian successors in Spain, Jews were exclusively used as ministers of finance and commissioners of trade, they being found the ablest and the most trustworthy for these as well as for diplomatic and other charges of honor and responsibility. Consequently the entire medieval legislation preceding the rule of the canonical law treated and respected the Jew as the representative of traffic, local trade, and money exchange. In Charlemagne's capitularies he figures as the negotiator, par excellence, and as such he is in almost every European State held to pay his taxes, tolls, and fines in the shape of spices, sugar, and the like. Even all the personal taxes exacted from him were originally imposed on him only as a travelling business man.

As such, his services for society found recognition by every liberal and statesmanlike ruler in Christendom. The change was brought about by the rising power of a fanatic Church, and the increasing envy of an uncultured, yet extravagant, people. The Church, from the moment Arianism was successfully suppressed, directed with unerring purpose her whole zeal against the Jews as the only monotheists left in Europe. Prompted, not by love for humanity, but by policy, she first forbade them, as infidels, to hold slaves, while Christians still did; then she disputed and denied them the right to land-ownership, not resting until she had deprived them of all the civil rights once vouchsafed to them everywhere by the Romans. Being put outside of the pale of law, they were thrust at the mercy of some ruler who would for a certain stipulated sum offer them protection, to be thus degraded into a mere property owned by the State, or rather by its temporary ruler, like any other piece of goods. Nor is this all. Having thus been cheated and robbed of their old title to citizenship within the holy Roman Empire, they should be also dispossessed of the last prospect to heaven. Usury being, according to the Mosaic law, adopted by the Church for her own members, forbidden to Christians, was allowed to the Jews, money-lending and small trade being the only means left to them to provide for their lives. Thus greediness of gain was forced upon the Jew. Continued oppression and seclusion made him a cautious trader, a shrewd money dealer. Being liable at every moment to be expelled from the land he dwelt in, or to be divested of his fortune, he became, of course, anxious to transform all his wealth into transportable goods, into ducats and turquoises. These were the only weapons with which he sustained himself against the destructive plans of his persecutors; yea, the only means by which he could command the respect of his scorners and abusers. Shylock is the outgrowth, not of the Jewish character, but of Christian hatred. For, in fact, the value of money being not yet understood, economy and thrift were neither attained to by the State nor by private households, except by the Jews. They knew how to save by leading a sober and frugal life; the rest were spend-thrifts. Incessant warfare exhausted the wealth of the State; passion for tournaments, courtesies, and carousals, all the private fortune. What does the prodigal care for to-morrow? He willingly sacrifices his next year's income for an enjoyment of the hour. Kings and princes gave unto the Jewish capitalists their swords and diadems; bishops, the most sacred vessels and vestments of the Church, in pledge for a certain sum of money, to be squandered in revels and luxuries. Yet was the Jewish lender sure of ever recovering his money? The chance of having his fortune doubled in the course of two or three years induced him to run the risk. Yet his success made him, after all, so loathsome to his Christian fellow-man as to expose him to every abuse and outrage. A dozen times, warned by direful experiences, would the Jews of Spain and Portugal hesitate to lend money on interest, but had to give way to the entreaties of the people and their rulers. No sooner were they driven out of France, after having shortly before held almost the whole capital in bond, than they were solicited, and by the most favorable stipulations invited, to return and revive the trade and the money market. What they did for the rising industry and wealth of England we have as yet not ascertained, but we do know that Westminster Abbey was built by Jewish capital. The Inquisition and expulsion of the Jews from Spain and Portugal transplanted Jewish money and enterprise partly to Turkey, partly to the cities of Amsterdam and Hamburg, there to start large banking institutions, and greatly to help Holland in her East India trade and her South American colonies. Every State and commercial city in Italy, the papal dominion not excluded, granted, at least for some time, privileges to the Jews to flush the market with their capital, expelling them only when and where they expected to outdo them in taking usury, asking two hundred and sixty per cent. instead of forty-five, as asked by the Jews. The people of England alone had, since the close of the thirteenth century, no Jews on her island, and the memory of her own ungratefulness toward them upon her soil rendered them the more loathsome to her, and caused her, perhaps, the more to abuse single Jewish fugitives happening to land on her shore. It is a notorious fact that, in order to find an expedient to seize upon the great wealth once possessed by the Jews in England, charges of forgery were invented against them, which were afterwards proved to be unfounded. Nevertheless, the money and goods robbed of them remained in the hands of the mob, and the blemish and abuse unabated upon the Jewish name. The only excuse offered by King Henry III. for bringing the Jews almost to starvation, by the system of taxation imposed on them, was his own want of money. Only in consideration of their wealth or of their ability for providing State and people with money, were they tolerated or compelled to stay in the land, and then driven away like dogs. Of course, it is possible that some were unmindful enough sometimes to yield to the temptation of overcharging borrowers, and give thereby public offence. But then, as the German jurist Stobbe says, must we not rather pity the poor, who, being deprived of every wholesome food, indulges in eating the bad one which alone is offered to him? On the whole, the Jewish trader and money-lender was a social necessity. His wise economy furnished the large reservoirs of goods and capital for the nascent European commerce, and, when once superseded by the large German, Italian, Dutch, and English banking and commercial houses, still benefited the country by building smaller channels and outlets for trade and exchange.

Nevertheless, the unfortunate Jew became the laughing-stock of Christendom. Unequaled suffering bent and cowed his once noble stature. Yellow badges of infamy and red-horned caps exposed him, like hangmen and prostitutes, to public abuse. Thus he also appeared on the stage, like unhappy Samson, to make sport for merry England. The lot attributed to him could in no way, nor should it, ever elicit tears, but mirth; whether he was thrown into a boiling caldron to end there the life of a desperado, as Marlowe's "Jew of Malta" or as Shakespeare's Shylock, compelled by Christian love and mercy to renounce his daughter, his fortune, and at last his ancestral faith. By no means could he expect a favorable turn of his fate, unless popular sentiment might clip the poet's fame and influence.

Now, whereas Marlowe instils all the poisons and gall of Christian prejudice and antipathy into the soul of his Barabbas, to render him, as Jew, an unexampled monster, Shakespeare's masterly genius seized upon the popular notion to hold the Jewish usurer up as a type of, and mirror to, the vampires of society. Moreover, his Shylock is pervaded with a deeper human motive. He lent him a nation's soul. He makes him appeal to Christian sympathy by picturing the manner the Jew is treated by the populace. A prejudiced audience might laugh at his words; yet we to-day hear humanity's voice ringing through the Jew's breast, as he, in the third act, exclaims: "I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same summer and winter, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge?" And likewise as he, when first meeting Antonio, says:—

"Hath a dog money? Is it possible
A cur can lend thee three thousand ducats; or Shall I bend low, and in a bondsman's key,
With bated breath and whispering humbleness, say this:
Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last;
You spurned me such a day; another time
You called me dog; and for these courtesies
I'll lend you thus much monies?"

Shakespeare, willingly or unconsciously, made Judaism appear as the spirit of revenge, the law retaliating an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, as if the teachings of mercy and love were not first offered to mankind by Jewish teachers, before they were coined into Christian ones, when heralded by Jesus and St. John. In one very essential trait, Jewish life was certainly misrepresented by the English poet, and this is the in-door life. If cunning and shrewdness were applied by the Jews, as by all feeble and subdued beings in the wide realm of Nature, to shield their lives against hostile attacks from without, their souls never lacked sympathy and compassion. If the world around them appeared to them like a hell full of demons, their homes were gardens in bloom, rich with sentiment and joy. Behind their armory of defence and their schemes for gain, there beat a heart with love for wife and children, for the poor and those groaning under the yoke of servitude. Jewish home-life abounded with sweetness and bliss for all taking shelter there; it resounded with song and music; it was the most virtuous, the sweetest and holiest, ever found and cherished. To describe the Jewish father as a tyrant and a devil in his own house, is simply absurd. To call the Jewish home a gloomy hell, is to paint light in black. Yet this is done by Shakespeare, when he lets Jessica elope with her lover, without ever feeling remorse by thinking of a father's bleeding heart and recalling a dear mother's memory, or when he makes Launcelot Gobbo complain of his Jewish master's shabby way of feeding him.

Still greater is the injustice done by the poet to the Jew in the judgment scene. That English lady, who, with tears in her eyes, in Heinrich Heine's hearing, exclaimed: "Alas! the poor Jew is wronged," certainly reflected the voice of a higher justice than that felt even by the best and most enlightened interpreters of Shakespeare. One of the most eminent lawyers of our age, Dr. Rudolph von Jhering, in his pamphlet, The Struggle for Right, agrees with Shylock in the declaration that "there is no justice in Venice," if Shylock's bond is merely recognized by the judge as valid for the purpose of cheating the Jew out of his possession by the charge of an attempt at manslaughter. There was only one alternative before the court, and this was either to recognize the bond, with all its consequences, or to annul it. In both cases, Antonio's debt remains a moral obligation, and the court can either offer or refuse Shylock its help. Only a medieval Christian court of justice could defy the law and the rule of sound logic to rob the Jew of his whole fortune. Furthermore, the Jew is compelled to renounce his religion. Alas! the spectres of the Holy Inquisition rise before my mind, as I hear "the good and royal merchant" Antonio suggest this device, approved by the president of the court. Nor would I mind this, but for the ease and composure with which the Jew yields to this request, saying, "I am content." Aye, these three words might have spared unto millions of Jews their lives and saved them those fearful agonies, the description of which stuns the pulse of our heart as we read it in the bloody annals of Jewish history. No, and a thousand times no! Shylock has no Jewish blood in his veins, or else he would have spilled it to the last on the spot, using that very knife with which he had intended to ransom the pound of flesh pledged and sealed to him by Antonio. But let us not forget this would have spoiled the fun of "merry England." As to our age, Shylock is an anachronism and a nonentity. Our refined sense fails to enjoy the comic situation of the Jew as demanded by the Elizabethan age. The tragic lot of the medieval Jew too strongly pleads for our compassion with the usurer's fate to let us exult with Lorenzo over his fall. We are at a loss whether to laugh at the comical figure of Shylock the usurer being baptized and thereby saved, or to feel deeply sorry for an age which, having created a Shylock, finally condemned him to the gallows.

We hope and long for the conversion of sinners and criminals, but not of the Jews, and therefore behold in Jewish usurers—if there be still some left here and there—usurers, but no longer Jews. In fact, usury is by modern law and social science no longer regarded as a crime. I, from the standpoint of morality and religion, do not share these views. Human justice resents usury when and where it becomes a scourge and a torture to the poor instead of helping him. But we do not hold Christianity responsible for its Shylocks, Barabbases, and other sorts of criminals, nor ought we Judaism. As in one of Berthold Auerbach's novels, the Jew responds to the prejudiced Christian: "Why, you did not take an exclusive lease on penitentiaries, did you?" Jacob, having during the whole night wrestled with his foe until he had won the victory, would not loose hold of him before he had bestowed a blessing on him, recognizing him as the Lord's champion. Nor will humanity's great day of triumph have arisen in true splendor, unless the Christian and the Jew will have learned to bless each other and respect the man, God's image, in each.—Jewish Advance, Chicago.

JOHN WEISS.

The Rev. John Weiss died at his home in this city yesterday noon. He had been confined to his house since last June with a pulmonary trouble, but it was not until within a few weeks that it was feared that it would prove fatal, and only about a week ago that the symptoms became alarming. Since that time, however, the disease has made rapid progress, and his death will come as a painful surprise even to many of his friends who were aware of his illness. He was in full possession of his mental faculties up to the last, but for the last few days was unable to speak so as to make himself understood.

Mr. Weiss was born in Boston, June 28, 1818, and consequently lacked three months of sixty-one years of age at the time of his death. In boyhood he was a pupil of the Chauncy hall School, and afterward attended school at the Framingham Academy. He graduated at Harvard College in 1837; was subsequently employed in teaching in the Chauncy-hall School and at Jamaica Plain; and in 1840 entered the Cambridge Divinity School, from which he graduated in 1843. The winter of 1842-43 was spent by him in study at the Heidelberg University. On his graduation from the Divinity School he was ordained as pastor of the Unitarian church at Watertown, this State, as the successor of the Rev. Converse Francis, D.D. This was in 1843, and two years later he resigned his charge in consequence of his strong anti-slavery convictions. He was recalled, however, in April, 1846, but, again resigning his position, the next year he was installed as pastor of the First Congregational Society in New Bedford. Ill-health obliged him to surrender his new trust in the year 1850, and removing to Milton he engaged in lecturing, and also preached for the Hollis-street Church in this city. In June, 1862, he was once more invited back to the Watertown church, but declined the call that he might devote himself mainly to literary pursuits. In 1873 he removed to Boston, where he has since lived.

Among Mr. Weiss's lectures are several on Greek Religious Ideas; twelve lectures on Humor in Shakespeare and Shakespeare's Women; others on Topics of Free Religion. In 1845 he published an American and also an English edition of the Philosophical and Aesthetic Letters and Essays of Schiller, translated, with an introduction. The next year appeared a preface to an American edition of Smith's memoir of Fichte. In 1864 he published the Life and Correspondence of Theodore Parker, and in 1871, American Religion. From 1845 to 1874 he published forty sermons and lectures. Among these were notable utterances in relation to the free-soil movement, the rendition of Anthony Burns, and the general subject of slavery and the war. The list of Mr. Weiss's published magazine articles, essays, and poems include eleven in the Christian Examiner, from 1846 to 1860, the principal ones being two upon the German Catholic movement of John Ronge and the "Friend of Light," one upon Motley's Dutch Republic, one upon Thoreau, and one upon White's Shakespeare; sixteen in the Atlantic Monthly, among which are: "Some Soldier Poetry" and the "Horror of San Domingo," the latter being continued through several numbers; three poems in the Galaxy; an article on Hayti in Old and New; fourteen in the Radical, the most important being "Dangers of our Political Machinery," "Principles," "Religion and Science," "George Washington," "Man the Temple," "The Essential Jesus," "Natural Warnings," and "Woman Suffrage." Beside these there have been several other poems and various book reviews. These productions are marked by a striking originality and brilliancy of thought and expression, by an intense intellectual power and earnestness of conviction, and by an evidence of scholarly and literary attainments which gave to this radical preacher and author a leading position in the school to which he belonged. The last course of lectures delivered by Mr. Weiss in Boston was on "Implied Landscapes in Shakespeare," given in the spring of 1877; and these were marked by all his best literary characteristics, and attracted a wide attention among literary people. It is understood that Mr. Weiss has been of late engaged on a new book on the immortal life, and that an examination of his papers will disclose the manuscript of it; but it is not yet known how nearly completed it may be, or whether he left any directions for its publication after his death.—Boston Daily Advertiser, March 10.

The funeral of the Rev. John Weiss took place yesterday morning from his late residence, No. 82 East Brookline Street, and was largely attended by personal friends. The services were very simple and impressive. The Rev. C. A. Bartol made a brief address, after which the Rev. E. E. Hale read selections from the Scriptures and offered a prayer. Mr. Hale, in speaking of the religious convictions of Mr. Weiss, said, among other things: "If we could bring together a hundred of his epigrammatic sentences about the New Testament, the book would be more valuable than all the commentaries that had ever been published." When Mr. Hale had concluded, the Rev. Dr. Bartol offered a benediction, and the company slowly dispersed. In accordance with the wishes of the family, there was no display of floral tributes. A few roses, calla lilies, and violets,—that was all. The following were among those present: the Rev. George L. Chaney, Dr. W. E. Channing of Newport, the Rev. Dr. Dwight, the Rev. Dr. Dudley, the Rev. W. J. Potter of New Bedford, the Rev. A. A. Abbott, A. Bronson Alcott, the Rev. Minot J. Savage, Dr. C. C. Holmes, Dr. D. G. Haskins, Mr. C. P. Crouch, Mr. John Owen, Mr. Francis E. Abbot, Mr. T. W. Higginson, Mr. Julius Eichberg, Mr. J. H. Adams, and others. The remains were taken to Worcester for interment in the family lot.—Ibid., March 13.

THE PLAGUE IN RUSSIA.

The condition of things in South-eastern Russia is unmistakably alarming. There have been several local outbreaks of plague in Turkey and in North Africa during recent years; and during the past year the movement of Turkish levies, the herding together of homeless refugees, the massing of Russian troops in unhealthy districts, and the return of troops from infected places have furnished conditions extremely favorable for the development and spread of epidemic diseases. Whatever the cause, it is certain that an epidemic of a peculiarly malignant character began in the low country north of the Caspian Sea early in the fall, and has since steadily spread northward and eastward, in spite of the unfavorable season and the most energetic attempts to isolate the infected regions.

At first the disease was described as a malignant typhus fever, a disease which has prevailed very largely among Russian troops in Turkey. Later reports from Russian physicians give as the characteristics of the existing epidemic the well-known symptoms of the true plague, but describe them as extremely rapid in their development, the victims generally dying within ten hours of the first attack, sometimes within four hours. Ninety per cent. of those taken with the disease die, and naturally the wildest alarm prevails in the districts menaced. A large number of Cossacks who fled from one of the first infected villages were lately found frozen to death on the banks of the Volga. The dead lie unburied in the streets, and as soon as warmer weather returns the festering corpses must materially aggravate the pestilence.

Leibermelster describes the true oriental plague—whose excursions into Europe during former centuries proved so terribly fatal—as a fever of a most acute and violent type, accompanied by buboes or carbuncles, and often followed by a long train of disorders. Four stages of the disease are recognized: 1. The stage of invasion. 2. The stage of intense fever. 3. The stage of fully developed buboes. 4. The stage of convalescence.

The first stage begins suddenly, sometimes with fever. The general health is seriously disturbed. There is great bodily and mental weakness, headache, dizziness; face pale and flabby, features distorted, eyes languid, speech awkward, gait staggering; nausea, vomiting, and diarrhoea occur. This stage lasts from a few hours to one or more days. The change from this to the second stage is marked by fever, usually beginning with a chill, and followed by extreme lassitude and fever, with its attendant consequences. Soon the patient passes into a well-formed typhus condition, with delirium, passing on to stupor. The tongue becomes dry, cracked, hard; the tongue, teeth, lips, and nostrils are covered with a dark mucus or with soot-black crusts; cardiac weakness or paralysis follows. After two or three days buboes appear, and the third stage begins. The fever diminishes, and a sticky, offensive perspiration covers the body. The pulse becomes fuller and less rapid, and the mind grows clearer. Buboes now appear on the groin, with carbuncles on the back of the neck and other parts of the body, and gangrene.

Convalescence begins between the sixth and tenth days, and is often protracted by continued suppuration of the buboes. Among the sequelae of the disease are enumerated parotitis, furuncle, abscesses of the skin and muscles, pneumonia, protracted fever with continued typhus condition, droopy, partial paralysis, mental disturbance, etc. Genuine relapses also take place. Death may occur during any stage of the disease, though generally between the third and fifth days. The mortality is greater than that of any other epidemic disease. At first almost all of the sick die; and for long periods the mortality may range between seventy and ninety per cent.

The manner in which the disease spreads is not clear. It is certain, however, that no efficient protection is known for those who cannot isolate themselves absolutely from infected districts. The only successful treatment hitherto found has been rigid quarantine, with the most pitiless isolation of the sick or exposed. The disease must be stamped out as soon as it begins, if need be with the utter extermination of infected communities and the burning of their villages and effects. Leibermelster, writing when there was no probability of a recurrence of the plague in Europe, said, after describing the murderous measures which had been successfully employed to prevent the spread of the disease: "If we should ever again be threatened with an outbreak of the plague in Europe, we should know exactly what measures to adopt to ward off the danger. . . . It is scarcely necessary to mention that, owing to our imperfect knowledge of the nature of the plague and the mode of its development, as well as of the manner in which the contagion is carried, etc., it would be advisable rather to do too much than too little; and when there is any doubt it is better to follow the same way."

The black death, which carried off so large a portion of the human race about the middle of the fourteenth century, presented all the essential characteristics of the ordinary bubo plague, to which were added lung complications with expectoration of blood. Some have thought it a distinct disease; it is more probable, however, that it was the same pest, aggravated by other maladies,—the natural result of so vast an accumulation of unburied corpses. Most of the recent epidemics of the plague in the East and in North Africa have occurred during the warm damp weather of spring and early summer.—Scientific American.

THE CHINESE probably illustrate in the most extreme manner the length to which loose views concerning currency can be carried. The history of their currency presents that mingling of the grotesque with the tragic which most of their actions have when viewed through Western eyes. Coined money was known among them as early as the eleventh century before Christ, but their inability to comprehend the principles upon which a currency should be based has led them into all sorts of extravagances, which have been attended by disorder, famine, and bloodshed. Coins came at last to be made so thin that one thousand of them piled together were only three inches high; then gold and silver were abandoned, and copper, tin, shells, skins, stones, and paper were given a fixed value, and used until, by abuse, all the advantages to be derived from the use of money were lost, and there was nothing left for the people to do but to go back to barter; and this they did more than once. They cannot be said now to have a coinage; two thousand nine hundred years ago they made round coins with a square hole in the middle, and they have made no advance beyond that since. The well-known cash is a cast brass coin of that description, and, although it is valued at about one mill and a half of our money, and has to be strung in lots of one thousand to be computed with any ease, it is the sole measure of value and legal tender of the country. Spanish, Mexican, and our new trade dollars are employed in China; they pass because they are necessary for larger operations, and because faith in their standard value has become established; but they are current simply as stamped ingots, with their weight and fineness indicated.—Popular Science Monthly.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. E. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism would be gladly received for this department. Address L. E. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The first envelope was used in 1839.

Charles Sumner has been dead five years.

Japan has tea plants one hundred and fifty years old.

Mr. Edison says the electric light is "just as sure as sunrise."

It is said that many Chinamen are now found in South America.

Mr. Darwin, the celebrated naturalist, has recently celebrated his seventieth birth-day.

The capital invested in all the railroads of the globe exceeds $15,500,000,000.

There are seventy-three thousand two hundred and sixty-five Jews in the United States.

The first newspaper advertisement appeared in England about 1658, in the latter days of Cromwell.

One million dollars in gold coin weighs three thousand six hundred and eighty-five pounds avoirdupois.

The Crystal Palace, London, is over sixteen hundred feet long, and on an average three hundred feet wide.

Seventeen-twentieths of the indebtedness of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, is owed to German Catholics.

Professor Stockbridge tells us that dew rises instead of falls; that it comes from the earth, not from the atmosphere.

As long as the property of the Church is exempt from taxation, Christianity has its hand in every man's pocket.

Señor Castelar is to deliver three lectures at Oxford University on "Spanish Literature in the Nineteenth Century," in June.

A new way to walk into wealth—become a pedestrian. Boston will pay a woman more for walking a week than for working five years.

The laws of Athens decreed that one day should be set apart in every year for the public exhibition of cock-fighting at the expense of the State.

"Financialization" is what the Springfield Republican wittily calls the Kimball method of extorting money from people to pay debts on churches.

The word "republican" over the doors of club houses in Italy has been prohibited by the royal government, since the fall of the Cavour Cabinet.

Before the confiscation of church property some forty years ago, the revenue of the Spanish Church greatly exceeded the entire national revenues.

True civilization is growing away from vices as true religion is growing away from idols. We must make men upon modern principles, not upon modern habits.

In the death of Rev. John Weiss, Free Religion loses one of the ablest preachers of the new faith, and American literature one of its most brilliant authors.

France has eighty-two thousand eight hundred and seventy-three persons of unsound mind, forty-two thousand nine hundred and eighty-six of whom are in asylums.

Col. T. W. Higginson's Young Folks' History of the United States has been translated into three foreign languages, and is now printing in raised letters for the blind.

The United States has one hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and four miles of telegraph wire, nearly as much as all the rest of the world combined.

Would it not be a good thing to divide the Lenten season into four equal periods, and take it oftener and less at a time? To be good so long at once is bad for average humanity.

The Householders' Association of Berlin, Germany, a cooperative society, employs a chemist of eminence in its laboratory to analyze the articles it sells, so that their quality may be guaranteed.

During the late Sunday session of Congress, an enthusiastic revivalist attempted to address the Sabbath-breaking Heave from the visitor's gallery upon the sinfulness of its ways. No conversions reported.

Mr. J. Payne Collier thinks he has found another tragedy by Shakespeare. The title of it is "A Warning to Fair Women." It was printed in 1599 anonymously, and is a story of matrimonial infidelity, murder, and remorse.

Mrs. General Sherman, who headed the Catholic movement by which a million and a half of dollars were raised for Pope Pius IX., thinks that the Catholic ladies of the Union should raise a fund for the relief of Archbishop Purcell.

"Gentlemanhood as a Vocation" is the subject of a good editorial in the Springfield Weekly Republican. It thinks "nothing is more needed just now in American society from top to bottom than the sense of gentlemanhood as a vocation."

If Jefferson Davis is to have a pension from the government he sought to destroy, Congress ought to order a statue of Benedict Arnold erected at Washington in honor of his services in the war for American independence. A Congress may live too long, as well as a man.

A tree grows in the island of Ferro, whose branches are covered with a cloud which is never dispelled, but, resolving itself into a moisture, causes to fall from its leaves a very clear water, in such abundance that cisterns placed at its foot to receive it are daily supplied.

Rev. Dr. Talmage is to be tried on charges of deceit and falsehood. He was present when the report of the committee that has had under consideration the accusations against him was made, and he demanded an open trial and an immediate one. He threatens to try the Presbytery.

If Mr. Blaine has so foully misrepresented the Chinese in California as Mr. Beecher shows, then he is a demagogue of the worst kind. We shall wait to see what Gail Hamilton has to say in answer to Mr. Beecher with some curiosity. We believe she corrects all of Mr. Blaine's errors.

Pope Pius IX. never allowed a woman to kiss his toe at his audiences, but always presented his hand instead. Rome has gone downward since his death, as Leo XIII. offers his foot to the gentler sex. After having a gentleman in the papal chair for so many years, it is lamentable to see it occupied by a brute.

Prof. Petros, in a recent lecture before the Lowell Institute, broached the theory that around the entire solar system is a spherical shell of matter, from which fall the meteors which supply the heat of the sun, and to which return the comets and meteors that pass around the sun. This theory is soon to be propounded to the scientific world.

"The post-office is a Christian institution," says the Christian Union. Why not claim the steam railroad and electric telegraph as Christian institutions? There would be just as much sense in it. We shall yet see some over-pious dealers advertise Christian hats and Christian coats, and perhaps the earth may in time be converted so that it will grow Christian turnips and Christian beets.

A vice is a bad action multiplied into a bad habit. Vices, like their vegetable prototypes, will grow in any soil. Mankind has ever forgiven more to those who ride than to those who walk. Splendor has put out the eyes of justice. We believe in charity, and when it says, "I do not condemn thee," it reveals a greatness of soul before which the world stands in reverence. But the virtue which sees no vice in human actions is itself a vice.

Our ideas of right and wrong are mostly right. We can all agree as to what is best for man. No one will assert that a lie adds to a man's character; that dishonesty inspires confidence; that expensive, injurious habits are to be commended; or that vices that shorten and brutalize human life are fit for men and women to practice. Sins may have made saints, but we do not believe that they have made a great many. You will be a better man to-morrow by being a good man to-day.

Germany, the mother of Protestantism, is disowning her offspring. The Christian religion has but little hold upon the German mind. It is said that in the Liberal Faculty of Theology at Heidelberg there are as many professors as students. Very little is done for the Christian education of the rising generation. All of these facts are encouraging. The first step towards a good religion is to get rid of a bad one. Germany was the first to throw off Catholicism. She is the first to throw off Protestantism.

Miss Mary Eastman, of Massachusetts, recently preached in the pulpit of Rev. Robert Collyer, at Chicago. At the conclusion of her sermon, which was on "Immortality," Rev. Mr. Collyer addressed the congregation as follows: "Hawthorne said many years ago that the coming preacher would be a woman. We shall all believe now that it was a prophecy, and, after listening to-night, we preachers of the other sex are glad we got our chance to speak in first. When a woman can speak such sweet and helpful words as Miss Eastman has given us to-night, this pulpit will always welcome her, and I believe all other Christian pulpits of other sects than our own will gladly welcome such women."

The Christian Register tries to make out that Unitarianism is still needed, and urges Unitarians "not to repeat the folly of Protestantism by transferring the emphasis of their testimony from life to doctrine." We hope the warning does not come too late, but we fear that in the Unitarian denomination there is more love of dogma than of truth, and in many Unitarian pulpits more emphasis of what will help Unitarianism than of what will help humanity. There is a very thin rim of theology around the Unitarian wheel, but it is there, and it is considered more necessary to preserve it than it is to make men better by righteousness. Still it is well enough to urge Unitarians in the right direction.

We shall have no morality worth the name until women are as independent as men. When one sex is made dependent upon the other for support, it is foolish to expect to dictate what the relation shall be between them. Necessity will dictate that. Women must be taught to support themselves, not to get a man to support them. We hold marriage as high as any one. It is the holiest institution on earth, and a happy, united family is about as near the kingdom of heaven as a human being can get. We do not believe in any substitute for marriage. The harem can never be a home. But marriage is not the bond, made by the lips of a priest, which can be broken by the lips of a court. It is a union of love for life. We need a higher respect between the sexes, and an education respecting their mutual relations which shall end in virtue instead of vice.

There is a good deal of talk, for and against, about theatres. The subject will bear talking and writing about. The stage needs defence, and in some instances deserves it. We do not believe in wholesale approbation or wholesale condemnation of the theatre, but a fair percentage of the latter is earned to-day. The stage may be made moral; but "Is it?" is the question. We mean, are the plays upon the stage to-day calculated to make the men and women better who see them? Boston has had McCullough and Barrett this winter, and the stage under the acting of these men was fairly on a level with the best pulpits in the city; but there has been a terrible falling off since their departure. It cannot be denied; the public likes to be amused, and it is amused with very poor exhibitions. We do not hesitate to say that there have been but few plays in Boston the past season worthy of the patronage of sensible, respectable people. Trash has held the boards longest, and drawn audiences the largest. The eye has been entertained, not the mind. The theatre, instead of being "facilis decessus avari," ought to be a way upward. Pleasure is legitimate, what leads to vice is not; and there is much upon the stage, the tendency of which is to lower the moral taste and blunt the moral faculties. When a standard drama is offered to the public, let the people fill the theatre, and show their approval of what is high and elevating; then will their criticism upon what is low and debasing have a wholesome effect. We believe in supporting a good theatre; we do not believe in attending a bad one. The sensational stuff that has fed the public taste until it is well-nigh vitiated furnishes a strong argument against the usefulness of the theatre, and makes the task of defending it not only hard, but unpleasant. We shall gladly welcome a reform of the stage, and in the character of the pieces performed.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WHAT IS RIGHT?

"What is Right? and what is Wrong?"
These have troubled mortals long;
None have ever looked to see
Whether any such things be.

Men have fought, and men have died,
How the questions to decide—
"What is Wrong? and what is Right?"
And we still are void of light.

All the wranglings of the ages,
The disputes of saints and sages,
Have produced no flower nor fruit;
Still we wrangle and dispute.

Strange that neither sage nor priest
Ask if Right or Wrong exist—
Strange they never seek the root
Of the questions they dispute.

Strange mankind have never thought
Right and Wrong, perchance, are naught
But the fancies of the hour!
Such they are, and nothing more.

That is Right whose aim Success
With her laurels deigns to bless;
That is ever Wrong which fails
So learn we from History's tales.

What the Past hath praised as Right
Now wears Error's damning blight;
What the Past hath cursed as crime
Now is worshipped as sublime.

As the seasons in their course
Thoughts and beliefs of men reverse,
As the bees 'mong blossoms range,
Right and Wrong their places change.

When Success's laurel lies
On a heap of infamies,
Men of all succeeding times
With the laurel praise the crimes.

When the sunshine of Success
Honest labor fails to bless,
Men who Justice deify
Pass the honest laborer by.

What is Right? What'er to-day
Fools or cowards choose to say;
What is Wrong? To break the rules
Framed by cowards, backed by fools.

Men of heart and men of mind
Ask no favors of their kind;
Unsupported and alone,
They feel equal to their own.

Men with neither mind nor heart
Beg the world to take their part,
And their hosts, together joined,
Frame the laws that rule mankind.

Courage no law leans upon;
Genius too can stand alone;
Holding naught in dread or awe,
They are to themselves a law.

Fools and cowards from the mass
Of mortals, as the ages pass,
And to hide their sins from sight,
Guard by law and call them Right.

All the curses of the past
At the brave and wise were cast;
Praises were but breathed aloud
For the servile, brainless crowd.

How those ages we look o'er,
And their wickedness deplore!
"They were very bad," we say;
But are we less bad than they?

Years have flown and Thought has ranged,
Right and Wrong have places changed,
But the world still bends to rules
Framed by cowards, backed by fools.

Not more deep the curses hurled
At the Saviors of the world,
Than to-day are freely thrown
At the soul which stands alone.

They who beliefs and creeds deify,
They who man-made laws defy,—
They are bad, and only they;
Good men do as others say.

Right and Wrong! The heedless dreams
Of feeble minds! The coward's whims!
Symbols of the weak and strong,
This is Right, and that is Wrong.

As the ages come and go
Men, perchance, will wiser grow;
But while fools and cowards throng,
Men will prate of Right and Wrong.

CHARLES G. RIVERS.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL., Feb. 14, 1879.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc. No money is acknowledged here which is not sent to and for the Index Association.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 15.

Jno. S. McColl, $3; Wm. Hanford, $3.50; C. W. Pierce, $3.50; E. Patterson, $1.50; S. W. Strong, 50 cents; E. R. Wick, $3; Robert M. Gough, $10.50; Geo. E. Jewett, $3.50; Clara F. Bourland, $10.14; J. W. Glaeser, $5; C. Palmer, $1.25; D. A. Butler, $1.50; Samuel Wells, $1.50; E. W. Hart, $1.50; T. T. Phillips, $1.50; R. Patterson, $1.50; E. S. Barker, $3.50; Hon. S. Campbell, $3.50; F. H. Magill, $3.50; H. M. Cross, $3.50; J. E. Clark, $3.50; J. H. O. Hayes, $3.50; F. A. Morgan, $1.50; S. K. Parkhurst, $1.50; Dr. C. A. Barriol, $3.50; Geo. H. Woodcock, $4.40; A. Folsom, $3.50; Lewis Hunt, $3.50; Z. S. Wallingford, $3.50; Edw. H. Adams, $3; B. T. Yerrington, $3.50; F. S. Bennett, $1.50; Benj. F. Fisher, $3; Dr. J. Church, $3.50; Geo. F. Woods, $3; James Shaw, $3.50; T. B. Skinner, 10 cents; J. E. Richie, $3; J. S. Richardson, $1.50; T. B. Jones, $1.50; Henry Robinson, $1.50; Charles Brown, $1.50; Lucy A. Waters, $1.50; E. H. King, $3.50; M. M. Waterman, $3.50; Ralph Davidson, $3.50; Isaac Bonham, $3.50; James Eddy, $3.50; Edwin Brown, $3.50; Dennis Murphy, $3; Charles H. Webb, $3.50; New England News Co., $3.50; H. Raymond, $1.50; Mrs. A. O. Spooner, $3.50; J. F. Bradley, $3.50.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 20, 1879.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 26 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonise it with the Bible. It recognises no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. L. SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

A FINE CHANCE TO CLUB.

We have made arrangements with the respective publishers to club THE INDEX with the following first-class magazines, for a year, at the astonishingly low rates annexed:—

Fortnightly Review.....	$5.50 instead of $8.20
North American Review.....	5.75 " " "
Popular Science Monthly.....	6.00 " " "

To the subscriber, this is equivalent to getting one of these leading periodicals at the usual rate, $5.00, and THE INDEX besides at only $0.50, $0.75, or $1.00. The offer is necessarily confined to names not now on our mail list, and is made solely to increase the circulation of THE INDEX, whose friends will find it a great aid in kindly seconding our efforts to this end.

THE MANAGERS of the New England Hospital for Women and Children, Boston Highlands, have issued the following appeal to the friends of that admirable institution, and we commend it most cordially to the attention of our wealthy subscribers: "The net proceeds of the late fair for the hospital were about $13,000. Part of this is at once needed for running expenses; part ($3000) must be reserved to pay for improved heating of the hospital; $8000 it is proposed to use toward reducing our debt. Since the fair we have received a liberal gift of $5000 toward paying our mortgage. This gift and the wish of the giver have seemed a reason for an effort now to set the hospital at least free from debt. In 1874 several persons promised to pay $1000 each toward cancelling our mortgage debt, on condition the whole could be raised. Of those persons, two now renew their promises, and some have already contributed to a sinking fund, which now amounts to $2700. Other income has been gradually accumulated for the same end, and now stands at about $2300. In order to free the hospital from debt, certain funds which have been temporarily invested in our own mortgages must be invested apart. To free the hospital in this way the sum of $7000 is needed, and aid is now asked of its friends. The hospital has till lately been always burdened, and now, being already so near to a sound financial condition, we come before the public with a statement of what is still needed to enable us finally to be freed from our mortgages, hoping the institution may thereby do better than ever."

THE MORAL FAILURE OF INDIVIDUALISM.

Before perusing this article, the reader should peruse Mr. Wright's article on "Individualism," published on the next page, to which this is a response. His views are most heartily welcomed here, for Individualism has no representative who is entitled to a more respectful hearing or whose personal character sheds more lustre on the cause he defends. All the more is it incumbent upon us to sustain the truth as we see it, which we shall do with the utmost deference for our generous critic, yet with that loyalty to conviction which he, of all men, will understand and approve.

First of all, we must correct his evident impression that we have made a new departure in our late article on "The Final Appeal in Morals." This is by no means the case. If Mr. Wright will take the trouble to refer to THE INDEX for the year 1875, he will find an extended discussion on this subject between Mr. Sidney H. Morse and ourselves, in which we took precisely the same ground as now. Mr. Morse contributed papers with these headings: "Physician, Heal Thyself" (Feb. 11, 1875); "A Conscience for Liberty" (Feb. 25); and "Private Interpretation and 'Liberty'" (Mar. 18). Our own contributions were entitled: "The Conflict of Consciences" (Jan. 21, 1875); "The Appeal to Facts" (Feb. 11); "A Conscience for Liberty" (Feb. 25); "The Four Authorities" (Mar. 4); "Liberty in Church and State" (Mar. 18); and "Private Judgment and Universal Reason" (Mar. 25). We refer to these various articles because they cover substantially the whole ground, particularly those on "The Four Authorities" and "Private Judgment and Universal Reason"; and we heartily wish that the subject itself should receive the attention which its superlative importance in religious and ethical thought demands. Ever since March, 1866, when we published an article on "Positivism in Theology" in the venerable and now deceased Christian Examiner, we have insisted on the SCIENTIFIC METHOD as the only guide to truth in ethics and religion, as well as in physical science. Our article of two weeks ago simply set forth in fresh clearness the central principle which has dominated our private thinking and public speech for now thirteen years, and which THE INDEX was originally founded to illustrate, explain, and recommend. It would therefore be a total misapprehension of the spirit and drift of THE INDEX from its very commencement to suppose that we have taken a new departure, merely because recent events have called for a fresh declaration of the necessity of substituting the scientific method in morals for the worn-out methods of Catholicism and Protestantism.

To-day, whether in social science, ethics, or religion, thoughtful men are confronted with the fact that Individualism is nothing but Protestantism gone to seed, and that it is utterly incompetent to settle a single one of the great questions which shake the modern world. Hitherto the work of religious radicals has been to push Protestantism farther and farther towards its logical extreme and ultimate, Individualism; now their work is to push Protestantism and Individualism alike aside, to make way for Science and her all-conquering method. Let us all clearly comprehend the meaning of this wonderful nineteenth century, and the relations it bears to the past and the future. The whole tendency of the age is towards unity in politics and universality in thought. The amazing growth of great cities all over the globe, the consolidation of a few great nationalities on the basis of race-affinities, the unheeded dawn of cosmopolitan politics as indicated by international postal, commercial, and monetary unions, etc., show how all things in the world of affairs are working together for the social integration of humanity—an integration vaguely and unscientifically shadowed forth in the crude popular movements called Socialism and Communism. None the less is the same impressive fact evident in the intellectual tendencies of the epoch. Philosophy, science, and religion throughout the world are steadily taking on a character of increasing universality. Darwinism and Evolution are wiping out ancient distinctions which were believed to be eternally fixed in Nature, proving beyond dispute that the universe is a unit and that human thought cannot master the secret of this unity except by recognizing the essential universality of reason and its laws. Individualism has served a most useful purpose in shattering the antiquated tyrannies which, after serving a useful purpose in their own time by establishing a temporary and provisional unity among half-civilized mankind, had become at last obstructions to progress.

But now Individualism is itself an obstruction, and, like all other forms of conservatism, is chiefly useful as preventing the dangerous friction and heat of too rapid change. These facts stand out very evident to penetrating thought: that to-day Individualism is thoroughly conservative in character and influence, simply perpetuating and obeying an impulse which originated centuries ago in the Protestant Reformation,—and that uncompromising insistence on the universal authority and scope of the SCIENTIFIC METHOD is the newest, boldest, profoundest, and most characteristic Radicalism of the nineteenth century.

Now we propose to demonstrate the moral failure of Individualism in a brief but conclusive way.

The principle that every individual has a right to do as he pleases, until he invades the equal rights of others, is accepted by all liberals as the fundamental law of liberalism. Individualists imagine it also to be the fundamental law of Individualism; but this is a mistake. Not only is this principle not derived from, but it even flatly contradicts, Individualism; for the essential principle of Individualism is the supreme authority of the individual's private judgment both in thought and action, and this imposes absolutely no restriction on the individual's right to do as he pleases—not even the restriction "until he invades the equal rights of others." If anybody desires to see a statement of Individualism in its rigorous and consistent form, let him read the extraordinary poem by Mr. Charles G. Rivers, published on a preceding page of this issue and entitled "What is Right?" Beginning (logically) with the premise that—

"Courage no law leans upon;
Genius, too, can stand alone;
Holding naught in dread or awe,
They are to themselves a law."

Mr. Rivers ends with the conclusion which inevitably follows from his strictly individualistic philosophy:—

"Right and Wrong! The baseless dreams
Of feeble minds! The coward's whims!
Symbols of the weak and strong,
This is Right, and that is Wrong."

In other words, Might is Right, and Weakness is Wrong. That is the only consistent ethics of Individualism; it denies all authority superior to that of the individual's private judgment, and thereby denies the authority of the moral law as binding on the individual. Whoever, therefore, presumes to say that the individual's right to do as he pleases is limited by the obligation to respect the rights of others, must say it on the warrant of some other philosophy than Individualism. We respectfully challenge any and all Individualists to find a warrant for that limitation in their own principle of private judgment alone, or without surreptitiously introducing a principle of moral obligation altogether superior to private judgment, and thereby contradicting themselves.

But all this is abstract. To make our demonstration of the moral failure of Individualism complete, take a concrete illustration.

Let us suppose that a thoroughly consistent Individualist,—say Mr. Rivers, for example, who is utterly unknown to us personally,—believing that might is right, and practising what he believes, robs Mr. Smith of his watch on the highway. Scientific liberalism declares that Mr. Rivers has overpassed the limit of his own individual rights, and invaded the rights of Mr. Smith,—that he has committed that which is pronounced a crime by the Consensus of the Competent, as represented by the moral sense of all good men and the laws of the State,—and that he is justly subject to such penalties as the laws impose. But what must Individualism, or individualistic liberalism, say, if it is fearlessly faithful to its own principle of private judgment? That nobody is entitled to censure Mr. Rivers' opinion that might is right, or to punish his act of robbery performed in accordance with that opinion,—that his individual private judgment is supreme authority for him both in belief and conduct, and should be accepted as ample justification of both by society; that Mr. Smith was unfortunate in not being stronger than Mr. Rivers, but cannot, if a good Individualist, blame anybody but himself, or complain of anything but being weaker than his despoiler. That is Individualism, consistent, honest, and fearless. If the reader does not like it, he does not really like Individualism, but at heart embraces some better philosophy of morals and life.

These considerations we believe to be overwhelming and conclusive, demonstrating the moral failure of Individualism. But take one other case, still more pertinent at this time.

On what grounds could the imprisonment of Mr.

Heywood for circulating his social opinions be condemned by any consistent Individualist? Mr. Heywood was only an individual, with only an individual's rights. But the men who imprisoned him, including Mr. Comstock, were also individuals, with just the same rights. They of course, acted through the government; but the government was established by the votes of individuals who created it on the warrant of their own private judgment, and bequeathed it to other individuals to be administered on the same warrant. Whatever Mr. Heywood's prosecutors did, they did on the same warrant also; they are just as much entitled as Mr. Heywood to absolute immunity from censure on the part of all consistent Individualists. Private judgment is just as good a plea for Comstock as for Heywood. The "Indignation Meeting" at Faneuil Hall last August would have been a sheer absurdity, if it had had no foundation but Individualism; its protest, however, against the violation of individual rights in Mr. Heywood's case was really based on the affirmation of a universal law of justice which is binding on all individuals alike, and therefore stands superior to their mere private judgment. Whoever makes such a protest declares by that very act that he is no Individualist; he tacitly confesses a "final appeal in morals" which supersedes private judgment by the higher authority of universal reason,—by the higher authority of a universal law of justice, to which every individual has an indubitable right to hold every other individual accountable, despite the plea of private judgment.

This is the theory on which the United States government was itself founded. Mr. Wright says: "The Declaration of American Independence was a sturdy protest against Mrs. Grundy in favor of the individual; and the Constitution of the United States was a solemn agreement of the people to let the individual entirely alone as to his religious opinions, and consequently as to his moral conduct, till he should invade the rights of other individuals. The whole structure of this free government is built on pure individualism, and ignores everything like 'consensus of the competent,' whether religious, moral, or scientific." Let us see how this is:

"The Declaration of Independence, in its very first sentence, recognizes with astonishing clearness the principles of scientific liberalism, and repudiates the principles of Individualism. We italicise the important words:—

"When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them together, and to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation."

Here are affirmed principles which amount to an explicit repudiation of Individualism: namely—

1. That the people of the United States are entitled to their independence by "the laws of nature and of nature's God," not by that private judgment of the individual which denies all moral responsibility except to itself.

2. That "the laws of nature and of nature's God," not the laws of Christ and of the Christian's God,—in other words, the laws of natural morality alone,—constitute the ground of America's claim to be free, and the solid bed-rock of her secular government.

3. That "decent respect to the opinions of mankind" requires the people of the United States to justify their course before the universal reason,—that they are bound to submit their case respectfully to the supreme tribunal of the Consensus of the Competent. It is very easy to caricature this tribunal as "Mrs. Grundy"; but we ask—was it to Mrs. Grundy that the people of this mighty nation made their respectful and solemn appeal in the most critical hour of their history?

The Declaration of Independence thus recognizes natural morality as the basis of secular government, and the Consensus of the Competent as the supreme tribunal before which both individuals and nations must respectfully plead their causes. How is it with the Constitution?

The preamble of the Constitution of the United States enumerates six paramount objects to be secured by the government it creates, and the second of these is to "establish justice." In order to give effect to this purpose, the Constitution itself creates a Judicial Power as one of the three great coordinate departments of the government. What does all this mean? It means—

1. That justice (in other words, that natural morality of which justice is the central, all-comprehensive, and all-dominating principle) is the prime concern of secular government; and that the NATIONAL MORALITY of the United States is NATURAL MORALITY.

2. That the proper interpreter of natural morality is the private judgment of the individual in all cases in which he alone is concerned, but, in all cases where two or more individuals are concerned, the proper interpreter of it is the universal reason of mankind.

3. That, in order to render practicable the appeal to this universal reason of mankind in disputes between individuals involving justice (i.e., natural morality), the Judicial Power shall be by mutual consent accepted as voicing that Consensus of the Competent which, in all cases requiring national or associated action, supersedes the private judgment of any individual.

Could anything be plainer than that both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States (we might add, the Constitutions of all the separate States) unite in making natural morality the basis of secular government, and in making the Consensus of the Competent the "final appeal in morals" whenever individuals cannot come to agreement betwixt themselves? If these things are not true, then the Constitution of the National Liberal League, of which Mr. Wright is the justly honored President, is woefully at fault, for it makes these explicit declarations:—

"ARTICLE II.—The general object of the National Liberal League shall be to accomplish the Total Separation of Church and State: to the end that equal rights in religion, genuine morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood in all human life, may be established, protected, and perpetuated.

"ARTICLE III.—...
"6. In all other and practicable ways, to promote the final emancipation of the State from the control of the Church, and to foster the development of that natural intelligence and morality which constitute the necessary and all-sufficient basis of secular government."

All such passages must be expurgated from the Constitution of the National Liberal League, in order to adapt it to the philosophy of Individualism and "repeal"; and when this expurgation is accomplished, the necessity will remain of making equally sweeping and radical changes in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, in order to adapt these also to the same philosophy.

A few words, we see, are still necessary to render clear the position which is taken by scientific liberalism respecting the right of private judgment. The right of the individual to decide finally for himself, on the sole warrant of his own private judgment, all moral questions which involve nobody's welfare but his own, is unconditionally conceded by scientific liberalism, which in fact affirms it just as emphatically as Individualism does. But in all moral questions which involve the welfare of other individuals, considered singly as such or collectively as society, scientific liberalism maintains that the individual's private judgment is not the "final appeal," but is subordinate to the higher authority of the Consensus of the Competent, represented by the law of the land, the decision of the courts, the vote of the majority, the preponderance of public opinion, etc., etc., according to the nature of the case. Scientific liberalism imposes no restriction on private judgment when the individual alone is concerned; but it refuses to him supreme jurisdiction when others are concerned. The great defect of Individualism is that it cannot, in consistency with its own sole principle of private judgment, forbid the individual to invade the rights of others, if he chooses to plead the sanction of his own private judgment in defence of such invasion. These considerations give a complete answer, we think, to the difficulties raised on this point.

In conclusion, the question "Who are the Competent?" needs a brief additional statement. That there has always been, and is still, a great degree of "consensus in morals," among all nations and in all ages, is the testimony of thorough scholarship. For instance, Rev. Samuel Longfellow, in one of the best papers he ever published, says:—

"We ought not to be surprised to find that the idea of right and wrong has been universal among men. That is but saying that men have always been men,—have always had consciences, as they have always had senses, language, society. We ought not to be surprised that the great moral virtues of justice, honesty, veracity, purity, have been inculcated and practised under all forms of religion. Yet there are those who, on account of superficial diversities and differences of development, deny any universality in the moral ideas. . . . With all the differences, then, in the culture of the moral sentiments, and in the application of moral judgments, we are justified in declaring the universality of the moral idea. In no age or people has anything been approved because it was unjust, or that was seen at the time to be unjust. And we find in widely different nations and times the continual recurrence of the same moral injunctions, the inculcation of the same virtues." [The Radical, March, 1888: "The Unity and Universality of the Religious Ideas."]

That a "consensus in morals" exists, and that it is entitled to a respect from the individual which Individualism denies to it, seem to us points equally clear. Even in matters that touch himself alone, he disregards it at his own peril and cost. But in matters that touch others he has no right whatever to disregard it, or to determine his conduct towards them by a private judgment which defies it. If he does, he deserves such penalties as he usually receives. The question of "competency" is not one that makes much practical trouble, if any. Who are the competent in geology, in physics, in physiology? Those who by their manifest attainments and achievements have compelled the whole world to listen respectfully to their opinions on all questions involving their specialty. No one of them is infallible, or imagined to be such; but their unanimous consent closes any question in the judgment of all except those who are densely ignorant, insufferably conceited—or wiser than all mankind! There is no arbitrary test of competency; but incompetency soon betrays itself in the presence of knowledge that quacks and charlatans have no chance whatever. All this is true in morals. The competent are those who prove themselves to be such to the satisfaction of mankind by their combined intelligence and virtue. Quacks in morals are numerous enough, but they carry influence only with the ignorant and the immoral; they never succeed with others in palming themselves off as competent. It is a very uncomfortable doctrine for the quacks, doubtless—this doctrine of the Consensus of the Competent; but it forebodes mischief to no one else. Nobody ever made a "consensus in morals" by "attempt"—but neither can it be averted by attempts: it is inevitable just so long as all men possess substantially an identical moral nature. It is precisely because elevation to the dignity of fellow-membership with "the competent" in any branch can neither be won nor lost by anything but a competency or incompetency which proves itself before all eyes, and which is therefore beyond dispute, that it is impossible to lay down any arbitrary rule for determining who "the competent" are. Nevertheless, with regard to any particular individual, it is seldom a difficult question to answer whether he belongs in that category. Individualism must count the private judgment of the fool or the knave just as valuable as that of the sage or the saint, for it has no criterion whatever of their relative value. But scientific liberalism demands of every individual the credentials of proved intelligence or virtue or both, as a condition of admitting his vote on any question of morals. Known attainment and achievement—these are the tests of competency; and they are abundantly sufficient.

INDIVIDUALISM.

After meditating on the editor's elaborate discussion of the question, "What is the final appeal in morals?" my "individualism" impels me to question—in fact to reject—his conclusion:

If I understand him, the ultimate authority to which every individual will must bow, or ought to bow, both in opinion and conduct, in morals, is the "Consensus of the Competent." And yet he says the question who the competent are needs no answer, or rather answers itself. Perhaps so, to him. To me, it does not. Quite the contrary. The problem of finding any consensus in morals seems to me more difficult than that of finding what is right and what is wrong. But vastly more difficult still is the problem of finding out whether the consenters are competent. And, after all, it is the poor individual ego that must decide for itself, and at its own individual peril, the question, either of morals, consensus, or competence!

To me, those who have ever made anything approaching a consensus seem clearly incompetent. And those who seem to me competent have not even attempted a consensus. Those who, by establishing a consensus, have made themselves competent to punish, if they have a mind to punish, will of course govern my conduct more or less; but their competency to punish does not prove either their competence or disposition to decide righteously, or give them any rightful authority over my opinions. All we can say of such a consensus is that it is a necessity of society—it may or may not be a necessary evil.

The competency of others to know and teach what is right and wrong can be of no possible authority to me till I know, or think I know, that they are competent, and why they are competent. Their competence must grow out of their knowledge of the nature of things—including men and women—and their sense of justice. Hence it is the real nature of things which is the authority, and not the consensus of any number of persons, competent or incompetent. I regard the attraction of gravitation with respect and reverence, not because Newton was competent to discover its laws, or others have consented to them, but out of regard to its nature and power. I respect the rule of doing as I would be done by, not because Confucius or Socrates or Jesus approved of it, but because I see the happy effect of its application. I judge by the nature of things that it is a good rule, whether others consent to it or not. After all, in regard to that and every other rule of conduct, the final appeal is to my individual conscious self. It may be a very miserable tribunal. All the competent or incompetent can do is to plead before it, or testify,—only lawyers at most. Neither one nor all, consent how they may, can take its place. And the really competent will not try to, unless it comes to self-defence. Till then, they may teach by precept and example, but will leave me to judge for myself.

If there is any "final appeal in morals," beyond and above the individual judgment, by all means let us know both the court and the code. Is the court Mrs. Grundy? Is the code the favorite fashionable volume of somebody's moral reflections which she happens to carry in her pocket? The Declaration of American Independence was a sturdy protest against Mrs. Grundy in favor of the individual; and the Constitution of the United States was a solemn agreement of the people to let the individual entirely alone as to his religious opinions, and consequently as to his moral conduct, till he should invade the rights of other individuals. The whole structure of this free government is built on pure individualism, and ignores everything like "Consensus of the Competent," whether religious, moral, or scientific. Peace and charity among the multitudinous people of all sorts and from all nations, high and low, rich and poor, cultured and uncultured, seem attainable on no other conditions.

More than two thousand years of Christianity—for Christianity is older than Jesus of Nazareth, and in its own showing is in direct antagonism with his life and teaching, as see John viii., 11; Matt. xiii., 29, 30, etc.—have been spent in suppressing vice, or something assumed to be vice, by pains and penalties, as if that were the way to cultivate virtue and save souls. The results are well known to the readers of history,—plenty of bloody ashes, plenty of Sodom in every city, hypocrisy and lies all over the surface, if not in the heart of society. And now comes THE INDEX,—I am inexpressibly pained to say it,—and, while it admits Christianity, both Catholic and Protestant, to be a failure, intimates that there is a "consensus" of somebodies somewhere, which has a right, as a final court of appeal, to keep and control my individual conscience, and every other man's, or about half of it!

So much for pure abstraction. In a practical sense, it goes on to say: "Civil society justly claims the right to enact such laws for its own protection as the common conscience demands; it cannot wait for absolute unanimity, but has to make its moral decisions according to the vote of the majority, the best representative of universal reason which the nature of the case permits."

"Civil society" is a grand figure of speech, and has undoubtedly a right to protect itself, if assaulted as such, by other figures of speech. In point of fact, it is a pure creature of the imagination. In reality, there is nothing but Tom, Dick, and Harry, each with more or less conscience of his own, but none whatever in common. A common conscience, forsooth! Did anybody ever discover such a thing in a corporation? Any two of the trio may join to protect each other from injury by the third; but on the principle of American Liberty, no law of the two or three can touch either one till he commits an injury. When we come down from the abstract, society is nothing but individuals, and has nothing to do worth speaking of but to protect individuals from injury by each other. In doing this it protects itself. In doing anything more, especially in a moral sense, whatever consensus it obeys, it imperils itself.

That individuals have a right to join in protecting each other or enriching each other, is true enough without assigning as a reason for it what is not necessarily true,—that "the vote of the majority is the best representative of universal reason which the nature of the case permits." All that can be said in favor of having laws made by the majority—which they never are, for one-half, and morally the best half, of all the individuals is excluded—is that the chance of getting into them the wisdom of the most competent individual is a little greater than if they were to be made by one or a few individuals who happened to be the luckiest or strongest. The will of the majority, supposing that it makes the law, which it almost never does, even in a republic, is often the most unreasonable thing that can be thought of; and this comes of choking down individual judgment as the final appeal in morals. Every unjust and cruel law, whether by king, kaiser, pope, consensus, caucus, or majority, has always been enacted on the plea that society must protect itself; and so it must, but that brings us to the question, How? What are the limits of the necessity? Some limits there must be. Individuals must have some rights which the majority is bound to respect. I hold that they have an absolute inalienable right morally to govern themselves—not other people—so long as their bad self-government hurts only themselves. To deny this, is to make the individual a machine, and virtue impossible.

Total abstinence from coercive moral legislation by no means indicates or induces demoralization. On the contrary, if statistics prove anything, they prove that in all countries the greater the liberty, the less the abuse of it. The more the individual is appealed to as sovereign of himself and the less as slave of statutes, the firmer is the standing of society, and the more abundant that righteousness which exalts a nation. If these are views to which bad and immoral citizens assent, all the better for them and none the worse for the rest. It is only when we find bigots, who think freedom itself a vice, clamoring for laws against vice, to be administered by liars, upheld by the consensus of the churches, that we have reason to tremble for the safety of society. M. W.

LETTER FROM MR. WRIGHT.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I am sorry to feel obliged to protest against anything said by one of my best friends, and one of the sincerest friends of truth and mankind. I may be mistaken; so may he. I do not suppose that there is in the National Liberal League any person more thoroughly convinced than I am that the "Comstock postal law," so-called, is flatly unconstitutional, and incapable of securing its alleged object without the commission of worse iniquity than that which it aims to suppress, and that it ought therefore to be repealed. Yet if a majority of the League should vote for amendment and against repeal, I should not deem that a reason for seceding from the League. Believing others may think as I do, I must, most earnestly, protest against the editorial statement in the last INDEX, that the National League has "most unequivocally committed itself to repeal." It may be true that those who left the League at Syracuse committed themselves against repeal, but it is not true that the election of officers in favor of repeal committed the original organization to a conclusion contrary to its unanimous vote on the question itself, postponing it for further consideration. I do not believe any good can come of making an assertion which no man could possibly know to be true, even if it were true. For my own part, I believe at the next Congress of the League, the delegates of every Auxiliary League, without regard to any act of secession, will be welcome; and if a majority should vote against repeal, I do not think a single member would leave the League on that account. I am sure I should not. It is a very important question on which I have very decided opinions, which I mean to ventilate; but it is not the question which lies at the basis of the League.

It is not true that a change of administration commits the United States to a change of policy on any vital question. Some people made that mistake once, and had cause to be sorry. A nation does not ordinarily go to pieces by a change of public servants; neither should a League that has any good common cause for existence.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

[If any personal consideration could make us recall what we think a true statement, respect for Mr. Wright would make us unsay what we said last week. But we think it true still, and the words must stand unmodified.—Ed.]

Communications.

FREE THOUGHT IN SWEDEN.

[Miss Marie A. Brown, the Swedish translator, has kindly furnished us with the following translation of an article from the Sanningssökaren (The Truth-Seeker), a monthly magazine edited in Upsala by Messrs. K. P. Arnoldson and A. F. Akerberg, and sent to us as an exchange. The article is entitled, "The 'Truth-Seeker' and the Unitarians."—Ed.]

In the spring of 1871, the editor of this magazine, Herr K. P. Arnoldson, succeeded in forming a little union of persons of the same way of thinking, with the object of working unaimlessly here in the North for religious tolerance, and also to try to form a free religious organization that should be erected on such a broad basis that it could not only contain those who had got their eyes open to both the evanescent and permanent in Christianity, but all others, of whatever name and belief, whose religious needs were not satisfied with any sort of image or letter-worship. This organization, of which some information was given in the first numbers of the Truth-Seeker, was called "The Truth-Seekers' Union." The difficulty of forming it has been exceeded by the difficulty of keeping it up. But it is not incumbent upon us to speak of the obstacles, how these have been overcome, how a constantly growing resistance has not been able, even if it appeared so, completely to subdue small but vigorous forces, or how the good resolve has held itself unimpaired through the frosty night of indifference. Neither have we cared to excite empty curiosity, as we desired to go to our work without commotion.

In the meantime we have, as the reader will here find, obtained sufficient cause for communicating a brief account of the Union.

During the years 1871-74, the members of the Union (men of science, authors and editors, artists, officials, merchants and mechanics, also some women, in all about fifty) had often met together in Stockholm and Göteborg. At these meetings, the aims and manner of working of the society were discussed, and lectures were delivered for the edification of the members.

On the 26th of December, 1874, some of the members addressed themselves in writing to an influential American Unitarian, Mr. Robert Collyer, soliciting advice and support. Mr. Collyer replied in a letter of the 1st of February, 1875, that we ought to present our wishes through a delegate to the next great May-meeting at Music Hall in Boston, and that our friends in America might possibly be willing in a short time to send to the North some one to proclaim Unitarian Christianity. Mr. Collyer concluded his letter with these words: "When I happen to hear of any one who intends to cross the ocean to see the midnight sun, I will let him know that he also ought to see this morning star, the Truth-Seekers' Union." According to Mr. Collyer's advice, a delegate was chosen from among the members. The latter went to America at the end of April, 1875, and returned in the beginning of 1876, with tidings that were scarcely encouraging.

But the Truth-Seeker appeared in 1877, and tried to clear a path for the ideas that had lain at the base of the Truth-Seekers' Union. From the outset, it has had to struggle with pecuniary difficulties. But in the measure that the number of its readers increases, these difficulties naturally diminish. The public generally have not a suspicion of the stumbling-blocks that lie in the way of a new literary undertaking, and it is quite natural that such an one as ours, with the design to blast rocks, more than any other requires time to get into operation. So much the more gratifying is it that the exceedingly irregular publication of the first year's numbers did not, as far as we know, affect the circulation of the magazine to any extent worth mentioning. This fact ought in a certain respect to constitute one of the proofs that the Truth-Seeker did not come too soon, and it bodes good to the cause we serve.

That religious tolerance at last has gained a foothold even in the Northern lands, people abroad, especially in England, may not as yet be willing to believe. It is, however, well-nigh twenty years since Buckle could say that in Sweden "prevails, not accidentally, but according to custom, an intolerance and a spirit of persecution which would be derogatory to a Catholic country, but which, when they come from a people who profess to found their religion upon the right of investigation, of private judgment, are doubly degrading." But that a conception disparaging to us may still exist there, one can conclude, partly from foreign journals, and partly from the utterances of private strangers, when the religious conditions in the North are touched upon. It was therefore with glad surprise that we a few days since read an article—"Scandinavian Theology"—in the Unitarian journal published in London, the Christian Life, of Dec. 14th; and we hope to show our standpoint to the reader, by giving the beginning and end of the article, which is written by a Unitarian minister, Mr. Ephraim Turand. The writer begins thus:

"For a long time back some of our friends have believed that in the Scandinavian country there was a powerful movement against the stiff Lutheran Orthodoxy, and in a direction akin to Unitarian Christianity. Some of our American brothers, three or four years ago, had received sure intelligence regarding this liberal Christian movement. This intelligence led the author of this article to study the Swedish language. Time passed, and the matter was scarcely heard of further. It was extraordinarily difficult to obtain any Swedish writings of a liberal-minded religious stamp. A number of Unitarians concluded comsequently that the whole thing was a mistake, and thought that, while the conflicting questions of a State Church and religious freedom had undoubtedly flamed up in the North, there was no liberal religious literature there in the sense we attach to the term. Influential newspapers have expressed themselves with contempt about the opinion I alluded to in the beginning of these remarks, and Lutheran clergymen have either underestimated the movement or positively denied its existence. But it is very clear that, if there really is any respectable and solid opposition to Scandinavian theology, this opposition cannot permanently be left without notice. Persistently to close one's eyes to danger, is not calculated to frighten the enemy who is already in sight. It ought to be of great importance to all to know the reality, however disagreeable it may be. To the Unitarian Christian who wishes to cooperate in the work of remodelling Christianity and practically realizing Christ's own ideal, it would certainly be a cause for joy and thankfulness, if it could be shown that adherents of liberal Christianity could be found, not only in England, America, France, Germany, Hungary, and Holland, but also (and this in large numbers) in Sweden, Norway, and Denmark.

"Under these circumstances it was with the liveliest interest that the author, in the Christian Life of the 21st of September, read an extract from a letter by M. Jochumson of Iceland, in which the writer mentioned the Swedish magazine, the Truth Seeker. He finds the articles in that periodical 'brilliant,' says that they are all entirely Unitarian, and informs us that it now has more than six thousand subscribers."

"After some difficulties had been cleared away, and through the kindness of the editor of the Christian Life, copies have been obtained of the five numbers of the second annual set, which have already come out."

Here follow some remarks concerning the appearance of the periodical, about its editors, the favorable opinions of the press, and its circulation in Norway, Denmark, and Finland, as well as in Sweden, which is possible through the similarity of the Scandinavian languages. †

The writer now passes over to a review of the contents of the above-named issues, in which he dwells long on his chief article: "The Religion of Christ and the Christian Religion." In passing, Mr. Turland makes a little friendly remark against the strong expressions Magnus Eriksson in sheer indignation sometimes uses in the name of violated truth; but for the rest, he sets forth the worthy investigator's merits with evident satisfaction. After this review, Mr. Turland writes the following words, with which he concludes his article:—

"We venture to maintain our conviction that this reformatory movement among the Scandinavian people is of the greatest significance. It deserves to be followed with sympathetic attention by all liberal Christians in this country. Its literature—the reader can judge in some measure from the extract given above—will certainly recompense each and all who take close cognizance of it. There is always danger that such movements, in their youthful zeal, will run into extremes. But in the new Scandinavian reform, so much culture and wise moderation, earnestness and religious fervor, are revealed that we can believe and hope that it will keep within the bounds which, according to the testimony of experience, define the only sure road between extreme fanaticism and extreme unbelief. The reform movement, of which the Truth-Seeker is a worthy advocate in literature, has for its object to work for a purer faith, to restore the simple, undisguised teachings of Christ. So far, so good. The British Unitarians will with warm congratulations attend our Scandinavian friends in their arduous but noble work."

"JESUS AND THE WINE-CUP."

Mr. Ingersoll Lockwood, of New York, has lately attacked the Bible as the "stronghold of moderate drinkers."

Rev. Wm. H. Boole, of Norwalk, Conn., was one of the clergymen who attempted to break the force of Mr. Lockwood's arguments. In the latter's reply to Mr. Boole's review, "Jesus and the Wine-cup" are thus discussed:—

"Of all the names in the world which any consequential thinker would, we think, hesitate to connect with the inculcation of the principles of total abstinence, that of the young Hebrew prophet is the last. For him the wine-cup had no terror. Not only spake he no word of condemnation at the scene of revelry which met his gaze at Cana, but he saw no wrong in pledging out the mirth and jollity to its fullest length by filling their drained goblets with a delicious draught. But more than this, in his discourses, in his teachings, he thought wine, he talked wine, just as in his daily intercourse with the people he drank wine, and called down upon himself the murmurings of the unsympathetic crowd which afterwards bayed for his life-blood! (Vide Luke vii., 34, and elsewhere.) Had Brother Boole and I, with our unyielding total-abstinence principles, been Israelites of that day, a sneer of contempt would have overspread his thoughtful face as, with an impatient wave of the hand, the young Hebrew master dismissed our

*This assertion is based on some easily explained misunderstanding. The number of subscribers does not as yet rise above two thousand; but probably the magazine may have double as many readers.

†That E. P. Arnoldson is alleged to be the translator of "Parker" seems to have been caused by a compounding of names. For the Swedish edition of Theodor Parker's writings we have to thank the publisher, Dr. Eneas Edqvist. The work of translation was done by Baron Victor Pfeiff and Dr. A. F. Akerberg.

‡The writer speaks of sixteen newspapers and periodicals that have recommended the Truth-Seeker. He will probably hear with pleasure that this number has since gone up to seventy.

plea for totalism with: 'Oh, poor, anxious hearts, what is this that ye urge? Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.'

"I have said he talked wine. It would not be too strong to say that the mysterious ferment came ever and anon bubbling up in the metaphor of his parables and illustrations. 'And behold a certain householder planted a vineyard and hedged it round about and digged a wine-press in it.' (Matthew xxi., 33.) Again, a striking image of the power of the new wine to rend the leathern bottles by the gathering of its alcoholic strength is found in Matthew ix., 17: 'What foolish man would put new wine into old bottles? Doth he not know that the strength of the new wine would rend the bottles, and the wine be lost?' Again, in the most beautiful of his parables, 'The Good Samaritan,' see how well he knows the healing properties of a ferment. You're lost this time, Brother Boole; there can be no question of a 'fruit syrup' here. Spirit alone can cut the oil and produce a liniment. So then into the wounds of the assaulted traveller, the good Samaritan pours 'oil and wine.' (Luke x., 34.) Again, he rebukes the fault-finders: 'Behold John came neither drinking wine nor strong drink, and yet ye were not satisfied, and said that he had a devil; and now I came eating and drinking with the people, and ye call me a glutton and a wine-bibber.' (Matthew xi., 19.) Again, in Luke xii., 45, is a remarkable passage,—one that shadows forth in distinct outline the intelligent connoisseur who drinks only wine that has become softened by age, that has lost its rasy nature and earthly flavor; he will not touch the new wine. For him, the cup-bearer must set forth an old vintage that exhales a perfume as it glides into the goblet, or, as the young Jewish master puts it, 'No man having drunk old wine straightway desireth new; for he saith the old is better.'

"But let it not be said that Jesus never had in mind the fact that this mysterious ferment could, if used to excess, leave a curse instead of a blessing. St. Luke xii., 45, proves that he well knew how 'at the last' it could become a mocker. What, then, must be our conclusion? If we be honest, truth-loving, and logical men, what can be our conclusion, save that the Jewish teacher, whose heart beat so warm for poor, suffering humanity, who was so slow to accuse and so quick to excuse, saw no harm in the wine-cup when good judgment filled it and moderation bore it to the mouth! In all earnestness and kindness I ask, then, may he preside at meetings where men strike hands and join hearts against the 'curse of the vine'?"

"In Persia, where drunkenness has increased with the influx of Christian traders and missionaries, the finger of scorn and reproach is levelled at the intoxicated Mussulman, with the words: 'He has left Mohammed and gone over to Jesus!' In those oriental lands, missionaries have even found it necessary to give over entirely the observance of the Lord's Supper, that the charge of corrupting the people might not be brought against them."

BOOK NOTICE.

FROM THE CRADLE TO THE SCHOOL; OR, THE ART OF TRAINING CHILDREN. By Mrs. Bertha Meyer.

This is the title of an excellent little book on home education, written by a German lady and translated by Dr. M. L. Holbrook.

It gives me great pleasure to recommend this book to our liberal friends, as it breathes the beautiful spirit of enlightenment and broad culture which the art of education seldom receives. To bring science, philosophy, and common-sense to bear upon the simplest questions of Kindergarten education and child nurture is such a rare thing in our country that we take great delight in recommending this book to all earnest and thoughtful parents.

Education is a science and an art; but, alas, it is not yet so considered. Impulses, whims, instinct, notions, stand in the place of thoughtful consideration. How to unfold, how to rear and develop, the tender plants of humanity intrusted to the mother's care, is a problem which only the searching eye of a true woman and true mother could solve.

Mrs. Meyer has done it; she speaks from experience and observation, to which she adds a thorough culture, extensive reading, and familiarity with the newest systems of education.

The realization of our ideals and reforms belongs to the future; they depend on the mental and physical improvement of our children. The impressions the child receives in the first years of its existence, the care and attention we bestow upon its growing body and developing faculties, make the future man or woman.

There are good books on the education of children that go to school, and of adults; but the training of the new-born babe is scarcely thought worthy of attention. The first years of the child's life pass by unheeded, and the germs of physical, mental, and moral deterioration are recklessly sown. The thoughtless parent is not aware of the crime he commits in exposing his darling to the dangers and ills which await those whose early training is neglected or falsely directed.

Jean Paul says, in his Lebens: "The first three years of life are the academic triennium, after which the gate of the soul, language, is first opened. A right training within these three years would render an after period of unlearning, or the corrections of errors, unnecessary."

Mrs. Bertha Meyer gives a detailed exposition how the little baby has to be treated and nursed from the first moment of its entrance into the outer world, and what cares mothers must take before that time. The chapters on Mental and Moral Culture are as beautiful as they are instructive; they show how the conscience can be educated by simple precepts, and how the moral nature of the child becomes developed and firm without theological training. The general remarks are stimulating, and no one will lay the book aside without being enriched in thought, and without feeling anew the sacredness of motherhood.

Just at present, when the duty of devotion, the virtue and sacredness of home life, find so little expression in the writings of liberals, such a book is thrice welcome, and ought to find a ready ear with those who believe in the purity of home life.

Pure homes and a rational education are the foundation of a nation's greatness and success. Without them all reform work is null and void.

CLARA NEYMANN.

FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE OF BOSTON.

The regular meeting for March was held at No. 4 Park Street, Sunday, March 16, at 3 P.M. A brief record of the previous meeting was followed by a German song, after which an essay was read by Mr. F. E. Abbot on the question, "What is Truth?" A statement was made of the three chief meanings of the word truth; namely, the truth of things, the truth of thought, and the truth of knowledge, or the agreement of thought with things; also of experience and logic combined as the test of truth. Hamilton's definitions of knowledge, belief, and opinion were quoted, and the paper closed with a recognition of the value and grandeur of absolute truth, in whose search and attainment the human soul must ever find its highest glory and joy. Mr. Abbot then read a fine poem entitled "The Nuptials: or the Marriage of Truth and Beauty."

While the audience were collecting their thoughts for the pending discussion, the singer launched again upon the waiting air the snatches of melody, this time applied to Longfellow's "Day is Done."

A momentary pause followed the president's invitation to the listeners to take their turn at being heard; but the tongues, whose opening efforts were moderate and brief, soon waxed eager and rapid, and the jealous clock counted off its too frequent half-hours in spiteful disregard of the jolly tournament of sentiment and brain. There were conservative opposers enough to make it ploy; yet the talk was waged in the kindest spirit on both sides,—accusations and explanations, demand and retort, all having the sugar-coat of courtesy, and above all the fresh glow of genuine sincerity. The next meeting of this society will occur on the third Sunday of April, and the essayist will be duly announced.

J. P. T.

A QUESTION FOR MATERIALISTS.

No question so frequently arises in the thinking mind as that which relates to the "Cause" of life. It may be that this is one of the everlasting mysteries,—that man can never know anything more of this great secret of Nature than he did when he first felt its presence far back in the twilight of human consciousness. Without even presuming to say that there is any conceivable "Cause" behind the phenomena of life, I will offer one objection to what I understand as the materialistic theory of evolution.

The materialist argues vigorously against the possibility of the smallest conceivable amount of something being created from the greatest conceivable quantity of nothing. This axiom of materialism I accept, and ask the followers of this school of philosophy to harmonize it with their own theory of life.

The elements of matter from which materialists claim all forms of life have been evolved are unconscious of their existence,—know neither thought nor design. Some degrees of life have consciousness, realize their identity, think, design, and execute. If unconscious matter has produced life, then it has evolved something more than itself,—something that was not in itself; which if not supernatural is yet supermaterial. Between the stone which a mason dresses for a place in a building and the mind of the designing architect, there is an impassable chasm, to the instinctive thought of the latter, which no "promise and potency" in the blind, unconscious action of the elements composing the former can ever bridge over.

If any disciple of materialism should think this objection of sufficient weight to be considered, I shall be glad to see it answered.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo., Jan. 27, 1879.

LECTURERS WANTED IN KANSAS.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I think it worth while to call the attention of liberal lecturers to the demand for their services in the open field of Kansas. During the past six months we have been visited by two liberals, who lectured here to crowded audiences at fair compensation for their services.

Let Mr. Underwood (or some other good man) come up this way, stopping at Salina, Ellsworth, Wilson, Russell, and other points on the Kansas Pacific Railroad, and he can do splendid service.

An effort is making to get Col. Ingersoll at Salina, in which event his services are to be secured at Ellsworth.

Organization is proposed at Wilson, where there is a large influential class of liberals. This is the need of the hour, as there can be no systematic work without it.

Yours truly,

S. M. WHISTLER, M.D.

WILSON, Kan., Feb. 25, 1879.

"THE SIOUX are not contagious," said an old frontiersman. "What do you mean?" asked a bystander. "I mean that they are hard to catch," was the reply.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
"13 to 25 "	8 "
"26 to 51 "	6 "
"52 to 100 "	5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,
HERBERT S. STREIBER.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorncliffe, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Chadwick, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Hartford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

Proceedings of Eleventh Annual Meeting, 1878. Contains essays by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., on "The Religion of Humanity," and by Wm. H. Spencer, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism,"—why it should be disorganized and how it may be done; addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George William Curtis, Miss Anna C. Garlin, Mrs. Clara Noyman, Manrice Ellinger, and a poem by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakley Smith; eleventh annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc. Price 40 cts.; package of four or more, 25 cts. each.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1869 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorncliffe, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physios and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BOOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 3l. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	1.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	2.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Low or Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUAMPER (HENRI). Discourse on the Method of Mightily conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.00
DURRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising--
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Scenes from the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Adam Bede and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (H. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Free Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	4.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Days.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.25
The Ghosts, etc.....	1.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehat.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.25
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Talks. Mr. Clarendon's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introduction by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEATS (ORPHEUS O.). Versalities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Philosophy of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.50
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Elements of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women--Essay on Liberty--both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltare.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans--Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations, A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hed in the Middle.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Stars, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
ROBERTS (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHULLEN (R.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, M.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress.....	2.50
Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip.....
Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Remond, and Level the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Christmas, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. OKLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragnments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIFFLES (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

221 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $5.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

M. J. SAVAGE'S NEW NOVEL, Bluffton,

Describing in a very interesting way the processes of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical. 12mo. Price $1.50.

Also, by the same author,

The Religion of Evolution:

"An exposition of religion in the light of the most advanced science. A brave and reverent thinker."—London Inquirer. Price $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S DEBATES.

I. Underwood-Marples. Questions: "Are Atheism and Materialism and Modern Socialism illogical and contrary to reason?" "Does the Bible contain evidence above all other books of its divine origin?" 110 pages, cloth. Price, 50 cents.

II. Surveys Underwood. Questions: "Is the Christian Religion as set forth in the New Testament true in fact, and of divine origin?" "Is the Bible erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and of human origin?" 170 pages, paper. Price, 60 cents.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

UNITY.

A FORTNIGHTLY ORGAN OF Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion.

Editor.—H. M. SIMMONS. Publishing Committee.—ROBERT COLLYER, J. L. JONES, C. W. WENDT, J. C. LEARNED, W. C. GANNETT.

Vol. III., beginning March 1, 1879, will contain Robert Collyer's "Table Talk"; two series of articles on "The Liberal Preachers of America out of the Pulpit" (our Poets and Essayists), and "The Growth of Doctrine, or the Old-New Creed"; Unity Sunday-school Lessons, etc.

Price $1.50 a year. Clubs of 10 at $1.25.

Room 57, 75 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
54 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Prof. Clifford,
H. M. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir R. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROBE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 80 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularism.
12. Monogamous Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNHILL, MASS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass..

FOR TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. M. Abbott). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $1.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, five cts. each; 1878, forty cts. each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS

For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Gort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooyman, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Koenen, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the questions in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 178 pages. Price $1.50.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Ennappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 365 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 243 pages. Price $1.25.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 323 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 223 pages. Price $1.25.

THE CREED OF CHRISTENDOM: Its Foundation contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. H. Rastbom Greg, author of the Signs of the Times, etc. Crown 8vo. Complete and unbridled, with index not in other editions. $1.50.

One of the classics of Liberalism.

HISTORY OF CIVILIZATION IN ENGLAND. By Henry Thomas Buckle. New edition. 3 volumes. 12mo. Cloth, $4.50.

"By far the nearest edition published of this world-wide famous work. The complete Index which the publishers have added certainly deserves mention. It is of incalculable value to the student."

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. An Inquiry into the Reality of Divine Revelation. Reprinted from the Sixth English Edition. One large Demy Octavo volume. Cloth, $4.50. Half calf, $5.00. Will be ready March 30.

This Edition is complete, and the only revised and corrected American Edition, with Index. The Boston Edition sells at $13.50, and the English Edition at $15.00, making this edition one-third the price of any other.

"No book published in the world at any time or in any age has had the influence and effect on the thinking part of the community as this work. It has done more to open the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, and sweep away the cobwebs of dogma and superstition than any other book. It no doubt has a strong rival in Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom, but the books are of altogether a different class. Both are far ahead of anything else of the kind published. They are a library in themselves. A study of these two books will give the opponent of dogmatic Christianity a great advantage in discussion. Every point is carefully and minutely investigated, and stripped of any rotten accretions. The most devout and sincere Christian can find nothing but which is manly and respectably argued and free from offensiveness, which is not often the case in books of this nature."—London Times.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WESTERN LECTURES.

MRS. CLARA WETMANN intends to go West, on a lecture tour, in February and March, and would like to make additional engagements to lecture on social and free-religious themes, whether in the English or German language. Please address her for particulars at 97 Maiden Lane, New York.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
...THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. M. Abbott, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PAVILION FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 30, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.—N. M. This tract cannot be furnished at present.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Dion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 10.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1879.

WHOLE NO. 483.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

GLIMPSES.

SADLER'S CATHOLIC DIRECTORY for 1879 reports a total Catholic population in the United States of 6,375,000.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD lectures at Arcadia, Wisconsin, March 26, 27, and 28; and at Escanaba, Michigan, March 29 and 30.

MR. BEECHER declares that "the old Ten Commandments belong to a barbaric state." The same is true of much that he accepts in the New Testament. The world has moved in two thousand years.

LORD BEACONSFIELD has a biting tongue. After a recent division in the House of Lords, he was asked how long he thought the Conservative Government would last. He replied coolly: "As long as it pleases Providence to spare Mr. Gladstone to the country."

IN A LECTURE before the Buffalo Society of Natural Sciences, Professor A. R. Grote recently stated that it was "wrong" to teach the "fairy tale" of a "miraculous creation, out of nothing, of the ancestors of existing plants and animals, since all the facts of science are against it." This drew down upon him the wrath of Rev. Dr. Van Bokkelen and Rev. A. Bigelow, who attacked him in the papers. Professor Grote replied in an admirable letter which we republish on another page of this issue. A Buffalo correspondent, who kindly enclosed copies of the papers in the case, writes: "Professor Grote stands deservedly high as a scientist, and Rev. Dr. Van Bokkelen is pastor of one of the oldest and strongest Episcopal churches here (Trinity)."

THE FOLLOWING resolution has, we believe, been formally adopted by the last general convention of the (Trinitarian) Congregational churches and ministers of Vermont, nor do we see that any objection to it is valid on the part of any believer in creeds: "Resolved, That the general convention of Congregational churches of Vermont understand that to be a pastor of a Congregational church indicates and requires the acceptance of the historic belief of these churches as it has been, from time to time, expressed by their representative assemblies; and that to remain pastor of a Congregational church, and to claim denominational fellowship with our churches and ministers after any substantial part of this historic belief has been repudiated, is considered by us a breach of faith and inconsistent with honor and Christian character."

WALT WHITMAN has this to say touching a recently executed criminal: "This crime seems to be connected in a respect with our state of society. The age has grown to disbelieve in its old religion, but, having nothing else to substitute for it, keeps up the form of belief. This man was a hypocrite; he had no principle, but was outwardly circumspect and proper. It seems to me that our society gives the highest development to everything but honor. Hunter thinks he was right to cheat the insurance companies and to recover his money from Armstrong by murdering him. Take his crime from that standpoint of his own profit, and you can see that we are surrounded by men who think the whole reward of life is measured by prosperity. America is full of intellect and energy and good habits, but, I am afraid, has too little principle."

THE Christian Union said several weeks ago: "We have received a lengthy letter from 'A Deist,' aimed to show that Christianity is not historically true, and that, especially, Christ did not rise from the dead. He has mistaken, again, the position of the Christian Union. Some truths we assume, as, for example, that the world revolves around the sun; our columns are not open to discuss the question. Among these truths is the divine origin and nature of the Christian religion. We are always ready to answer questions, and afford what aid we can in the solution of doubts; but we are not ready to afford an arena for a debate on that point. In our judgment it is no more debatable than the Copernican system in astronomy. The Christian Union was established to teach the truths of the Christian religion, not to discuss the question whether it is true or not." Very well; but how much weight does the Christian Union expect will be attached to its opinion on a point it refuses to discuss?

TESTIMONY such as this from the Scientific American may be quoted with pride by all friends to the elevation of woman's condition: "The question is often asked us: Do the inventions of women ever amount to anything? From our long experience with inventors of both sexes, we conclude that a larger proportion of inventions patented by women prove useful and profitable than those of the sterner sex. We see by the New York Sun that the Metropolitan Elevated Railway Company has selected a device, from the many that have been under consideration, for lessening the noise of the trains, and that it is the invention of a Mrs. Walton of this city. The plan consists of boxing the rails in a mixture of sand, tar, and cotton, and has been under test for two months on several blocks of the road in Sixth Avenue. The ringing of the wheels on the rails, which makes a large part of the objectionable sound, is considerably deadened. She gets, according to the Sun, $10,000 for the use of the invention on the Metropolitan line, and the company is to control its adoption on other roads, paying her a royalty."

ONE OF THE RUSSIAN correspondents of the Cologne Gazette tells the following story illustrative of the relations of priest and people in rural Russia. A young peasant, being about to marry into another village, demands the necessary certificate from his pope. Says the pope,—"Very well, dear child; but I must first settle my little account with you. You leave the village, but this means a loss to me. There would be—for your marriage fee, ten roubles; the average of children seven—seven baptisms, towels, and prayers, six roubles fifty copeks; the average of deaths of children four—four burials, four roubles. You may have to give a daughter in marriage—certificate, one rouble; a son to enter as recruit for the army—well, we won't mind him; but we still come to twenty-one roubles fifty copeks; let us say roundly twenty roubles." The young peasant says, after much consideration: "But, pope, you may die before all this occurs." "Dear child," replies the pope, "it is unfortunately true that we all must die, and therefore we will square accounts for ten roubles." The peasant paid the ten roubles for the certificate, and left the pope, not quite contentedly.

THE Boston Traveller gives some interesting statistics on the Chinese question: "During the past six years the total immigration of all nationalities into this country was one million six hundred thousand three hundred and six, of which there were but ninety-one thousand seven hundred and thirty-three from China, or a little less in proportion than one to seven-hundredths. For the last fiscal year the total number of immigrants from all lands was one hundred and thirty-eight thousand four hundred and sixty-nine, of whom eight thousand nine hundred and ninety-two were from China, or about one to sixteen. It would seem as if fifty millions of people, reinforced at the rate of seventeen from other Christian nations to one from a heathen country, were not likely to succumb to 'the civilization of Confucius,' on compulsion. As to our trade with China, statistics show that our domestic exports for the past year were $20,051,856, which was over fifty-eight and one-half per cent. of all our exports to Asia and Oceania, and nearly three per cent. of all our exports to all countries. Our exports of foreign goods for the same time were $3,027,974. The total value of our imports was $18,128,042, and our total trade foots up $41,207,872."

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Ipswich, Ind.
HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. W. M. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. F. HOLLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBENMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE SEAYER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburg, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.J. A. J. WILCOX. W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT. C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.Executive Committee.

Alabama.....	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....	JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
California.....	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....	DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....	JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida.....	R. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Indiana.....	J. O. MICHENER, Ades.
Iowa.....	JOHN FARNWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kansas.....	S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
Kentucky.....	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Lebanon.....	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maine.....	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Maryland.....	E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston.
Massachusetts.....	KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Michigan.....	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Minnesota.....	B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Missouri.....	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Montana.....	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.....	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.....	O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina.....	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island.....	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....	DR. E. H. PRIOR, Chattanooga.
Texas.....	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.....	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Benning.
Virginia.....	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming.....	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.....	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.....	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
MR. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Setu Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessy; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
JACKSONVILLE, Ill.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jacksonville Liberal League.
ROCHESTER, N. Y.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Emma H. Oale. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester.
CHILMARK, Mass.—President, J. A. J. Wilcox; Secretary, Benj. H. Crandon. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted at the Formation of the National Liberal League of America, Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 27, 1878.

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress, to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

The following names were subscribed to the above resolutions:—

E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. MORRIS HAYS, Rochester, N. Y.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass. E. B. URBINO, West Newton, Mass.
Z. T. WATKINS, Syracuse, N. Y. W. D. HUNT, Scott, N. Y.
NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
GUSTAVUS E. GORDON, Milford, N. Y. LADY, Albany, N. Y.
HARRIS A. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y. J. H. ADAMSON, Passaic City, N. J.
W. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass. RABBI B. OTIS, Boston, Mass.
T. C. GARD, Fayetteville, N. Y. D. G. CRANDON, Chelsea, Mass.
B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass. JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y.
OATHELINE C. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. E. P. STARK, Rochester, N. Y.
BENJ. TURK, Chelsea, Mass. JOSEPH McDONOUGH, Albany, N. Y.
JOHN HILL, Waterlooville, N. Y. E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass.
E. A. SAWTELLE, Boston, Mass. W. H. SCHLESINGER, Albany, N. Y.
THOS. DUGAN, Albany, N. Y. JOHN FARNWORTH, Fort Scott, Mo.
JAMES B. PIER, Rochester, N. Y. O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N. Y.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass. P. HOLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

(FOR THE INDEX.)

"Creation" and "Creator."

BY L. B. FARRAR, M.D.,
OF PAXTON, ILLINOIS.

No being can bring itself into existence.
No being eternally existing can withdraw itself from existence.

Something must exist without beginning.
Is that something infinite or finite?

Is it all or some?

If infinite, nothing else could be brought into being, even by the infinite. If the eternal something is infinite, it must be so in all possible regards. Nothing can be added in entity or attribute, in extent, number, complexity, relation, form, or motion. It must include all collocations, all successions, all antecedents, all consequents, all causes, and all effects, the actual and the potential. The infinite can neither be increased nor diminished, perfected nor completed.

The infinite must not only include universal factors, but also their synthetic product,—the All in one and the One in all. It must be the good and the evil, their antagonism and their reconciliation. Is creation possible, when the eternally existing comprehends all actualities and all possibilities? To say that the something which has always existed is infinite, and then affirm that the something has created somewhat that is not included within itself, or is included within itself, is equally to deny the infiniteness of the something, and to utter nonsense. Or shall we say that the eternal something is finite? Then by what is it limited? Creation is as impossible to the finite as to the infinite. If something is brought into existence by the finite, it must be that which is not included in itself. But all its powers, potential and active, are a part of itself, and their exercise must be confined within itself; and this may eventuate in evolution, but never in creation. If the creation be from the operation of powers not included in the finite, the proposition is contradictory; for by the hypothesis the eternally existing is the finite. Suppose we name the beginningless something God or Deity, and predicate of this God or Deity infiniteness. Can we then say that mind, matter, motion, force, space, and time exist outside of, are different from, and have been created by, the infinite God, without at the same time denying to God the attribute of infiniteness? If the universe did not always exist, but was at some time brought into being by the infinite God, is not the universe so much added to what was before infinite?

The first and specific signification of the word create is, to bring into being, to cause to exist, to form out of nothing.

But this meaning it is impossible to realize in thought, when a rigorous attempt to do so is made; as also its antithesis,—the extinction of any substance that has existed. So says Sir William Hamilton. And to avoid the antagonism of his philosophy with what he holds to be true (namely, the Christian Revelation), he denies this signification to the word create, and says: "It is not the springing of nothing into something. Far from it. It is conceived and is conceivable by us merely as an evolution of a new form of existence out of Deity. All there is now actually of existence in the universe, we conceive as having virtually existed prior to creation in the Creator."

But this definition of create is in violation of the recognized use of the word in Genesis and elsewhere in the Bible, and denies to Deity the power really to create, and confounds the universe with the Deity.

The mind cannot escape the conviction that something has always existed. The affirmation of eternal existence is equivalent to the denial of creation. To say something has forever existed, is to say all things have forever existed; for we have seen that the infinite could not be a creator, from its all-comprehensiveness. It is The All. And the finite could not be a creator, because if something is created it must be that which is different from, and not an evolution of, itself; and this is the same as self-creation, which is absurd.

We are brought to the inevitable conclusion that a creation must be discarded; and if creation, then a Creator: for the latter is merely the counterpart, the correlative, of the former. The notion of creation is the product of unscientific thought. Scientific thought and procedure are the most developed tests of truth. The highest-cultured scientific thought of to-day could not possibly evolve the symbolic conception of creation. It is bequeathed to us from the uncritical past, has been incorporated in our education, and sanctioned by the religion of Christendom. In that religion which claims so persistently but unjustly to have evolved modern material and moral civilization, it is a first and indispensable dogma. But falsehood and absurdity stand not in the way of religious dogma. They are the staple of dogma.

In the second of a series of school readers by William McGuffey, LL.D., entered according to the Act of Congress in 1853, and published by Winthrop B. Smith & Co., of Cincinnati, and having an extensive introduction into the schools of the West, I read: "Six thousand years ago there was no pleasant earth; and then the bright sun was not made. But the great God lived then, and there never was a time when he did not live. When the time came that the Creator was pleased to make this world, he made it all out of nothing."

Such is the falsehood that the Christian Church has taught the people for centuries, and continues to teach. If the fountains of learning are thus poisoned; if lisping childhood has forced upon its attention and acceptance such theological fables for veritable facts, what better can be expected than that superstition and not truth will continue to rule the world? It is almost as difficult for a mature man to be born into the Church as into the world.

The physical sciences are displacing and subverting all definite and defensible forms of religion.

Creation is not an intuition. As a rational postulate it cannot be defended, and it has been abandoned by the physicist and the philosopher. The notion persists, however, in a few, as a surviving religious dogma, whose scientific attainments are respectable but who have inherited a strong religious diathesis, or whose position or calling render the unprejudiced results of recent physical learning difficult of reception. Few are able to perceive all the incompatibilities of the different articles of their creeds, or independent enough to cast away the defenceless conclusions arrived at during early life.

The infinite existent includes the potential and successive, as well as the actual and the present. Form and motion are successive and continuous. Form is more or less of this or that, or of this and that.

Quality is quantity, collocation, or combination. All substance is eternal and perhaps identical. The idea of first cause, in the sense of the partial, is illusive. There is no intelligible meaning of cause other than antecedent or concomitant condition. Cause cannot be a producer out of nothing. All things exist only as they exist in mutual relation and dependence. There is no absolute being that exists out of all relations. The only absolute being is the entirety of being. Substance existing as the basis of attributes, qualities, and modes is a hypothetical entity of no definite conception. Changing states in the Kosmos are but varying relations of its parts. At any given moment, they are what they are because necessitated by those relations.

It seems more agreeable to reason when we assume the eternal existence of anything (and it is impossible not to make the assumption), that it should be all rather than some. The eternal something is all, or it is not. No third term is conceivable, or can be verbally stated. If we say it is some, other assumptions as violent as this are needed to connect the part which is taken to be eternal with that which is not eternal. We are driven to inquire what this is which is eternal and that which is not eternal, and the extent and character of each. And assuming that part only exists without beginning, the rest must have begun to be. Then we are forced to assent to the verbal but self-destructive statement of a creation by the part eternally existing of all that did not so exist.

The authors of the Unseen Universe say: "They assume, as self-evident, the existence of a Deity who is the Creator of all things."

It matters little what name we give to what we assume to be without beginning, providing it commits us to nothing we cannot assent to. But that to the assumption of something eternally existing there is necessarily associated the predicate Creator, is not only not true, so far as my own consciousness is concerned, but I cannot by any mental effort associate them as subject and predicate, with the feeling that there is any cohesion between them.

Create, in the accepted verbal meaning, is not only not self-evident to me, but its negation is self-evident. When I assume eternal existence, I deny creation, by implication, as contradictory. And these authors, like Sir William Hamilton, abandon the idea of a Creator, in the sense that any actual creation has ever taken place. For, speaking of the principle of continuity, they say: "We are led by it not only to regard the invisible universe as having existed before the present one, but the same principle drives us to acknowledge its existence, in some form, as a universe from all eternity. The visible universe—the universe of worlds—is not eternal; while the invisible universe, or that we associate with the ethereal medium, is necessarily eternal. The visible universe must have had its origin in time, no doubt from a nebulous condition. In fine, our hypothesis, in which the material as well as the life of the visible universe is regarded as having been developed from the unseen, in which it had existed from eternity, appears to us to present the only available method of avoiding a break of continuity."

If the material and the life of our world come to us from the unseen universe, as they say, and the unseen universe be eternal, what becomes of their creation and consequently of the Creator? At most, he enjoys only the empty title of this honor. There has never been a corresponding function attaching to it. He is merely a developer of the visible out of the invisible universe, which was not created but existed eternally.

"Two great laws or principles come before us," say they,—"the Conservation of Energy—the conservation of the objective element of the universe—and the law of Biogenesis, in virtue of which the appearance of a living Being in the universe denotes the existence of an antecedent possessing life. We are led from these two great principles to regard as at least the most probable solution, that there is an intelligent Agent operating in the universe, whose function is to develop energy; and also that there is a similar Agent, whose function is to develop life." And they piously inform us that the third person of the Trinity is the Agent who is distributing and developing the life of the universe, and the second person of the Trinity is engaged in the matter of developing the energy of the universe.

Such is the abortive attempt to supplement science by theology, or to trace any kinship between them. They are as distinct from each other as fact from falsehood. They abide in everlasting antagonism. To call theology in aid of science, is like calling a wild Indian to calculate an eclipse or to construct a telescope. It is invoking the Mumbo-jumbo of the medicine man to determine how life came to be manifested on our globe.

Energy, which is motion or tendency to motion due to position, and its conservation, or transmutability from one mode to another without loss, belong, according to these authors, to the unseen universe. No doubt the complete history of the Kosmos, as also that of any of its parts, must trace, not only the visible backward and forward from the visible to the invisible, but likewise its changes while in the invisible state. If anything exists, it is impossible that it should exist without law. Its mode of being and acting is law. The absolute non-action of any being, elemental, inorganic, or organized, is not recognized in science. Motion is not conceived as impressed upon matter from without, but is involved in its nature. Eternal being must exist and act by eternal law. Its modes are coeternal with itself. Life is one of its modes, and these authors assert it never absolutely began to be. Consequently it was never created.

Then we have a Creator who, according to the confession of scientific Christians, turns out to be no Creator, but like a man; yet in vastly superior degree, and in ways beyond our present knowledge. Their Creator is merely a manipulator of things and forces he finds ready to hand. He does not originate energy, for it is eternal. Nor is he needed to conserve it, for what had no beginning can have no end. Like a human being, the Creator at most is only a director of energy and life.

The skilful mechanic may direct the moving force of water or steam so that it shall run a factory, a railway train, or grinding-stones, and thereby develop varied products. The nursery-man transplants his bulbs from one place to another, and, by directing the food of his plants and their fertilization (anterior and transmutative energy), may vary the species. In all this he imitates God, who is only a superintendent of energy and a planter of germs of life from the unseen universe to the seen. Having, by deliberate consideration of the evidence of the case, abrogated the function of their Creator which at first they had conferred upon him, they have done for him what they aver he is constantly doing,—developed him into an anthropomorphic God, inadequate to account for the origin of things, and not much better than the common article manufactured wholly out of the phantasies of theology, humorously called a science! Or, as the priest Jean Meslier calls it, "Ignorance of natural causes reduced to a system; a long tissue of chimeras and contradictions."

And perhaps this half-scientific, half-theological Creator can as well be dispensed with without detriment as the prior and more legitimate one. They constantly appeal to the Christian Scriptures to bridge over the gaps in, or to sanction, their theory, thus taking upon themselves the impossible task of proving these Scriptures contain any more reliable information upon the subject than the sacred writings of Egypt, India, or Greece, or even of a last year's almanac; or else with pious effrontery, characteristic of all forms of religion, ask their readers to take them for granted, with their interpretation. But the old title which was conferred in ignorance on an imagined Creator, and had a verbal meaning in function, is retained after a better knowledge has abolished the function, and even rendered its conception impossible. The most they make of their Creator, the intelligent Agent residing in the universe, is that he is immanent in matter, perhaps arranging the collocations of its atoms and molecules from which result the wonderful phenomena of the Kosmos, and laying up molecules into the various orders of crystals, vegetables, and animals, and quite as likely also, the distinguished ranks of superior intelligences which it is very gratifying to the childish and poetic imagination to picture as peopling space and riding on sunbeams. But man himself may fulfil a part of these conditions, and thereby compel—by means of that energy and life which the Creator is not master of against the puny efforts of man, but which oblige him as they oblige us—the Agent to do his part in the way man shall choose, even to the degradation and reversal of that which is his peculiar function, the development of the lower into the higher. For invariable antecedents are followed by invariable consequents, and man may supply the antecedents.

But the physicist dispenses with the services of the Creator, this intelligent Agent residing in the universe, and avers that "Nature," that is, the universe with the scientific and theologic God eliminated, "is seen to do all things herself, without the help of the gods"; avers that crystallization and organization are brought about necessarily by the modes of action of matter which are as eternal as matter itself. Says Professor Tyndall: "Incipient life, as it were, manifests itself throughout the whole of what we call inorganic Nature. The particles of matter of which crystals are built up are self-positing, being fixed in their places by their polar or molecular forces. The molecules composing a grain of corn are self-positing by the forces with which they act upon each other. In the eyes of science, an animal is just as much the product of molecular force as is the stock of corn or the crystal of salt." And again: "Vapor coalesces to stars of snow. These crystals are matter. A formative power has obviously here come into play, which did not manifest itself in either the liquid or the vapor. Was not the power potential in both of them, requiring only the proper conditions of temperature to bring it into action? If the hypothesis should be espoused that an imponderable formative soul unites itself with the substance after it escapes from the liquid, I should ask, At what moment did the soul come in? Did it enter at once, or by degrees; perfect from the first, or growing and perfecting itself contemporaneously with its own handwork? Is it located or diffused? Does it move about as a lonely builder, putting the bits of solid water in their places as soon as the proper temperature has set in? or is it distributed through the entire mass of the crystal? If the latter, then the soul has the shape of the crystal; if the former, then what is the soul's shape? Has it eyes or arms? If not, I would ask it to be made clear to me how a thing without these appliances can act so perfectly the part of a builder! What were the condition and residence of the soul before it joined the crystal? What becomes of it when the crystal is dissolved?" The same questions are pertinent in regard to the separate entity of the human soul from the human body.

Modern scientific thought has rendered the concept of creation impossible to be entertained. It is a disturbing and not a harmonizing element. If we say the material and mental universe is the product of a creative act, we are forced to postulate eternal existence in some imaginary thing outside the universe called its Creator. And what has thereby been gained to philosophy? The questions that arise about the eternity of the Kosmos are pushed back to its Creator. Does the mind better comprehend the problem of existence and change by regarding the Kosmos as a skilfully contrived machine, with the most wonderful adaptations among its parts for varied work, but as dead and motionless as a cotton-factory before the moving force is let on the great wheel, the builder and repairer, the engineer and the driving power, residing outside the machine? Or if we say the builder and energy of the machine are immanent therein, yet they are held to be no part of the machine and must be distinguished from it.

And what is the great objection, philosophically, to posit the eternity of the Kosmos? We have seen that the notion of a creation is not self-evident, nor can it be proven, neither is it probable; but it stands opposed to the law of continuity and to the law of evolution; and that it is impossible not to postulate the eternity of something, and the something must be either infinite or finite, and that it must be infinite; and, finally, that creation is equally impossible to the infinite and to the finite, and that it is a restraint upon the progress of science and philosophy, intruding itself as a finality wherever man's ignorance shuts down upon his vision, lulling to sleep and not rousing to thought. It is a native of the abyss of darkness, not of the light.

But the chief reason urged against the assumption of the eternity of the sum of things is not philosophical, but theological. It is true theology could hardly survive in any tenable or respectable condition with the foundation removed. But it is already so shattered and riddled that most of her occupants have moved out except wise owls and simple doves.

But, after all, it is not certain that much shock would be felt or damage sustained to religion by having its foundations in theology removed. For religion is one of those queer structures that stand as well, perhaps even better, without than upon a foundation. It is built from the ridge downwards. Its frame is desires and fears; its finish, poetry and song. And grave doctors carry about this airy castle, setting it down here and there, sometimes on the revelation of a book; and when this is proved to be a fiction, then with great wisdom and saintly piety they set it down on the intuitions of God and immortality and transcendental ideas. But Mill and Lewes and Spencer, and many others, come along and show that axioms and a priori notions are all products of the invariable experiences of the race, fixed in organization with individual increment, and passed along the line by inheritance; that all human knowledge is experiential; and if there be a God, he is the Unknown and the Unknowable. (Knowledge of the Unknown and the Unknowable,—this is theology!) And as for immortality, there is but a poor outlook for it, if man is a developed animal, and may trace his ancestry back through the Anthropoid apes, the Amphioxius, the Ascidian, to the homogeneous bit of Protoplasm, and then lose himself in diffused and general physics. It will require more than doctors of divinity to rescue him from this awful plunge, and fix him on the pedestal of personal immortality. Man has emerged from oblivion; and however painful may be the thought, there seems at this present time no valid evidence but that he must return thither. Our personal consciousness was lost a few years back in some unconscious mode or function of the Infinite Unknown. It is difficult to conceive how an immortal state can begin to be, unless the clairvoyant philosopher, Andrew Jackson Davis, has solved the problem. He says that the peculiar function of the human body is to secrete or deposit within itself its perfect fac simile, a spiritual body composed of all the different kinds of elements of Nature, held together by attractions superior to those that hold together or dissolve any other compounds. By this means a spiritual body is organized and its permanence secured, and death is the emergence of this spiritual and immortal body from the gross material body.

Perhaps all is not lost, though the Creator be. There are stronger evidences that man, with his intellect, emotions, and will, has come up out of what was not man, through natural agencies, than that he was created at first as we now find him, or that he was superior to what he now is. If our desires furnish evidence that the means of their gratification are probable, and reasonably within our reach, it is because they have been developed through their fruition in our ancestors, and passed to us through inheritance. But our ancestors had no experience of survival after death, and therefore did not know that the Christian God and individual immortality are veritable facts. The yearning for the perpetuity of self, though it were universal (but it is not), cannot be interpreted as the mute prophecy of its fulfilment; as an intuitive, God-given idea, and intimation of his purpose to realize it to man. All such notions are most thoroughly exploded,—I mean from the domain of evidence and reason.

Prophets, whether within or without, and the rest of supernaturalism, have gone down in naturalism, and the incoming tide of evolution has swept over and submerged their basement of superstitions, founded as it was in the uncriticized experiences of man as he emerged from the brute animal to the rational animal. But church councils and synods take little notice of what is going on below the clouds. Why should they? They are occupied, not with provable facts, but with provable fiction. Religion is not much hurt by conflicting facts. It is all the same whether it admits the facts or denies them. Christianity marches on, as does Mohammedanism and Buddhism and its other kindred delusions, addressing itself to man's wishes and fears, and multiplying his intellect, unless the intellect subverts his superstition. In the language of Luther, it says: "Let natural science alone. It is enough that thou knowest that fire is hot, water cold and moist,—knowest how thou oughtest to treat thy field, thy cow, thy horse and child; that is enough natural science for thee. Think how thou mayest learn Christ. Thus wilt thou find out God and thyself, which no natural master or natural science ever taught. Faith is stronger than heaven and earth and all creatures: it turns stones into water, and brings water out of fire."

It emphasizes the importance of faith without evidence of the existence of its object, and ignores truth manifested by evidence.

The vast prerogatives of the Pope are said by Hallam to have been built upon what are called the False Decretals. But after these were proven and acknowledged by the Catholic clergy to be base fabrications, the superstructure that was raised upon them stood just as securely.

By many, chiefly through early education and deference to what is called revealed religion, there is felt to be a philosophical difficulty in dispensing with a Creator for the universe of matter, mind, and force. And the difficulty is generally embodied in the feeling that so many evidences of design should exist without a designer, and that there should be law, physical and moral, without a law-giver; that so vast and complicated a concern as the universe should exist eternally and without an architect. They ask triumphantly, "Is your watch a self-existent thing, or had it a contriver and manufacturer? And if so simple a thing as a watch needs a builder, how much more the universe." The real gist of the objection is that what is so immense and complicated as the Kosmos could not eternally exist, but must needs have an architect. But when we have thus comfortably satisfied ourselves that the universe is not and cannot be eternal, but is the product of the power and skill of an artificer and Creator, the same questions as to the eternity of the universe arise to plague us about the eternity of its Creator, and even more and more difficult to answer. For must not the Creator be still greater and a more wonderful Being than the universe which he has brought forth out of nothing? Is not the watch-maker a more complex and wonderful thing than the watch? The design notion underlies all dissertations on natural theology. Butler, Paley, Fergus, and the authors of the Bridge-water Treatises, have developed this idea. But their mode of reasoning—"The simplest forms of mechanism with which man is acquainted not being self-existent, therefore, for a stronger reason the most complicated, as the universe, cannot be self-existent"—is not carried out by them to its legitimate consequences. For, on this principle, how can the Creator be self-existent, who must greatly transcend the universe? The conception and evidence of the principle of continuity and of evolution have quite removed all philosophical necessity for the work of a Creator and Designer. Indeed, the former are irreconcilable with the latter. And it is not likely that any one will write "On the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness of God, as Manifested in the Creation," who has studied Darwin, Huxley, and Haeckel.

We are told that Deity is omnipresent. How can a being be everywhere without being everything? If God is everywhere, what need is there for anything further? Must he not be instrument as well as operator? Is it possible to know everything without being everything that knows? Are space and time products of creative act? I never asked a person this question who thought they were. But these, at least, are conditions; and can we avoid assenting to the averment that all beings and all gods are conditioned by these uncreated conditions? No worlds of matter could have been created, had there not been already the conditions of place and time for them to be in and to move in. Can we conceive, or does any one believe, that matter can move from place to place without the lapse of time? If the Creator ordained that the earth should revolve around the sun, and fixed its period, were not these conditioned by the before and uncreated conditions of time and space, to which the Creator, no less than man, must conform all the motions he originates and directs? Then there are two conditions, time and space, confessedly uncreated and eternal, and which yet are not the Creator, and yet condition him as well as us. Can God be infinite and not be these? Can it be thought that the axiom, "the shortest distance between two points is a straight line," depends on divine enactment? Does not this follow necessarily from the properties of space?

"Arithmetic, the science of discrete quantity, creates its numbers; and geometry, the science of continuous quantity, creates its figures; and both operate upon these their objects in absolute independence of all external actuality. The two mathematical sciences are dependent only on the two notions of time and space, notions under which alone matter can be conceived as possible; for all matter supposes space, and all matter is moved in space and time. If matter had no existence, mathematics would be true." As space and time are uncreated, so are mathematics. If matter was created and motion given it, the eternally existing properties of space and time must needs have been considered by the Creator, and their behests obeyed by him. The mathematics are the great instruments by the aid of which men have investigated and comprehended the problems of matter and force. By regressive acts the mind goes behind all the mind avers to be created, and the uncreated becomes the master and expounder of the Creator.

Creator and creation are a correlative couple; neither can exist without the other. Each alone, and both in relation, are positively unthinkable (therefore these notions cannot be self-evident), and antagonistic to the symbolic concept of the great whole we call Nature. And in the solution of the problems that arise within the sphere of human experience and thought, they are ignored, and are a brake upon the progress of intelligence. But beyond the limits of knowledge, and beyond the dim light of rational conjecture and guess which knowledge casts outside its boundary, the words linger; but they express nothing intelligible. They are called up to help us conceive how things came to be, and to satisfy our questioning. But they afford no explanation; rather they stand as deniers of thought where we most earnestly desire thought. As man has slowly and painfully penetrated into the arcana of Nature, he has had to oppose at every step the pretensions of these two talismanic words, which are ever ready to present themselves as the reason of things at the border-line where the light of man's knowledge shades off into the darkness of ignorance. We may beguile ourselves with the phantasy that we have in the notion of a Creator an explanation of things. But the word has only a verbal meaning. We can neither conceive of a Being who can bring existence out of no-existence, nor of the process of nothing becoming something. Therefore Creator can be no explanation of things. These two words have always operated to stupefy inquiry. For fifteen hundred years the highest capacitated portion of the race for the investigation of the physical facts of Nature, were kept in reference to Nature in the unadvancing treadmill of what these words had to teach. "Mystery, mystery! As one in an unknown place, in pitchy darkness, puts forth his hands to grasp some object where no object is, so Creator and creation are felt neither by sense, thought, nor emotion.

Creator, by the endearing name of Father, is summoned up from the vasty deep to help us in our extremities. But he can do nothing with matter and force, said to be the products of his wisdom and skill. A grain's weight and a mountain are alike beyond his power, or beyond his kindly will. The silent dew gathers on the flower, the cold sweat upon the face of the dying, and the remorseless ocean-wave marches on to engulf two hundred and fifty thousand human beings, alike in accordance with uncreated law, and alike indifferent to Creator and created.

In the reconciliation to the inevitable that is possible and that comes to all with few exceptions, as its advancing shadow falls upon us,—a reconciliation that sometimes passes the bounds of complacent indifference and becomes the great joy that the anticipation of great gain brings with it,—we have been taught to recognize a Creator's and a Father's kindly will and office. But this joy depends upon expectation, and bears a direct relation to its strength and the absence of any conflicting emotion, as of doubt; and none whatever as to whether the expectation is founded in truth. A false speculative or historical opinion adapted to affect strongly the emotions is just as influential upon feeling and conduct as if the opinion had its basis in fact; and the strength of its influence is directly as the thing is desired and believed in. Our emotions may be likened to a complex and unstable compound; many and varied causes may precipitate them. And these are often so subtle as to elude our search after their antecedents. Then fancy starts off without rein or tether, its only guide being what is pleasing and is thought to be advantageous to us. But in the joy and under the circumstances alluded to, the discriminating mind, not under hallucination and that does not suffer the feelings to usurp the office of the intellect and determine what is objectively true, no such cause as the interference of Creator or God will be recognized.

